For a single moment Sam felt soft-hearted and inclined to be merciful. Mr. Choke's piteous expression was more touching than the most eloquent appeal. But the recollection of the man's gratuitously insulting conduct to his wife decided him not to falter in his purpose. He therefore said quietly:

"Very well, I will speak to your master."

Mr. Choke gave a kind of gasp, and proceeded to unlock the door with a latch-key. He probably intended, in the security of his own house, to reveal his identity and to get rid of Sam before Mrs. Choke came down. But, unluckily, they had no sooner entered the hall than a severe-looking elderly lady appeared at the top of the staircase. The instant she perceived Mr. Choke she threw up her hands and exclaimed:

"Good heavens, Martin! What is the meaning of this?"

"Pardon me for intruding, madam," said Sam politely, "but I have a complaint to make against your man. He has been hiding in my house for the last two hours, and I am sure you will consider his conduct no less reprehensible than I do. I don't wish to insinuate that he had any felonious intentions, but I fear he came after my maid-servant, and I particularly object to love making on my premises."

As Mrs. Choke seemed transfixed with horror, Sam took the opportunity to retire, deeming that he had said enough to leave the Honorable Martin in a considerable fix. He therefore placed his card on the hall table and disappeared.

MY STRANGE PATIENT.

Some friends of mine who had been spending the summer at one of the most fashionable watering places in the United States, had come back with a strange story about an invalid whom they recommended to me as an interesting patient.

As I listened to their description, which my faith in their veracity compelled me to believe, I said to myself that the case was one of those exceptionally strange ones that defy the wisdom of the physicians, and whose hidden causes are never revealed, so far as the eyes of this world are concerned.

Nevertheless I made up my mind that when circumstances were favorable, I would run down and take a look at Lucy Lot—that was the invalid's name. It was the middle of a severe winter before I was able to do so; the circumstances that gave me the opportunity arising from the fact that one of my most intimate friends—a literary man who loved seclusion at his labors—was spending the winter at his own cottage, at the watering-place in question, and, being suddenly taken ill, had telegraphed for me. I calculated to go one day and return the next. I found my friend suffering only from a heavy cold, which the morbidness induced by his lonely way of life had magnified out of all proportion to what it was in reality. Having done the best I could for him, I resisted his invitation to stay, and succeeded with great difficulty in hiring a horse and buggy, with a boy to drive them, from one of the adjacent hotels. With these accommodations, I set forth to visit my strange patient at Thorncliff.

Thorncliff was a bleak peak or jutting rock, surmounted by a tumble-down tavern, some ten miles distant from any other human habitation. The tavern was called Thorncliff Tavern, and had been built many years ago in the hope that it would become a favorite resort for excursion parties. That hope had fallen through.

The proprietor, who had almost ruined himself by his enterprise, had now been dead for several years, and as I subsequently learned, had left his widow and daughter—an only child—a sum of money just sufficient for their support. That mother and child were the only occupants of the ruined homestead, and the child, Lucy Lot, was the strange patient, in whom some watering-place gossip had interested me.

The overpowering gloom of that day I shall never forget. The iron sky, the roar of a sea that was freezing against its will, the ice-crusted layer of snow that was crunched beneath my carriage-wheels, the desolateness of the prospect, the fact that no house nor human being was in sight, the noise of the winds as they made havoc over the boundless expanse of shore and sea, and the grinding of the ice-toothed surf into the resisting sands, the deadly cold of the atmosphere, the desolation of soul one experiences when he finds himself among surroundings so bare, and pitiless, and bleak—and the sensations due to such scenes and circumstances as these swept over me, so that I was glad when the horse and buggy stopped before the door of Thorncliff Tavern, and I caught a glimpse through the window of a bright fire within.

I got out of the buggy, but my young friend declined to follow me into the house. He had evidently heard queer stories about Thorncliff and its inmates, and no persuasion of mine could induce him to change his bleak situation for a place by ingle-nook within.

I am persuaded he would rather have perished in the cold than have found life by that haunted fireside. So, promising him not to remain longer than half an hour—for it was already three o'clock in the afternoon, and the road back was none of the safest—I entered Thorncliff Tavern alone.

The brightly-burning fire, which seemed alive, was the only inhabitant of the quaint, old fashioned room in which I found myself. Two windows, made of those small panes of glass our forefathers found as serviceable as the plate of more modern days, looked out upon the sea. Situated as the house was, on the verge of a projecting bluff, the eye surveyed, through these windows, the arc of an immense circle, made up of sea, and sky, and sandy shore.

Riveted to the spot in a dismal trance, in which an oppression at my chest was the prevailing sensation, I must have stood still for some ten minutes, not realizing the warmth and brightness of the grate just behind me, but feeling myself an atom cast up, like a wreck, by the elements that warred without. From this trance I was aroused by a light touch laid upon my arm, and a soft, clear voice, which said:

"There will be dark work over there."

I turned and looked, and started at the apparition that stood beside me.

It was that of a young girl of not more than eighteen. Her face was very white; her lips were full and crimson; her eyes, large, liquid and blue; her undressed hair fell round her shoulders. She was attired in a gown of some coarse dark material, with open hanging sleeves. One hand she laid lightly on my shoulder. The other was pointing over the sea. By the hand resting upon me she had raised herself slightly, so as to bring her lips near my ear. The voice in which she spoke was not a whisper, nor a muttering. It was a soft, clear, low sound. As I turned and looked at her, she pointed again, as though indicating a point of infinite distance, and repeated:

"There will be dark work over there—dark work! dark work!"

She withdrew her eyes from the direction in which her extended hand had pointed, and rested them upon my face, as though to question it for an answer to her language. As I looked in them, I saw the gaze of extreme distance, caused by their having followed the direction of her hand, slowly dying out, and a recognition of near things beginning to take its place.

At this moment another sight no less curious attracted my attention.

The figure of an old and stooping woman suddenly made itself visible at the farther end of the oblong room. As she walked slowly forward toward where I was standing, she seemed unconscious that I was there. Her countenance—the color of old parchment—was furrowed with a million wrinkles. She wore a high cap and short dress, with a muslin kerchief pinned around her bosom. Her hands were busy with some knitting, and on that her eyes were bent. As she advanced, she uttered a low crooning noise, as though her cracked voice were striving to realize some time of her childhood to itself.

As she reached the fire-place, my shadow caught her eyes, and she looked up. The most surprising thing to me was the old woman's absence of surprise. She never paused in her knitting, but, looking me calmly in the face, exclaimed—if so faint a ghost of a voice can be termed an exclamation:

"So you have come at last, sir—come at last!"

"It seems, then, I was expected?" I answered, scarce knowing what answer to make.

"Expected! Oh, yes! you were expected," answered the old woman, riveting her eyes once more on her work. "Blondelle"—indicating with a gesture of her needles the girl beside me—"always knows who's a-comin', and what's a-goin' to take place, when she's this way."

"What way?" I asked, bending an involuntarily protective look on Blondelle, who stood gazing at me with the same sad earnestness.

"Ah! that's where it is, sir," replied the old woman, shaking her head. "I know how it all is, but it's hard to explain it to strangers. Blondelle's been sick with a strange sickness for the past five years, and sometimes I think she'll be the death of me. As you see her now, sir, she's asleep. You might pinch her black and blue all over, and she'd never feel it. When she's awake, and in her proper senses, she could no more stand up or walk across the room than you or I could walk across the sea out yonder. When she is fast asleep, as you see her now, sir, her strength comes back to her, and she can see things I can't see. Seems to me her eyes go into the land of the dead. Long before you came—days and days ago—she said she was going to have a visit from a stranger just like you. And, somehow or other, she seems to connect this storm we're having with something in her past life."

At this moment I heard Blondelle's voice once more. The words that broke from her lips were:

"Yes! Darkness and storm, and danger, and death! Death for me, death for him, death for her"—(pointing to her mother)—"death for all but you!" bringing back her eyes to rest on me.

So saying, she turned her back upon us, and walked slowly and with drooping head to the door.

"Don't put yourself to any trouble, sir," said the mother, as I made a motion to help Blondelle with my arm. "She feels this state going off, and her time for walking coming on. She will just have time to reach her bed. She never fails, sir. But she'll be the death of me, I know."

As the old woman completed her sentence, the soft crash, as of a body falling upon a bed, came to us from the next room.

The mother motioned me away.

"Come to see her to-morrow," she said, "if you will be so kind. I will prepare Blondelle by telling her you have been here. It would be too much of a shock for her to see you now."

"But you say her predictions always come true?" I asked.

"Yes."

"Have you no fear for yourself, then? No fear of something imminent and near, if what she says—storm, and danger, and death—be true?"

The old woman's eyes flashed with a strange light as she lifted them, for the last time, to mine.

"If my punishment is to come, it will come, sir, be the punishment what it may. I am the cause of my child's strange disease. She has been so ever since her father's death—ever since I forbid her marriage with a young sea captain who loved her. If my punishment is to come, it will come, sir, be the form what it may;" and with these words, she bent her face resolutely over her knitting, and looked at me no more.

When I got into the buggy I found the boy blue with cold. We reached the hotel in safety, however, but the next morning, so great was my impatience to be at Thorncliff again, that I set out alone.

The weather had undergone one of those many-mooded changes which are peculiar to the climate of America. The atmosphere was as soft as May, and I might have imagined that the melting snow would uncover flowers.

When within a mile of Thorncliff Tavern I suddenly became a witness to a phenomenon, such as I fervently hope it may never be my lot to behold again.

At a little distance above the sea I observed two masses or clouds rapidly approaching one another. They were on a level. One mass was dark and heavy; the other was luminous. Both moved with equal rapidity. Before I could make clear to my mind what phenomenon was about to occur, they met, and with a discharge like that of infinite artillery, swooped to the ground in a dense lurid column in the shape of an inverted balloon. Without pausing for a moment, this column rolled inward from the sea toward the shore, reaching which, it entered upon an oblique course. I saw rocks, trees, bushes, stones and sand tossed into the air. As the cyclone swept around, a perfect rain of such missiles threatened to hurl destruction upon my path. It was almost impossible to hold in check the terrified horse. I had stepped out of the buggy and was talking to the animal soothingly, when all at once a crashing sound, louder than all the rest, reached my ear, and through the disordered atmosphere, filled with the particles, smoking, like water in the sunbeam, from the ruins in the wake of the cyclone, I saw the roof of Thorncliff Tavern lifted high into the air, with posts, timbers, and planks flying in all directions, and I heard a low, long shriek of anguish such as will never die out of my ears.

Yes Blondell's dim prophecy had proved true, and the hint her mother had given me of her unhappy attachment, helped me to piece her history together for myself.

The whirlwind swept on in its course and died away in the distance and I went down to the shore with a dread of what I should find there.

The ruins of Thorncliff Tavern were heaped upon the beach. Apart, apparently uninjured, but perfectly dead, lay the body of the old woman, her face peaceful, as though undisturbed by any premonition of the sudden death she was to die. Her clinched hands held her knitting-needles.

But another wreck was added to that of the homestead.

At the very edge of the surf lay the ruins of a boat, the bruised and bleeding but lifeless body of a young man beside them. At that moment I had no time to be surprised at the sight of a woman kneeling by him. In the agonized countenance I recognized Blondelle's. As I neared her, she looked up, into my face and smiled, and I perceived a frightful wound upon her breast.

"It is he," she whispered, pointing to the dead sailor. "We shall be happy, now. He has come back to me at last."

And so saying, she lay down beside the eternal sleeper, the lost love of her youth, and sank into the eternal sleep herself.

OUT AND IN.

Philadelphia is probably the most corruptly governed city in the United States, even more so than New York, and fully equal to Chicago.

Political corruptionists have long ruled Philadelphia with a free hand, and although the better element did two or three years ago obtain partial ascendency, the ring politicians appear to be again at the helm of local affairs.

The Water Department in that City was formerly a rich placer for official stealing, much boodle being annually conducted through it from the pockets of taxpayers into those of public thieves.

In 1863 Col. William Ludlow, of the United States Army, was appointed Chief Engineer of the Philadelphia Water Department.

He managed the trust with great fidelity, on strictly business principles, clear of the sooty touch of partisan politics, solely for the public good, and saved to the City Treasury many thousands of dollars.

That did not suit the ringsters of the City Council. Col. Ludlow was not of their stripe.

He was a Democrat.

An honest official.

He made office a sacred obligation.

Out he must go and out he went to make room for a graduate of the "addition, division and silence" school of partisanship.

President Cleveland knew the worth of a man like Col. Ludlow, and at once appointed him Engineer Commissioner of the District of Columbia.

The President honored himself and benefited the country by such action, and besides that, properly rebuked those unprincipled spoilsmen who hesitate not to cast aside proven ability and integrity, and sacrifice the public weal for base personal motives.

The President did right.

New Jersey has a Governor who dares do that which is right and best for the people of the State, in spite of the passage of obnoxious measures by the Legislature. His veto of the Chase bill will meet with the approbation of all lovers of fairness and justice.

The firemen of Plainfield are becoming excited over the provisions of a Bill now before the Legislature, which means to abolish our present system of conducting the Fire Department. We were in hopes to have given the bill in full in this issue, but are unable to do so, as it has not yet been printed.

Gov. Abbett has appointed Deputy Surrogate James H. O'Neill to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death, on last Thursday, of Surrogate William McAvoy, of Hudson county. O'Neill's father was Surrogate of the county for many years, and O'Neill, himself has been chief clerk in the office for fifteen years. He will hold until the Fall, when a new Surrogate is to be chosen.

Engine 149, of the Reading railroad, drawing a west bound passenger train, broke an axle Saturday at Glen Gardner, delaying travel two hours. The road was blockaded from Junction to High Bridge. Eighteen coal and freight trains were strung along the track, making a procession miles in length. Railroad men say it was one of the grandest sights they ever witnessed to see this immense string of trains slowly moving up the mountains.

According to the Newark Press the "last report of the Secretary of State shows that there were under the care of the Chancellor thirteen insolvent savings banks in New Jersey. These include three in Jersey City, two in Newark, two in Elizabeth, two in Hackensack, and one each in Rahway, Gloucester City, Plainfield and Dover. Thirteen insolvent savings banks, and many of them wrecked by the criminality of their managers, tell a sad story, whose sequel is found in the financial colony of the State Prison."

The steamer Oregon was run into by a schooner between 3 and 4 o'clock Sunday morning, while east of Fire Island, having two holes stove into her. She commenced sinking at once. Part of her passengers were transferred to a pilot boat and part to a schooner, and they were all subsequently transferred to the steamer Fulda. There were over 800 passengers and the crew of the Oregon on the Fulda. The Oregon was entirely abandoned. She sank at 1 p. m. The schooner and the crew, it is supposed, were lost within a few minutes after the collision. Among the passengers on the register of the Oregon were the following: John I. Howe, R. A. Kipling and A. W. Kipling, all of Roselle.

Surrogate McAvoy, the acknowledged leader of the Hudson county Democracy, died at his residence in Jersey City last week of pneumonia. Mr. McAvoy was but 34 years of age, but was considered one of the best political organizers in the State. His chief strength was among the young Democrats, whom he led to repeated victories. He has served five years in the surrogacy and was elected last Fall for another year, for which he had not qualified at the time of his death, it not being necessary to do so until next April. Mr. McAvoy was a genial, bright man, and his death will prove a great loss to the Democratic party of Hudson county. It is probable that his successor will be elected in April at the annual charter elections of the county.

NEW BRUNSWICK'S BROKEN BANK.

Nothing new is added to the history of the failure of New Brunswick Savings Bank and the mystery is not yet cleared up. Arthur G. Ogilby, the secretary and treasurer, is still devoid of reason and may become insane or die. It is thought that the depositors will have about 50 per cent. The New Brunswick Savings Institution has had but a small run upon it, and the State Bank is not at all disturbed. The missing assets are principally in bonds and securities and are as follows: Cash, $6,000; New Brunswick water bonds, $21,318 50; Middlesex county bonds, $13,000; Newark city bonds, $8,200; demand loans and collateral, $26,000. At this time $45,000 has been collected by Ogilby's friends.

Close after the death of Gen. Hancock now follows the retirement of Gen. Pope. And thus the army is losing, one after another, the leaders in the great and successful struggles to maintain the Union.

The Senate has passed a bill, No. 184, allowing seines to be drawn in the south branch of the Raritan river. Every piscatorial member of the House ought to set down on that bill when it comes before them.

THE LEGISLATURE.

Thursday of last week, in the Senate, the substitute to the Chase bill passed, after a fiery speech against it by Senator Youngblood, by the following vote:

YEAS—Brinkerhoff, Carter, Chase, Chattel, Cramer, Gardner, Griggs, Herring, Large, McBride, Moon, Pancoast, Thompson—13.

NAYS—Bogert, Fish, Haines, Miller, Nichols, Vanderbilt, Youngblood—7.

ABSENT—Livingston.

The Washington street Bridge question consumed the largest part of Monday evening session of the house. The bill to enable its construction and the bill permitting the city authorities to construct a tunnel at the Gap, instead of the much agitated bridge, were abreast on the calendar for final passage, and there was a desultory kind of a discussion as to which of them should first come up. Mr. Corbin, of Union, who is a warm bridge advocate, was willing to vote for both if the bridge bill could go through first, and Mr. Hudspeth, the father of the bridge bill, made a motion that his bill be first called up. Neither bill is mandatory, and the idea of Mr. Corbin was to give the city authorities permission to make its choice between the two schemes. Finally, however, Mr. Hudspeth withdrew his motion on the understanding that the bridge bill should be called for final passage immediately after the tunnel bill had been disposed of and the tunnel bill was put before the House. On the roll-call it received fifty votes. Eight were against it. They were Messrs. Chamberlain, Corbin, Hudspeth, Hughes, Noonan, Pearson, Tumulty and Vanderburgh. Messrs. Pintard and Lawrence were absent.

The bridge bill was then called up and discussed. It came to a vote at midnight and was defeated by the following vote:

YEAS—Messrs. Armstrong, Benson, Bolton, Chamberlain, Condit, Corbin, Dayton, Doremus, Godfrey, Hyer, Hudspeth, Hughes, Hutchinson, Lawrence, A. F. R. Martin, Noonan, Norwood, Parker, Peal, Pearson, Potter, Seymour, Smith, Throckmorton, Tumulty, Vetterlein, Witts.

NAYS—Messrs. Abbott, Arwaine, Baird, Banks, Beckwith, Budd, Drake, Gangewer, Harrigan, Hildreth, Jewett, Kinney, Lennon, Lister, Low, John Martin, McDonald, Oesterlein, Pelouhet, Roe, Scheele, Schroeder, Taylor, Ten Broeck, Titus, Underhill, Van Buskirk, Vanderbergh, Whitaker, Winton, Wolverton.

Then Mr. Corbin's high license bill again came up on final passage. He explained it by saying it had been changed to a low license bill. It leaves lee-way to different communities to fix the fee very low or moderately high. It makes one uniform law—the maximum fee being $300 for liquor and $100 for beer and light wines, and the minimum for both liquor and beer $25. Mr. Harrigan opposed the bill. It was lost by a vote of twenty-five to thirty-three, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Armstrong, Banks, Bolton, Budd, Chamberlain, Corbin, Doremus, Drake, Gangewer, Hildreth, Jewett, Lawrence, Lister, Martin A. F. R., Norwood, Parker, Potter, Roe, Seymour, Smith, Underhill, Whitaker, Wells, Winton—25.

NAYS—Messrs. Arwaine, Baird, Beckwith, Benson, Condit, Dayton, Godfrey, Harrigan, Heyer, Hudspeth, Hughes, Hutchinson, Kinney, Lennon, Low, Martin John, McDonald, Noonan, Oesterlein, Peal, Pearson, Pelouhet, Scheele, Schroeder, Taylor, Ten Broeck, Throckmorton, Titus, Tumulty, Van Buskirk, Vanderberg, Vetterlein, Wolverton—33. A motion to reconsider was made and lost by a vote of twenty-five to thirty-two.

Mr. Hudspeth changed from the affirmative to the negative to move a reconsideration.

In the House on Tuesday, there was an effort made by Mr. Hudspeth to have the vote on the Washington street Bridge Bill reconsidered. His motion failed by a vote of twenty-one to twenty-six. Mr. Wolverton's bill fixing the legal rate of interest at five per cent., was passed by a vote of thirty-six to nineteen in the House. The House also passed bills as follows; "Allowing Common Councils to fix the terms of office of city clerks at three years; prohibiting the erection of dynamite or gun-powder factories within 1,000 feet of any railroad or public road; requiring manufacturers to pay their employees, always in lawful money, at least once a month, and forbidding the withholding of more than one week's pay in any one month.

In the Senate on Tuesday bill No. 177, giving incorporated fire departments power to increase the annual sums to be raised, whenever the public necessities may require, not exceeding twenty-five per cent. of the total value of all the property of the department was passed.

COURT OF IMPEACHMENT.

In the Senate on Tuesday the court first adopted the rules for its government as adopted by the Senate. The Sergeant-at-Arms upon oath stated that he had served the summons of the Court upon Patrick H. Laverty on March 12th, 1886. Upon the defendant being called Mr. Laverty appeared accompanied by Judge William T. Hoffman, John Linn and Horatio N. Barton as counsel, and asked that they be allowed to act as his counsel and would give his answer to the said articles of impeachment. The court granted the request, Judge Hoffman read the formal answer of the defendant, which claims in detail and in general the charges of the articles of impeachment, and asks for an inquiry into their truth. The managers then asked leave to file a formal replication, which was granted, and stated that as one of their witnesses was in delicate health, they would like to have the trial commence on Tuesday, March 30th. To this Judge Hoffman replied that the defendant was now ready and anxious to meet the charges, and would like to have the trial set down at as early a day as possible. Senator Fish thought that they could try the last charge and await the recovery of the witness. After a few remarks, the court decided the trial should commence on Tuesday, March 23d. The matter of compulsory attendance of witnesses was taken in consideration by the court. Secretary Kelsey, as Clerk of the Court, was given power to appoint an assistant clerk. The court then arose to meet again next Tuesday.

The most surprising development of the session was the passage Wednesday afternoon by the Senate by a vote of 15 to 5, of the bill authorizing the construction of a bridge at the foot of Washington street, Jersey City. The House on Monday night defeated the bill by a vote of 21 to 23. If it had passed then, it was taken for granted that it would be overwhelmingly beaten in the Senate. Almost as soon as the bill had been beaten in the House, Senator Youngblood introduced it into the Senate. It was reported as soon as it had been referred and put through the second reading Tuesday morning. Later in the day on motion of Senator Brinkerhoff, the rules were suspended, and it was put on final passage. Its fate in the House was watched with much interest. Gov. Abbett Wednesday afternoon sent in his veto of Senator Chase's bill to prevent the construction of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad bridge across Staten Island Sound. The bill forbids the construction of the bridge unless the consent of the Legislature be first had to the place on which it is to be constructed. Gov. Abbett objects to the bill on the constitutional grounds that while it purports to be an amendment to the old Bridge act, it is really an amendment to the general railroad law, and that its title is therefore delusive; and on the second constitutional ground that, while it is general, it cannot be made effective without special laws giving legislative permission to each proposed bridge. His principal ground of objection, however, is that it is simply prohibitory. If the bill was designed to regulate the conditions of commerce between two States it might provide a method or standard, in accordance with which any corporation may construct bridges over navigable interstate streams. Instead of regulating, this bill is prohibitory. He urges, too, that the bill will not accomplish its avowed purpose of forcing the Baltimore and Ohio to locate its terminus on the West Shore, for it may yet transfer passengers and freight across the Kills in boats. He denies that it has been the policy of the State to keep railroad terminals on the New Jersey shore front, and instances the legislative indorsement of the Hudson River tunnel scheme, which is designed to take right into the heart of New York City the traffic which is now stopped at the Jersey City and Hoboken river front. The Governor doubts, too, whether the act, instead of destroying the value of New Jersey's water front, would not add to it. The Pennsylvania and other roads are now paying 60 cents per ton for the transportation of their freights to storehouses on the East River side. Competition with the Baltimore and Ohio facilities on Staten Island might force these roads now in New Jersey to erect their storehouses in Jersey City. He urges, too, that the bill destroys the effect of the General Railroad law, which was wrung from the Legislature in 1873 by the force of public sentiment. The Senate ordered 1,000 copies of the message to be printed.

This amount does not include interest.

It is my pleasure also to report that the county has had no temporary loans or floating indebtedness since the third of last November. I desire, also, to compare the financial condition of the county at the present time with the commencement of this fiscal year (May 12, 1885). At that time the

Temporary loans outstanding were	$12,000 00
Floating debt	424 00
Bonds outstanding	389,000 00

Of assets without interest—

Miscellaneous	275 00
Cash	2,015 20
		$28,415 92
Total debt May 12, 1885		$373,008 08

At present we have no temporary loans, or obligations outstanding except—

Bonds outstanding, $372,000 00
Total liabilities		$372,000 00
Of assets without interest—
Due from Rahway	$13,685 66

Reduction from May 12, 1885		$29,927 69

It will be observed that the city of Rahway, at the commencement of this year, owed the county $22,275.12. On this arrearage they have paid the county (which does not include interest paid), $14 410.-86 balance of arrears up to 1885 still due, $7,[illegible] 26.

Their tax levy for 1885 was	$19 821 40
On this they have paid	14,000 00

This probability is another year will show this amount nearly, if not quite, paid.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

P. SHERIDAN, County Collector.

Elizabeth, March 3, 1886.

On motion of Freeholder Chapman the report was received and ordered spread upon the minutes.

FOOD FRAUDS.

The Shameful Use of Lime and Alum in Cheap Baking Powders.

Many food frauds, such as chicory coffee or watered milk, although they are a swindle in a commercial sense, are often tolerated because they do not particularly affect the health of the consumer; but when an article like baking powder, that enters largely into the food of every family, and is relied upon for the healthful preparation of almost every meal, is so made as to carry highly injurious if not rankly poisonous elements into the bread to the eminent danger of the entire community, it is the duty of the press to emphatically denounce the manufacturers whose avarice has prompted them to such diabolical operations.

Among recent important discoveries by the food analysts is that by Prof. Mott, the U. S. Government Chemist, of large amounts of lime in the cheap baking powders. This is, if not the most dangerous, certainly the most useless adulterant yet found in the low grade, inferior baking powders. It is a startling fact that of over one hundred different brands of baking powder so far analyzed, comprising all those sold in this vicinity, not one of them, with the single exception of the Royal Baking Powder, was found free from both lime and alum. The chief service of lime is to add weight. It is true that lime when subjected to heat gives off a certain amount of carbonic acid gas, but a quick lime is left, a caustic so powerful that it is used by tanners to eat the hair from hides of animals, and in dissecting rooms to more quickly rot the flesh from the bones of dead subjects. A small quantity of dry lime upon the tongue, or in the eye, produces painful effects; how much more serious must these effects be upon the delicate membranes of the stomach, intestines, and kidneys, more particularly of infants and children, and especially when the lime is taken into the system day after day and with almost every meal. This is said by physicians to be one of the chief causes of indigestion, dyspepsia, and those painful diseases of the kidneys now so prevalent. Instances of the most serious affections of the latter organs from drinking lime waters found in some sections of the west are noted in every medical journal.

Adulteration with lime is even more to be dreaded than with alum, which has heretofore received the most emphatic condemnation from every food analyst, physician, and chemist, for the reason that, while alum is probably partially dissolved and passed off in gas by the heat of baking, it is impossible to destroy or change the nature of the lime in any degree, so that the entire amount in the baking powder passes, with all its injurious properties, into the stomach. When we state that the chemists have found twelve per cent. or one-eighth of the entire weight of some samples of baking powder analyzed to be lime, the wickedness of the adulteration will be fully apparent.

Pure baking powders are one of the chief aids to the cook in preparing perfect and wholesome food. While those are to be obtained of well established reputation like the Royal of whose purity there has never been and cannot be a question, it is proper to avoid all others.

HALL'S Vegetable Sicilian HAIR RENEWER.

The great popularity of this preparation, after its test of many years, should be an assurance even to the most skeptical, that it is really meritorious. Those who have used HALL'S HAIR RENEWER know that it does all that is claimed.

It causes new growth of hair on bald heads—provided the hair follicles are not dead, which is seldom the case; restores natural color to gray or faded hair; preserves the scalp healthful and clear of dandruff; prevents the hair falling off or changing color; keeps it soft, pliant, lustrous, and causes it to grow long and thick.

HALL'S HAIR RENEWER produces its effects by the healthful influence of its vegetable ingredients, which invigorate and rejuvenate. It is not a dye, and is a delightful article for toilet use. Containing no alcohol, it does not evaporate quickly and dry up the natural oil, leaving the hair harsh and brittle, as do other preparations.

Buckingham's Dye

Colors them brown or black, as desired, and is the best dye, because it is harmless; produces a permanent natural color; and, being a single preparation, is more convenient of application than any other.

WE find the following in an exchange: "In answer to a correspondent we would state that the law says: 'No man has a right to stand upon a sidewalk or street. The only right any person has to a street is the privilege of passage, and he must keep moving. Three persons are an illegal assembly and may be dispersed.'"

THIS Sunday will close the Rev. A. H. Tuttle's pastorate of the M. E. church of Plainfield. We are safe in saying that no pastor that has come and gone in the past will be so missed. THERE are no corrections to be made in the totals of the Borough election returns published by us last week, but we want to call attention to the error in subtracting the results of the votes of the two candidates for the office of Town Clerk. LEVI [illegible], superintendent of the P. & R.'s annex boat office at Communipaw, (who is a resident of North Plainfield), has in his possession probably as unique a piece of mechanism as one is ever able to see in the way of a carved and inscribed walking stick. The work was done by an old man with a common pen-knife and embraces quotations from Scriptures, different kinds of animals, etc., and is indeed a sight worth seeing.

DR. DUPREE, the chiropodist of Newark, asserts that it is not always tight shoes that produce corns. He says that loose, ill-fitting shoes or boots injure the feet far more. The famous operator will visit Plainfield the coming week for five days, as will be seen by referring to the "Want" column on second page.

Breathing through the mouth is a necessity in rapid riding, for the nostrils will not pass air fast enough to the lungs. As nature is not prepared for mouth breathing the throat and lungs are rapidly dried and burned by it, unless the air is very warm and mild. Hendee's effort last Fall, in a raw, windy atmosphere, so inflamed his lungs and throat that for a week after he could not eat bread or dry food. This was the price of a mile in 2.45 4-5.

Weather to Come.

We must expect a good deal of severe cold yet, despite the deceptive interludes of warm, sunny days that suddenly come upon us at irregular intervals. There are chilly, penetrating March winds yet to come that will certainly make us pay penance if we trust to the overhead, and venture out in a sort of "Spring attire." Heavy woolen garments are quite as necessary to wear during the entire months of Spring as during any day in December or January.

A Man Who Coveted Death.

Mr. Joseph Krouse, known throughout the county as "Joe Force," was killed by a locomotive at Linden Thursday evening of last week. He was accompanied by Mr. Andrew Corsa of Milton, who went down to assist him in selling a horse. The bargain being consummated, Mr. Krouse and his friend drove away, crossing the tracks at the station. Seeing a train approaching, "Joe" suddenly turned about, and in a twinkling was speeding his horse towards the track. The locomotive struck the wagon, shattering it, killing the horse, knocking Corsa about one hundred yards, and carrying Krouse's lifeless body along upon the catcher. Krouse delighted to see how near he could drive in front of an approaching train without being struck and many a time he has annoyed the engineers, and caused the hair of spectators to stand on end. He was a reckless driver, and the fate which he has at last met, was long ago confidently predicted by many who knew him.—Leader

Trim Your Trees.

"All trees standing along the public streets of the city, whose branches extend or shall extend over the sidewalks or roadway, shall be trimmed from the main trunk to a height of not less than ten feet from the surface of the ground, so as to prevent injury to the public health, impediment to travel, and obstruction to street lights." So reads one of the city's ordinances, which also provides that "The Street Commissioner shall cause this ordinance to be carried into effect."

THE CONSTITUTIONALIST has repeatedly called the attention of the city authorities to the continued violation of this ordinance in this respect, and now at last a Street Committee has come into power that proposes it shall be enforced. If the owners or occupants of property in front of which are untrimmed trees do not fulfill the requirements set forth above, it will be done by the city and such owners or occupants compelled to pay the cost.

Dr. Harvey D. Burlingham.

After a severe and lingering illness, Dr. Harvey D. Burlingham of this city died at his residence at the corner of Park avenue and Fourth street, about 5:30 o'clock of Wednesday morning. The deceased had been one of the most prominent, popular and prosperous physicians of this city for the past 14 years. He was particularly identified with the organization and success of the Muhlenberg Hospital, and a most esteemed member of his profession and the many societies and social circles to which he belonged. His funeral services will take place to-morrow afternoon at 2:00 o'clock at his late residence, and 2:30 in the First Baptist church. There will be Masonic ceremonies at the grave.

Important News for Ex-Soldiers.

Second Comptroller Maynard has settled a question arising out of an act of April 22, 1872, which directs that every volunteer soldier who enlisted for three years prior to July 22, 1861, under the President's proclamation of May 3, 1861, and the orders of the war department issued in pursuance thereof, and was actually mustered for three years before August 6, 1861, into any regiment, company or battery which was accepted by the war department under such proclamation and orders, and who was honorably discharged shall be paid the full bounty of $100, under and by virtue of the said proclamation and orders of the war department in force at the time of such enlistment and prior to July 22, 1861, provided such bounty has not already been paid. The second comptroller holds that said bounty is payable to the heirs of every deceased soldier who, if living, would be entitled thereto whether he died before or after the passage of the act.

Ember Days.

Ember days occur four times a year, and there are many persons who have great faith in their ruling the weather for the succeeding next three months. Thus the month in which Ember days occur has no significance, but as the state of the weather is on the first Ember day so the weather in general will be during the month following. The second Ember day is to rule the second month following, and the third Ember day is to rule the third month following. Many persons are also anxious to see how high a date, in the month Ember days stand, believing that if they are on a high date, the price of grain will be high, and if they are low in the month, the price of grain will be accordingly low. We copy the foregoing from an exchange. We presume that there is about as much in one superstition as another, and those who believe in signs and wonders may find either comfort or discomfort in the Ember day bug-a-boo. Ember days this month are last Wednesday, to-day and to-morrow.

A Fire Board Meeting, at Last.

After running around in the cold of last Thursday evening, hunting one another up, and trying to get a quorum together, the Board of Managers of the Fire Department held a meeting in Alert hose house. There was present, President Jones and Commissioners Morris, Livingston, Cutter and Knowland. On motion the President and Treasurer, were authorized to give public notice of an election to be held at Laing's Hall, Monday, April 12th, for the purpose of electing two commissioners to fill the vacancies caused by the expiration of the terms of Messrs. Morris and Brower. Also that the Assessor be paid the sum of $125, and the Treasurer receive 2½ per cent of all taxes collected in compensation of his services as Treasurer and as Collector. A committee composed of President Jones and Messrs. Knowland and Brower, was selected to examine and audit the books and accounts of the Treasurer for the past year. A number of bills were ordered paid, and the claim for damages to the peanut stand at the corner of Park avenue and Front street, amounting to twenty-five dollars, was ordered returned as exorbitant. The Board then adjourned.

They'll Never Be Missed.

The rule or ruin demagogues. The brainy person who knows it all. The man who wants big pay with little work. The woman who wears an eclipse hat to the opera. The man who is jealous of his neighbor's success. The man who throws ashes and paper into the street. The practical joker who gets wrathy when the joke is on himself. The men who pile up their riches at the expense of their fellow citizens. The man who habitually borrows his neighbor's paper before the neighbor had used it. The long-nosed individual who busies himself with the affairs of other people. The smart chap who sees everybody's mistakes, but none of his own blunders. The persons who think labor should not combine together the same as capital. The bigot who forms his own opinion and demands that others coincide with him. The business man or merchant who don't believe in advertising. Mr. Growler and Mrs. Grundy, who can't bear to see young people enjoy themselves. The fellows who are howling about home protection, yet buy their goods out of town. The conceited fellows who imagine that matters and things in their neighborhood would stop right short and never go again, when they shuffle off this mortal coil.

A Burglar in Scotch Plains.

Constable Hand of Fanwood Township has noticed, for some days past, a strange man hanging around the neighborhood, with no apparent business, and Mr. John Marsh has found his gates unhooked every morning during the week. The reason of the man's presence is supposed to be solved by the events of Wednesday night, as narrated below, and the opened gates probably evidence the unknown's midnight trips of prospecting about the premises of Scotch Plains' residents.

Some time during Wednesday night, a burglar entered the residence of Mr. C. N. Flanders on Front street, opposite the hotel of Mr. Brittin, and after a careful examination of Mr. Flander's plated-ware, left without taking anything. Mr. C. A. Smith on Park avenue, just around the corner from Mr. Flanders, was not so fortunate. The burglar entered his house by forcing up the front dining-room window, and went up stairs into the bed-room where Mr. Smith was sleeping. This gentleman's clothes hung over a chair by his side, and the midnight prowler lifted chair and all and carried it out in the hall. He then took the clothes down to the foot of the stairs, and by the light of a candle "went through them." Mr. Smith's servant found the clothing in the front hall the next morning, and her employer discovered that $100 in cash, his watch and chain and pocket knife were gone.

The New Organ for the Crescent Church.

At last the Crescent avenue church is to have the new organ for which so many of its congregation have long sighed. The trustees have just closed a contract with the celebrated builders, Messrs. J. H. & C. S. Odell, of New York, for the construction of an organ to cost $5,100, to be completed by about July 1st. Without any unnecessary ornamentation it will be adequate in power and variety of tone for all the requirements of the church services. The scheme includes:

Eleven stops in the great organ, fifty-eight pipes each.

Thirteen stops in the swell organ, fifty-eight pipes each.

Three stops in the pedal organ, thirty pipes each.

It will occupy the position of the present organ, and will be encased in black walnut to correspond with the interior of the church. The organist will be Mr. H. W. H. Lindsley—Mr. Al. Everitt, the present organist, having tendered his resignation to take effect May 1st. While occupying such position in the past, Mr. Lindsley was universally esteemed, and his return will undoubtedly be satisfactory to all concerned.

Analysis of Lake Hopatcong Water.

By request of a number of parties interested Dr. W. K. Newton, of Paterson, visited Lake Hopatcong on Friday of last week to investigate the cause of the death of the fish in that lake. When he went away he carried with him two samples of the water for analysis and he now reports that the analysis has proceeded far enough to warrant him in expressing an opinion. A sample taken from a brook which runs into the lake, and into which was discharged the water from the powder works, was very strongly acid—the acidity being equal to over 52 grains of sulphuric acid in the gallon. A sample taken from the bottom of the lake, about one a half miles from the works, was also strongly acid—the acidity being equal to nearly twenty grains of sulphuric acid in the gallon. Fish placed in the first sample died in from six to eleven minutes, and those placed in the second sample lived only about twenty minutes. Dr. Newton thinks these results will warrant the opinion that the acid water discharged into the lake by the powder works is the cause of the mortality among the fish this winter. A fuller report of this investigation will be sent to the State Board of Health in a few days.—Era.

Odd Fellows.

The annual convention of the Odd Fellows of District No. 10, embracing all the lodges in Rahway, Plainfield, Somerville, Perth Amboy and Elizabeth was held last Monday evening in the rooms of Franklin Lodge at Washington Hall, Union Square, Elizabeth, and was a notable gathering comprising about two hundred representatives. Among the Grand Officers were Grand Master Geo. W. Hammill, Jr., of Trenton, Grand Representative Kiger, of the Sovereign Grand Lodge, Grand Warden Greaves, Grand Marshal Jennings of Newark, District Deputy Grand Marshal Durand of Rahway, and others. All the lodges in the district except from Somerville were represented. After the honors had been tendered the officials and visitors a candidate for membership was initiated into Franklin Lodge, and the work was highly praised by the Grand Officers. Reports of the progress of the Order and instructive and entertaining addresses followed. Grand Representative Kiger exemplified the unwritten work of the Order. During the evening the visitors were invited to the dining room down stairs, where a very fine collation was partaken of. The addresses were continued until about midnight, and the occasion proved one of much pleasure and profit to all participating.

Railroad Accident on the Central.

There was quite a serious accident on the Philadelphia & Reading Railroad near the Roselle station Tuesday morning last, and it is very fortunate that no one was injured. The accident was a collision between a freight and passenger train, and was due to the prevailing fog. Locomotive No. 127, with a train of passenger cars was pulling out of the round house, and crossing the up track to get upon the east bound track. The switches and signals were all properly set. Locomotive No. 109, with a mixed train of freight and coal cars going west, reached the scene at the same moment. It was about 6 18 o'clock, and the fog was quite thick so that the engineer of the freight train could not see the approaching passenger train in time. He is reported to have shut down, but his train crowded him on and the locomotives collided. Both locomotives were badly injured. The cylinder and driving rod of No. 127 were torn off. The freight locomotive was toppled over on its side. It fell against the switch house, moving the building partially off the foundation. The engineer of the freight train had a very narrow escape, jumping off his locomotive just at the moment it careened, and it was only a miracle that he was not crushed beneath it. The accident caused no delay to through travel. The Roselle local trains from New York and Newark made Elizabeth their terminus, the west bound trains passing by switching over on a siding. The wrecker's train was soon sent for, and the debris was cleared away by afternoon. The loss to the company amounts to several thousand dollars.

Hope Of Better Street Light.

The specifications for lighting certain portions of the streets of this city by gas or electricity, are drawn up with great care and cover the matter of service so thoroughly that the acceptance of any bid to be opened at the regular Council meeting of April 5th, will insure the better lighting of the streets thereafter. Nothing so favorably effects the good opinion of strangers visiting an "out-of-town" place of residence, as the manner in which its streets are paved and lighted, and the best of results in this direction will be attained by a conformity with the requirements of the specifications we refer to. In the matter of electric lighting especially, will the greatest benefit be achieved. Nor only is the bid for this advanced method of illumination to cover the lighting of the streets during the eighteen nights of each month—known as "moonless nights"—but during the other nights when the moon is obscured by clouds or otherwise, the lights are to be turned on by direction of the Mayor or some other authorized person, without extra charge, provided such additional service does not exceed fifty hours during each month. It is also required that these electric lights shall burn during the regular nights, from a half-hour after sun down till a half-hour before sunrise.

It is rumored that the Plainfield Electric Light Company—which uses the best of all—the Thomson-Houston system—will make a bid that cannot but be accepted if there is any desire on the part of the Council to serve the people and advance the prosperity of the city. This company is perfectly willing, we are informed, to accept of the plan that demands the lighting of the streets during the "off-nights," when so required. The exhibition of the light furnished by this system during the past few months in the city, proves it to be the best in use to-day even when irregular power is taken from an engine erected for such a different purpose. Those of judgment and experience, consequently cannot doubt but that with a plant exclusively its own, and with the most improved engines, fixtures and appurtenances known for the particular purpose intended, the light that will result will satisfy the public at last and largely increase Plainfield's popularity as a place of residence.

"No Case."

The matter and difference between the City of Plainfield and Mr. Charles Bock, on Friday afternoon of last week, drew a crowd that filled the court room and overflowed into the council chamber. A jury was soon chosen, and the interest of those present at once enlisted in the examination of one Frederick Pommerehne. This witness who styled himself a "detective," called at the saloon of Mr. Charles Bock (whose license had not at that time been renewed) and represented that he was a salesman for a liquor house. Mr. Bock was not home, and a young man who opened the door was persuaded to first sell the "detective" a cigar and then to give him a drink of whiskey. Pommerehne's claim that he paid for the drink, was all the city had to rest upon. Messrs. W. L. Hetfield and W. K. McClure conducted the defendant's case most ably. The former with much skill and patience, carried on the cross-examination, and although unable to secure any serviceable admissions from the accuser, exhibited the witness in his true character and destroyed all possibility of a verdict in accordance with any evidence he might swear to. The first witness for the defence was Mr. Bock himself, who swore that he had never received a cent from the sale of liquor during such time as he had been without a license, and that the young man who was accused of receiving the money for the drink procured by Pommerehne, was not in his (Mr. Bock's) employ. The city here threw up the case as it had no evidence to overcome the weight of this testimony; and Judge John Ulrich charged the jury to bring in its verdict for the defendant.

Re-Elected.

In the basement of the North Plainfield public school building, Tuesday evening last, an election was held for a school trustee to fill the vacancy caused by the expiration of the term of Mr. H. K. Carroll. So large an assembling of boroughites had never before been known on a like occasion, and, in consequence, the balloting was most exciting. The result was the re-election of Mr. Carroll by a vote of 127 to Mr. F. H. Martin's 93. The sum of $4,000 was voted for school purposes, and the following financial report for the year ending March 16, 1886, was presented:

SCOTCH PLAINS SCRATCHINGS.

The contest for the office of road master Thursday evening was one attended with more interest than has been felt here for a number of years. Excelsior Hall at 8 o'clock sharp was the place where the thing was settled. Each nominee was flanked by a little army of staunch admirers, each man grasping his sacred ballot with a determined look. When the vote was counted the result was that Hezekiah Hand laid over E. M. Johnson 18 votes. Treating to soda was next in order.

The cry of "Fire" on Friday morning at 2 o'clock was occasioned by the discovery that Hand's pool room was in flames. The building was located in the midst of a row of wooden structures, the nearest being Mrs. Brown's residence to the north and A. Brown's carriage factory to the south. As good luck would have it there was scarcely any wind blowing either way. The pool room was burned to the ground and Mrs. Brown's house was partially destroyed, and would have been totally, but for the almost superhuman efforts of the firemen, both companies working heroically. Considering the facilities and the small supply of water furnished, it was a miracle that the fire was stopped where it was. There is not the slightest doubt that this fire was started by an incendiary, as has been several previous ones that have occurred here. Are the citizens going to lie dormant and take no action in trying to discover who this firebug is, or are they going to wait until he makes a clean sweep of our town, which might have been the case in this last instance if the wind had been favorable.

WESTFIELD WISPS.

Mr. George Thatcher has returned to his villa residence on Clark street.

Martin E. Alpus was made the happy father of a bouncing boy on Saturday last.

At the annual road meeting held in road district No. 8, the overseer was requested to work on the roads and repair the sidewalks in the early spring, instead of putting it off until late in the fall, as has been the custom heretofore by many of our overseers.

The fire department held an adjourned meeting on Wednesday evening, to take action in regard to the draft made upon them for $350. After considerable discussion it was voted not to pay the same. The whole matter of the property of the department will no doubt be settled at the next regular meeting in May next.

The new Town Committee met at the Town Rooms, on Saturday afternoon last, to organize for the ensuing year. Present—Messrs. E. Embree and E. Tompkins. Mr. J. L. Miller being absent South. They were called to order by Town Clerk Whitaker. The permanent organization is as follows: Chairman, James L. Miller; Treasurer, E. Embree. The oaths of office of all the township officials elected were presented by the Clerk and ordered placed on file. The bonds of the several officers were fixed as follows: Collector, $15,000; Treasurer, $2,500; Overseer of Poor, and Constable, $500 each. On motion adjourned subject to call of chairman.

On last Thursday evening the several road districts held their annual road election with the following results: Road districts No. 1, James Fisk, overseer; No. 2, Wm. Stitt, overseer, $100; No. 3, J. J. Willis, overseer, $300; No. 4, A. L. Ross, overseer, $650; No. 5, W. A. Brown, overseer, $125; No. 6, George Campbell, overseer, $150; No. 7, J. S. Burhans, overseer, $175; No. 8, Orren Pierson, overseer, $650; No. 9, Ira C. Lambert, $50; No. 10, C. G. Brown, overseer; No. 11, no election; No. 12, O. M. Pierson, overseer, $100; No. 13, no election; No. 14, no election; No. 15, Henry Nelson, overseer, $40; total extra road money, $2,240. Road district No. 6 did not hold their election until Friday, instead of Thursday as the law provides, which leaves it without any extra money. The town committee will no doubt appoint the same person overseer as the meeting voted for on Friday.

At the annual school meeting held on Tuesday evening last, at the public school building, there was a large attendance present. Mr. A. F. Grant was chosen Chairman and Dr. J. B. Harrison Secretary. Very little excitement was had over the election of School Trustee, Mr. James L. Miller, the present incumbent, and Dr. F. A. Kinch were placed in nomination. Mr. Miller received 137 votes, Mr. Kinch, 31, blank 2. Mr. Miller was declared elected for the term of three years. The report of the district clerk showing the financial condition was read, and ordered placed on file, as was also the report of the School Trustees, in regard to the efficiency and welfare of the school. The sum of $4,357 was unanimously voted as extra money for the maintenance of a free public school. The sum of $500 of this item is to be paid upon the principal of the bond now upon the school house.

THE CORNER CUPBOARD.

"I wonder that I never thought of it before," said Mrs. Blackbridge. "It's just the place I need; and the carpenter says it won't cost more than ten dollars."

"What won't cost more than ten dollars?" said Mr. Blackbridge, looking up from his newspaper.

The December sunshine made a square of pallid brightness on the gay stripes of the rag carpet; the great woolly-leaved geranium in the window was just bursting into trusses of scarlet bloom, and the maple logs blazed merrily in the air-tight wood stove, with now and then a snap and a crackle. Mrs. Blackbridge was knitting; Mr. Blackbridge was absorbing his weekly pabulum of politics, religion and general intelligence from the Sandyback Gazette. The cat purred on the home-knitted rug, the old parrot, which had not uttered a sound for a year, plumed its feathers silently in the sunshine, and blinked drowsily.

"Why, a corner cupboard," said Mrs. Blackbridge.

"A corner cupboard!" repeated her husband. "Where?"

"Don't you see?" said the old lady. "Just there, by the door, at the end of the chimney-piece."

"Nonsense!" said Mr. Blackbridge. "The cherry-wood bureau has always stood there since I can remember."

"We can move the cherry-wood bureau up stairs," argued Mrs. Blackbridge.

"You are always wanting to move things," said Mr. Blackbridge, discontented. "Women never can be easy. My mother always kept the cherry-wood bureau there, and I don't calculate to have it moved."

"Now, if that ain't just like a man!" said Mrs. Blackbridge, with an appealing look at the parrot. "As if it makes a cent's difference where the cherry-wood bureau stood? You don't go to it once in a week."

"Yes, I do," said Mr. Blackbridge. "I keep my papers in the upper right-hand drawer."

"We can change 'em to the table drawer," cheerfully suggested his wife.

"No, we can't," said Mr. Blackbridge.

"Well, anyhow," said Mrs. Blackbridge, "me and Joe Gale, the carpenter, have settled it. And I'm going to have a corner cupboard built just there. Now!"

"You be, eh?" said Mr. Blackbridge. "Who's the master of this house—you or me?"

"But I've told Joe Gale—"

"I don't care what you told him," said Mr. Blackbridge. "I'm going to countermand your order."

Mrs. Blackbridge rose up in great indignation.

"I don't stay in no place where I can't have my own way about the furniture," said she, the very borders of her cap trembling with righteous excitement.

"You can do as you please about that," observed Mr. Blackbridge, feeling it imperatively necessary that he should vindicate the position that he had taken. "I don't have no corner cupboard in this house, crowding out my mother's cherry-wood bureau."

He fell back upon the columns of the Sandyback Gazette, as if the question were definitely settled. Mrs. Blackbridge deliberately rolled up her knitting work, deposited it in its bag, and walked out of the room and out of the house.

"I won't be ordered about as if I were a child!" thought she.

"I won't be bullied by any woman alive!" reflected Mr. Blackbridge.

Now the Blackbridges, strange to say, were a really attached couple, who had got married thirty years ago, because they actually loved one another. In sorrow and in joy, in sickness and in health, they had cleaved loyally one to the other; and now the whole superstructure of their happiness had been overset by such a contemptible little thing as—a corner cupboard!

"He hasn't a bit of consideration for my convenience," said Mrs. Blackbridge, trying to swallow a lump in her throat.

"She don't respect my old associations at all," growled Mr. Blackbridge. "As if all the corner cupboards in the world could make up for the loss of my mother's cherry-wood bureau!"

So Mr. Blackbridge, intrenched in an obstinacy which he dignified by the title of "firmness," maintained the home-citadel, while Mrs. Blackbridge went to her sister's house and announced that she had "come to stay."

"La!" said the sister, a fat, old widow, with merry black eyes and several layers of double chin. "You don't mean it, Jane Eliza?"

"Yes, I do mean it," replied Mrs. Blackbridge.

"You won't really leave Seth for such a trifle as that," coaxed the sister.

"It ain't the corner cupboard," whimpered Mrs. Blackbridge; "its the principle."

"Oh, bother principles!" said the widow.

But Mrs. Blackbridge was immovable. For a week the Blackbridges never spoke to each other. The lady remained with her sister; the gentleman "had in" old Mrs. Stubbs to cook and look after things a little. The cat deserted—the speechless parrot could only look his disapprobation of things—and the carpenter who arrived opportunely with his basket of tools, was told he was not needed on the place.

"It's awfully lonesome without Jane Eliza," said Mr. Blackbridge; "but I couldn't give up the principle!"

"I never thought that Seth and I would have come to words," sobbed Mrs. Blackbridge. "But no woman could respect herself who consented to be trampled into the dust."

At the week's end, however, Mr. and Mrs. Blackbridge met. It was not "in a crowd," it was at a railway-station. Mrs. Blackbridge was going "down the line" to see about getting her cinnamon-colored silk dyed black. Mr. Blackbridge was going up to Selbyville to inspect some cattle that were to be sold the next day at auction. Neither of them looked at each other. Both pretended to be deeply interested in the printed matter nailed up the station walls, although Mrs. Blackbridge could not read a word without her spectacles, and honest Steve did not know whether he was pursuing Greek iambics or cuneiform inscriptions. But their peculiar deportment was fortunately unobserved, for Deacon Zephaniah Ellis, at the other end of the room, was engaged in telling a story about somebody up at "Zealand Three Corners," a few miles away.

"Yes," said he, "they've separated! Over fifty, both on 'em! And only one just found out that they was sufferin' from incompatibility of temper! Did you ever hear of such a pair of old fools in all your life?"

"Never!" said old Captain Jenkins, who was the spokesman of the eager audience.

(Mr. Blackbridge looked out of the window and made a feeble attempt at whistling. Mrs. Blackbridge stared harder than ever at the "Sedgwick Junction Time Table.")

"And what d'ye s'pose it was all about?" went on Zephaniah Ellis, with a resounding laugh. "Why, nothin' more nor less than the moth-eaten old uniform that the squire's grand-uncle wore in the war of 1812! True's you live and breathe, that was all."

"Git out!" said old Captain Jenkins, not so much from any spirit of disbelief as from the necessity for some appropriate comment upon the circumstance, when Deacon Zephaniah paused.

"I'm a tellin' the gospel truth," said Deacon Zephaniah. "An old gold-laced uniform, half eat up by the moths, that she found up in the garret. She wanted to sell it to the ragman, and he wouldn't let her. She said she would and he said she should not. And they came to high words, and so now they're parted. And all about the squire's grand-uncle's old uniform! Ha! ha! ha!"

There was a burst of derisive laughter from the little crowd. Mr. Blackbridge came a little nearer to his wife. Mrs. Blackbridge did not stir, but colored up to her eyes.

"Jane Eliza!" said Mr. Blackbridge in a low voice.

"Yes, Seth," was the almost inaudible response.

"I guess I will go in the down train with you."

"No, Seth," said Mrs. Blackbridge; "I'll go to Selbyville with you. I ain't in a hurry about my business."

"Jane Eliza," he said, once again.

"Well, Seth."

"I was dreadful stubborn about that cherry-wood bureau. I'm willin' to own it."

"Oh, Seth, don't talk that way," almost sobbed Mrs. Blackbridge. "It belonged to your mother. It was natural you should feel so."

"We'll set it under the window," said Seth. "One place is just as good as another for it. And you shall have your corner cupboard just as you wanted it."

"I don't want no corner cupboard," said Jane Eliza, hysterically.

"But I do," said Mr. Blackbridge. "And I mean to have it. There comes the Selbyville train; and I'll be glad to have you look at the cattle. Your judgment was always good about fat cows."

He tucked Mrs. Blackbridge's arm under his, and the couple started for the train.

Thus the reconciliation was complete. And all through Deacon Zephaniah Ellis's unconsciously uttered story about somebody's grand-uncle's old uniform.

"I didn't fairly see what a fool I was before," said Mr. Blackbridge.

"Nor I either," said Mrs. Blackbridge.

The corner cupboard now occupies the angle of the chimney jamb, and the cherry-wood bureau stands under the window, with the family Bible laid upon the velveteen cushion on its polished top.

And the Blackbridges never had any serious difference of opinion since.

HOPE SPRINGS ETERNAL, ETC.

An old maid at least seventy years of age was helped into a chair in the office of a New York police justice. She was very much excited.

"Do I understand you to say that you think your pocket was picked by a young man who sat alongside of you in a Third avenue car?" asked the justice.

"Yes, I'm sure of it. He squeezed me up in the corner so that I could scarcely breathe, and he kept smiling at me, and smiling at me, as if he knew me."

"Why did you permit him to do that? Why did you not complain to the conductor?" asked the justice.

"I—I—"

"Out with it."

"I thought perhaps he was—he was—"

"Was what?"

"Going to propose to me."

THE CANINE QUESTION DISCUSSED.

Under the above caption last Friday's N. Y. World contained the following communication from Westfield's well known resident and former Assemblyman from the Third District, Mr. A. A. Drake, who, while a member, introduced a bill into the House of Assembly regarding the canine race which made him exceedingly popular and well-known as their friend:

To the Editor of the World;

There are many reasons why Assembly Bill No. 25, should become a law, among them the following:

To revive wool production, once a staple of the State, producing a revenue of $30,000 to $50,000 per annum.

To protect our persons and families from the dreadful results of hydrophobia by the destruction of the class of animals most subject to it, the homeless, starved and worthless cur.

To make the owners of all dogs share alike the damage to personal property; at present paid by a comparitive few; in fact, the sheep ownership has become ancient history.

To revive sheep-farming, wool growing and herding and raising sheep for food, which could be done at fair remuneration and which, in fact, is about the only paying business left to our farmers.

To abate a growing nuisance, at the present time alarmingly large, shortening the lives of many of our unfortunate invalid friends, disturbing the quiet of home circles by their unceasing howls at the most inopportune and unseasonable hours; destroying the pleasure of a drive by sudden and unexpected attacks upon horses, at times causing serious results.

To define by law the question of property in dogs. At present the dog owners are held responsible for damages done by their own and others' dogs. These taxes to be collected by regularly levied tax, annually in some towns, in others to a limited extent, in others comparitively none.

To abate a public growing nuisance—the increase of the private breeding dog kennel, the influx of dogs from New York and Philadelphia, who spend part of their time in New Jersey to escape the penalty of license laws of the said States—a stringent law is required to meet the case under the circumstances.

To protect by law the possession of a valuable animal, taxed by law for depredations done by a lower and perhaps untaxed dog of an undefined species.

Owners of dogs generally distribute the increase instead of destroying them for the public good, consequently they increase faster than the prolific sheep which are destroyed for food to the public benefit. The dog is propagated, as a rule, for a public nuisance. So far as I have been able to ascertain there is no record of a well-cared-for dog of a well-defined breed except the bloodhound, Spitz and bull-dog doing damage to sheep. All dogs are subject to hydrophobia which are not well cared for, fed, housed, etc., during extreme cold or warm weather, the sudden changes from one to the other developing the disease to an alarming extent with dire results. A professional man or layman who contends there is no such disease as rabies in a dog is a veritable donkey. The rarity of cases is no argument against or for it, the fact exists and should be remedied at once by the extermination of the first cause to a sensible extent by reducing the evil to a minimum.

Who undertakes many things at once, seldom does anything well.

We rate ability in men by what they finish, not by what they attempt.

Better a little in peace and with right, than much with anxiety and strife.

Such as give ear to slanderers, are but one degree better themselves.

If tradesmen make their weights lighter, they make their sins heavier.

If one thinks that he shall not, it too often happens that he will not please.

Pride makes some men ridiculous, but prevents others from becoming so.

Strong passions work wonders when there is a stronger reason to curb them.

There is nothing so strong or safe in an emergency of life as the simple truth.

Nurture your mind with great thought; to believe in the heroic makes heroes.

You must walk a long while behind a wild goose before you find an ostrich feather.

Our years, our debts, and our enemies are always more numerous than we imagine.

Spending your money with many a guest, empties the kitchen, the cellar, and chest.

What we charitably forgive will be recompensed as well as what we charitably give.

The best and most important part of a man's education is that which he gives himself.

Sudden expectations which kindle the mind to a fever, sometimes chill the heart to a frost.

It is always safe to learn, even from our enemies—seldom safe to instruct, even our friends.

Doubt is the vestibule which all must pass, before they can enter into the temple of wisdom.

Truth—the open, bold, honest truth—is always the safest for any one, in any and all circumstances.

Make people happy, and there will not be half the quarreling or a tenth part of the wickedness there is.

To all intents and purposes, he who will not open his eyes is, for the time being, as blind as he that cannot.

A state of civilization requires each individual to voluntarily sacrifice a part of his liberty to increase the general stock.

CLEVELAND'S
SUPERIOR TO ROYAL.

Rutgers College (the New Jersey State Scientific College)
New Brunswick, N. J., July 7, 1885.

Analyses and careful examinations of Cleveland's Superior and Royal Baking Powders enable us to bear testimony to the superiority of Cleveland's. It yields more carbonic acid gas than the Royal, and contains no ammonia salts.

Cleveland's Baking Powder is made of pure substances and is absolutely free from any kind of adulteration. We endorse it most cordially as an honest and efficient article, and one that will give entirely satisfactory results.

BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS.
WHAT IS IT?

The discoverer does not claim it a cure for all the ills, but boldly warrants it cures every form of disease arising from a torpid liver, impure blood, disordered kidneys, and where there is a broken down condition of the System, requiring a prompt and permanent tonic, it never fails to restore the sufferer. Such is BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS. Sold by all druggists, who are authorized by the manufacturers to refund the price to any purchaser who is not benefited by their use.

From Pole to Pole
AYER'S SARSAPARILLA has demonstrated its power of cure for all diseases of the blood.
The Harpooner's Story.
New Bedford, June 1, 1883.
DR. J. C. AYER & CO.—Twenty years ago I was a harpooner in the North Pacific, when five others of the crew and myself were laid up with scurvy. Our bodies were bloated, gums swollen and bleeding, teeth loose, purple blotches all over us, and our breath seemed rotten. Take it by and large we were pretty badly off. All our lime-juice was accidentally destroyed, but the captain had a couple dozen bottles of AYER'S SARSAPARILLA and gave us that. We recovered on it quicker than I have ever seen men brought about by any other treatment for scurvy, and I've seen a good deal of it. Seeing no mention in your Almanac of your Sarsaparilla being good for scurvy, I thought you ought to know of this, and so send you the facts.
Respectfully yours, RALPH T. WINGATE.
The Trooper's Experience.
Masern, Basutoland (S. Africa), March 7, 1883.
DR. J. C. AYER & CO.—Gentlemen: I have much pleasure to testify to the great value of your Sarsaparilla. We have been stationed here for over two years, during which time we had to live in tents. Being under canvas for such a time brought on what is called in this country "veldt-sores." I had those sores for some time. I was advised to take your Sarsaparilla, two bottles of which made my sores disappear rapidly, and I am now quite well.
Yours truly, T. E. BODEN,
Trooper, Cape Mounted Riflemen.
Ayer's Sarsaparilla
Is the only thoroughly effective blood-purifier, the only medicine that eradicates the poisons of Scrofula, Mercury, and Contagious Disease from the system.
PREPARED BY
Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.
Sold by all Druggists: Price $1; six bottles for $5.

'OSTLER JOE.

BY GEORGE R. SIMS.

I stood at eve, when the sun went down, by a grave where a woman lies,
Who lured men's souls to the shores of sin with the light of her wanton eyes,
Who sang the song that the siren sang on the treacherous Lurley height,
Whose face was as fair as a summer day and whose heart was as black as night.

Yet a blossom I fain would pluck to-day from the garden above her dust;
Not the languorous lily of soulless sin, nor the blood-red rose of lust,
But a sweet white blossom of holy love that grew in the one green spot
In the arid desert of Phryne's life, where all was parched and hot.

* * * * * * *

In the summer, when the meadows were aglow with blue and red,
Joe, the 'ostler of the Magpie, and fair Annie Smith were wed.
Plump was Annie, plump and pretty, with a cheek as white as snow;
He was anything but handsome, was the Magpie's 'ostler, Joe.

But he won the winsome lassie. They'd a cottage and a cow,
And her matronhood sat lightly on the village beauty's brow.
Sped the months and came a baby—such a blue-eyed baby boy!
Joe was working in the stable when they told him of his joy.

He was rubbing down the horses and he gave them then and there
All a special feed of clover just in honor of the heir;
It had been his great ambition, and he told the horses so,
That the Fates would send a baby who might bear the name of Joe.

Little Joe the child was christened, and, like babies, grew apace,
He'd his mother's eyes of azure and his father's honest face,
Swift the happy years went over, years of blue and cloudless sky;
Love was lord of that small cottage, and the tempests passed them by.

Passed them by for years, then swiftly burst in fury o'er their home,
Down the lane by Annie's cottage chanced a gentleman to roam;
Thrice he came and saw her sitting by the window with her child,
And he nodded to the baby, and the baby laughed and smiled.

So at last it grew to know him—little Joe was nearly four;
He would call the "pretty gemplun," as he passed the open door,
And one day he ran and caught him, and in child's play pulled him in,
And the baby Joe had prayed for brought about the mother's sin.

'Twas the same old wretched story that for ages bards have sung;
'Twas a woman weak and wanton and a villain's tempting tongue;
'Twas a picture deftly painted for a silly creature's eyes
Of the Babylonian wonders and the joy that in them lies.

Annie listened and was tempted; she was tempted and she fell,
As the angels fell from heaven to the blackest depths of hell;
She was promised wealth and splendor and a life of guilty sloth,
Yellow gold for child and husband—and the woman left them both.

Home one eve came Joe the 'ostler with a cheery cry of "wife!"
Finding that which blurred forever all the story of his life.
She had left a silly letter—through the cruel scrawl he spelt;
Then he sought the lonely bedroom, joined his horny hands and knelt.

"Now, O Lord, O God, forgive her, for she ain't to blame," he cried;
"For I owt t'a seen her trouble, and 'a gone away and died.
Why, a wench like her—God bless her!—'twasn't likely as her'd rest
With that bonny head forever on a 'ostler's ragged vest.

"It was kind o' her to bear me all this long and happy time,
So for my sake please to bless her,
Though you count her deed a crime;
If so be I don't pray proper, Lord, forgive me, for you see
I can talk all right to 'osses, but I'm nervous like with Thee."

Ne'er a line came to the cottage from the woman who had flown;
Joe, the baby, died that winter, and the man was left alone.
Ne'er a bitter word he uttered, but in silence kissed the rod,
Saving what he told his horses; saving what he told his God.

Far away in mighty London rose the woman into fame,
For her beauty won men's homage, and she prospered in her shame;
Quick from lord to lord she flitted, higher still each prize she won,
And her rivals paled beside her as the stars beside the sun.

Next she made the stage her market, and she dragged Art's temple down
To the level of a show-place for the outcasts of the town,
And the kisses she had given to poor 'Ostler Joe for naught,
With their gold and costly jewels rich and titled lovers bought.

Went the years with flying footsteps while the star was at its height,
Then the darkness came on swiftly, and the gloaming turned to night.
Shattered strength and faded beauty tore the laurels from her brow;
Of the thousands who had worshipped never one came near her now.

Broken down in health and fortune, men forgot her very name,
Till the news that she was dying woke the echoes of her fame;
And the papers in their gossip mentioned how an "actress" lay,
Sick to death in humble lodgings, growing weaker every day.

One there was who read the story in a far-off country place,
And that night the dying woman woke and looked upon his face.
Once again the strong arms clasped her that had clasped her long ago,
And the wearied head lay pillowed on the bosom of 'Ostler Joe.

All the past had he forgotten, all the sorrow and the shame;
He had found her sick and lonely, and his wife he now could claim.
Since the grand folks who had known her one and all had slunk away,
He could clasp his long-lost darling, and no man would say him nay.

In his arms death found her lying, in his arms her spirit fled;
And his tears came down in torrents as he knelt beside her dead.
Never once his love had faltered through her base, unhallowed life;
And the stone above her ashes bears the honored name of wife.

* * * * * * *

That's the blossom I fain would pluck to-day from the garden above her dust;
Not the languorous lily of soulless sin nor the blood-red rose of lust;
But a sweet white blossom of holy love that grew in the one green spot
In the arid desert of Phryne's life, where all was parched and hot.

WHAT HIS FATHER CAUGHT.

A Sunday school teacher was telling her children how the devil goeth about like a roaring lion seeking whom he may devour, and after the lesson was through she said that those who wished could ask questions. At once a little boy spoke up and asked how fast the devil could go.

"Hush, Johnnie," said the teacher; "such questions are very profane."

"Well, I don't care," said Johnnie; "you can't outrun my pa, anyhow, 'cause I heard pa tell a man down the street the other day that he caught the devil the night he came home from the lodge."

MISCELLANEOUS READING

SILAS SINGLETON.

CHAPTER I.—THE VOW.

"I'll do it!" and, with the exclamation, Silas Singleton's chubby hand came down with emphasis on the dining-room table. "I'm only fifty-eight, for a man is comparitively young at that age, when his life has been a strictly temperate and regular one. She's a good girl, and luckily for me, perhaps, she's poor. All girls—especially the poorer ones—place a proper estimate on securing a rich husband, and why should she be an exception? Jack will be astonished, and a little disappointed, I suppose; but I mean to provide generously for his future, for he is a good boy and my only living relative. He'll never dream in what direction the land lies, though. I have guarded my secret so well that even she don't dream what a brilliant future is before her." Silas chuckled gleefully, and sinking back in his chair, closed his eyes to contemplate the future his imagination pictured.

Our friend Silas was a self-made man—the architect of his own fortune, as he was wont to put it himself, who having realized a competency in the manufacture of soap, retired from trade to enjoy his ease in an uptown brown-stone mansion. That evening at dinner he approached his nephew on the subject that filled his thoughts.

"Jack," he said, as he twisted his napkin round one chubby hand, "at what age do you think a wise man should marry?"

"Oh, say, uncle; you'll have to give me an easier one. That is a conundrum as difficult to solve as the question once asked by Louis the Fourteenth of France of a lady, who had passed her eightieth birthday. 'Madame,' inquired the king, 'when does a woman cease to love?' 'Sire,' replied the venerable dame, with the most bewitching smirk, 'you must ask some lady older than I.'"

"Jack, do not try to be funny," was the comment of Silas on his nephew's story, who heard the criticism with a good-humored laugh, as he asked:

"Are you seriously contemplating matrimony, Uncle?"

Silas evaded a query too direct to be agreeable, by remarking sententiously, "I believe that no man should marry until his character and habits are irrevocably formed—until the ripe wisdom of experience should enable him to guide with greater safety the domestic bark through all the shoals and quicksands of the matrimonial ocean. But every man, Jack, should obey the instinct implanted in his nature for an all-wise purpose, and marry."

"Yet I have often thought, uncle, that the only reason for marriage as an institution is, that it enables any fool to make the life of at least one woman miserable."

"Don't try to be cynical, sir," Silas said severely. "'Tis the vice of the young men of this generation, but the habit sits awkwardly upon you. Have you never thought of marrying?"

"Uncle Silas, the vice of the young women of this generation is uncertainty of temper," Jack answered with imperturbable gravity.

"An opinion given with the dogmatic puppyism of youth. What the deuce do you know about it, sir? A woman's temper mellows with age."

"Or becomes more acid with accumulating years. But seriously, uncle, I suppose there never yet was a young fellow of eight-and-twenty who had not met some dainty morsel of feminine humanity of whom he would say, 'There is the girl I should like to call my wife,' but you see, uncle, a fellow with the right sort of heart will not marry the girl he loves even, unless he feels confident he can secure her future beyond the reach of poverty."

"You might not be apprehensive of poverty, Jack. With your salary and my allowance, you could continue to live comfortably, I guess."

"Indeed, uncle, you have been more than generous to me, and—"

"Don't interrupt me, boy. I was about to add that it has been always my intention to present you with a check for ten thousand dollars on the day of your marriage."

"Oh, you ain't serious, sir. Upon my word, if I thought you were, I would be a Benedict within a week."

Without further remark Silas tore a blank leaf from his note book, and wrote the following: "I, Silas Singleton, promise to pay my nephew, John Singleton, ten thousand dollars on the day of his marriage, should the lady be above reproach."

He handed this document to his nephew, who after a glance folded it carefully and placed it in his pocket. "My dear uncle, you may call me a Dutchman if I don't demand that check before the week is out."

CHAPTER II.—THE PROPOSAL.

"Tell my nephew he must dine alone to-night," Silas said to his servant, as he was about leaving the house the following evening. He was dressed with more than usual care, and his step was as elastic as a boy's as he ran down the steps. Ten minutes' ride on the surface rails would have brought him to his destination, but he preferred to walk, and his thoughts translated into speech would be expressed as follows: "Silas Singleton, this is a momentous crisis in your life. You are about to ask a girl to be your wife, but don't make a fool of yourself, Silas Singleton. Be calm, concise and decisive. Get to the point at once and you must be successful."

He paused at the door of a tenement-house on West Thirty-fourth street to adjust his necktie before ascending the stairs. He knocked at a door on the second floor, and a clear, girlish voice bade him come in.

"Good evening, Miss Letty," said Silas, as he entered the room.

"Oh, good evening, Mr. Singleton. Let me take your hat, sir. Mother has just gone out to the butcher's, but she'll be back presently."

"Surely the Fates are fighting in my favor," thought Silas. He was alone with Letty, and had a clear stage to enter on his wooing without fear of immediate interruption.

Letty Larendon was not handsome, but, like hundreds of her sister working girls in New York, she was industrious, self-reliant and self-denying. Silas was not an infrequent visitor to her humble home. He was her father's friend, and it was through his influence that Letty had secured a position as a stenographer in a merchant's office, which enabled her to support a widowed mother and a brother many years younger than herself.

"I hope your mother is growing stronger," Silas said as he seated himself quite close to the girl's side.

"Indeed she is, sir, and I'm sure we'll never forget how very kind you have been to us, Mr. Singleton."

"Oh, nonsense! But when she loses you, Miss Letty, I'm sure she'll miss you, for you are a model daughter, and deserve the best reward such a girl can get, and that is a good husband. Do you ever think of marrying, Miss Letty?"

"Oh! there's time enough to think of that yet," was Letty's laughing reply.

"A mistake, Miss Larendon, a mistake, believe me. Early marriage—I mean the early marriages of females—is to be commended. I pressed this view on my nephew last night, and urged him to marry. Jack is so far of my opinion that he protests he will be married within a week. Miss Letty, take my word for it, you will be happier married to the man that loves you and can give you a pleasant home. Suppose this man I speak of loved you to distraction, as he does, and that his name was Singleton, what would you say, Letty?"

Uncle Silas had dropped formal "Miss," and his hand was laid caressingly on the girl's shoulder. Miss Larendon's embarrassment would have been very apparent to her ardent lover if he had been looking in her face, which he was not as he continued: "Letty, my dear, what do you say to changing your name to Singleton? You will never have cause to regret the step, for your husband shall be your slave and adorer. You will make me happy; and Jack—why Jack, although the boy is too bashful to give expressions to his feelings, will swear you are an angel."

Whatever emotions the old man's words stirred in Letty's breast, she endeavored to conceal, and it was in a calm and somewhat faint voice she murmured: "If you wish it, sir, and if Jack——"

"Why, of course, we both wish it," he interrupted, and the infatuated Silas proceeded to seal the contract with a kiss. Now his nephew could have told that kissing is an art that could only be acquired by patient study of details and heroic perseverance in practice, and Silas Singleton's osculatory performance was not a brilliant success. With the best intentions in the world he only succeeded in reaching the tip of Letty's somewhat retrousse nose instead of her lips, but he left the house as happy as old age can sometimes be in the perpetration of a folly.

CHAPTER III.—THE DENOUEMENT.

"Letty, I have alarming news for you. Uncle Silas is thinking of getting married. Married means, I suppose, my disinheritance. Then where shall I be, and where, oh! where shall you be, Letty?"

"Always in your heart, dear Jack, I hope, no matter how your uncle may dispose of his fortune."

"Say, Letty, what'll ye gimme if I give ye a letter, an' if I don't tell Jack that I saw old man Singleton kissing ye?" It was the enfant terrible of the family, Letty's small brother, who had entered the room with a letter in the hand he held behind his back.

"Oh! you bad boy, I shall certainly tell mother; and—give me that letter immediately," exclaimed Letty, as she snatched it from her brother's hand.

"Eddie, my young friend," said Jack, "on principle I object to rewarding an informer, but here is a nickel, and travel."

"Now, Miss Larendon," said Jack, when he had closed the door behind her, "I suppose you are ready with an explanation."

Letty read the letter very carefully before she answered him. "Oh! Jack, I've made a terrible mistake."

"It would seem so, Miss Larendon," the young man said stiffly.

"Jack, I don't want you to be absurdly jealous about your uncle kissing me, when I'm just going to have a good cry," and there was a quiver around the sweet, womanly mouth that instantly disarmed her lover of all anger. "There, there, that will do, Jack; and now that you are a good boy again, I'll give you the explanation you ask for. Your uncle was here last night and made a proposal on behalf of you Jack, as I then thought. He intimated that you were too bashful to plead your own cause. Poor man! he didn't know of our secret engagement; and when he urged me to change my name to Singleton——"

"I think I can guess the rest. You learn from that letter that he spoke for himself, and that he regards you at this moment as his betrothed."

"That's it, Jack; and, oh! what am I to do?"

"Only one thing that I know of, dear, and that is to——" and the remainder of the sentence was whispered among Letty's bangs.

* * * * * * *

The rheumatism had given Silas Singleton a respite, and he felt in excellent spirits as he sat in the dining-room thinking of Letty, when his nephew entered.

"Uncle, I'll thank you for that check of $10,000."

"What—what the deuce do you mean, sir?"

"Only this, sir; I was married this afternoon."

"Jack, are you fooling me?"

"Indeed, I am not. My wife is outside in the hall. Will you receive her, sir?" and Jack left the room before he got an answer, to return in a moment with a slight and shrinking figure clinging to his arm. As she cast one imploring look into the old man's face he exclaimed excitedly:

"Letty Larendon!"

"Mrs. Jack Singleton, if you please, sir," exclaimed his nephew.

"Oh! sir, I hope you will forgive Jack," Letty pleaded as she caught the hand of Uncle Silas between her own soft palms. "Indeed, indeed, it wasn't his fault. I taught him to love me long ago, but he was too bashful to confess it until he had learned you had spoken to me in his behalf night before last."

"Spoken in his behalf," the old man echoed with a look of astonishment. "Oh! yes, to be sure. So you see, Jack, I won a wife for you."

"And you will forgive us, uncle," with a tender emphasis on the word italicized, "for our hasty marriage without your knowledge," said Letty.

"You see, sir," Jack explained, "I was bound to get that $10,000."

"And you shall have it, boy, and with it a very foolish old man's blessing on you both."

A TOO-COMMON KIND OF CHARITY.

Many and many a time a little girl's mother had lectured her on the sin of extravagance in only eating the centre from each piece of bread, while the crusts were stowed away under the edge of the plate, as much out of sight as possible. To make the matter more impressive, the mother said one day, "There are many children who go hungry most all the time, and some of them even starve to death, for the lack of the bread you waste, dear."

"Then why don't you give them my crusts? I don't want them," was the philanthropic response.

DIFFERENT VIEWS OF LIFE.

Wife—You shouldn't take such a morbid view of life my dear. Look at poor Mr. Smith with his small income and his wife slowly dying, and yet he has a cheerful smile and a pleasant word for everybody.

Husband—Is his wife dying?

Wife—Yes.

Husband—And he is cheerful and pleasant.

Wife—Yes.

Husband—Well, if he doesn't look out he'll give himself away.

BASHFUL LOVERS.

"Mary Ellen," said an anxious mother to her daughter, in reference to a beau who had been to see her the night before; "did he hint anything about marrying?"

"No, ma'am."

"Didn't he sigh nor look as though he was suffering?"

"No, ma'am."

"Didn't he say nothing whatever about his piano?"

"No, ma'am."

"Didn't he talk a bit sweetish?"

"No, ma'am."

"Was he chatty, or otherwise?"

"He was right smart otherwise, dear mother; a heap so."

"Didn't he say nothing?"

"Not much."

"Oh, he did talk some, did he?"

"A small bit."

"What about?"

"Well, about all he had to say was about his hat."

"Mary Ellen, what on earth did he have to say about his hat?"

"He said he had three others at home, and that it was the worst one of the lot."

"Is that all he had to say?"

"Just about."

"How long did you set with him?"

"Four hours."

"And he didn't say anything else?"

"I don't believe he did."

"Mary Ellen, do you know what you have got to do?"

"No, ma'am."

"You've got to give him the grand bounce. He's just such a numbskull as your father was. He sot with me seven years without comin' any nigher to askin' or broachin' the subject I wanted to hear about of all others, an' I reckon he might have been a keepin' it up yit if I hadn't got my dander up at last and told him the Quaker meetin' sort of nonsense had got to stop in short meter, and that I had to know immediately what he was hanging round there for, or I'd marry a peddler who was after me hot-footed, before the moon could fill. That brought him to his mutton mighty suddint, and he hopped and popped so quick that it made my heart flutter. It turned out all right for me, though it used up an awful sight of fire-wood, cider, and so on, before he got to the poppin' pint, but I was a heap younger'n you and it didn't make so much difference. The old folks they used to howl like all sin at the way your fool of a daddy dilly-dallied around, and I can see now that they were right about it, though it used to vex me like the mischief then. You're too old, my gal, to run such tedious chances, and so you've got to drop this feller and clinch onto somebody that hain't so slow with his chin music, or your har'll be turned gray before you get an offer. This thing of sparkin' long enough to go to Jerico and back again before you go to housekeepin' is played out and I won't put up with it, Mary Ellen, do you understand me?"

WAYBACK CIDER.

An old farmer from Wayback county, who was brought before the Court for breaking the peace in a prohibition town, told the following pathetic story:

"You see, Jedge, the whole trouble come of my drinkin' some of that new-fangled temp'rance cider that I ain't used to, and which I don't believe I'd ever get used to afore the horn toots for the general jedgment.

"I war born an' bred on a farm, Jedge, an' I've knowed apple-juice since I war knee-high to a grasshopper. I've tampered with cider when it war sweet, an' I've tampered with it when it war hard; I've drunk it jest from the press, an' I've drunk it when it carried a good stiff bead; I've laid across a barrel under the wagon-shed and sucked it through a rye straw from the bung-hole when it war jest gilt-edged, an' I've swigged it when it war as hard as an iron wedge an' sour 'nough to make a man cross-eyed fur life; but, Jedge, upon my sacred word, I never had no cider to unberve me like that they sell in this here town. Jedge, it can't be the cider of long ago; it can't be the cider of me boyhood's happy days.

"You see, Jedge, I druv inter town with a load of sweet pertaters, an' after I'd sold out I jest thought as they don't sell anything stronger'n cider in this here temp'rance town I'd try a little of the good old drink of me youth. An', Jedge, I tried it!

"There war a crowd of old friends about the tavern, an' I asked 'em up to the apple juice, and then somebody sed: 'Come up agin'; an' then another sed: 'Fill 'em up at my expense,' an' still another sed: 'Have one with me afore you go;' an' that's just the way it happened.

"Somehow, Jedge, it didn't taste like the cider I war brought up on, but the bottle had 'cider' printed onto it in gold letters, an' they sed it war cider, an' as long as the flavor of it war agreeable I wasn't curious about it. I only took five drinks, Jedge, only five common tumblers full, an' then I begun to feel sort of queer, Jedge.

"I never had no cider to make me feel that way before. I war furst weak as a new-born calf, an' then I war as strong as old Sampson afore his head war shaved. I thought I could lift the tavern, an' I think I tried to. My mind's not clear, Jedge, but they say I made a sort of a hubbub. They say that I throwed a man over the bar an' broke a big lookin'-glass with him, an' scattered the whole congregation, an' went a howlin' down the main street askin' for a man of my strength, an' at last walked plum through a show-winder that they sed cost $150. Then I war taken away to the prison cell. I disremember all the little partic'lars, Jedge, but I suspect that all they say about me is too true. I think I war drunk, Jedge—I am almost certain sure I war drunk, an' the new-fangled cider they sell in this here town is to blame fur it all.

"I kin drink a'most anything with impunity, an' a little sugar, Jedge, and stand up under it as straight as the steeple of a meetin'-house. I kin drink peach brandy and apple-jack, an' plain, humble old corn-juice half a day, with the usual intermissions, an' still be a peaceable, law-abidin' citizen; but this here temp'rance cider is too much fur me, Jedge; it's too much fur the old man. Make it easy on me, fur I'm done with temp'rance drinks jest as long as I live, Jedge."

And the Judge, who is very well acquainted with the ways of town cider in Wayback county, made it very easy on the old man.

A MAN'S WAY.

A man falls in love the same as a mule goes down with a sinking bridge; simply because he can't help it; but it seldom does him any permanent injury. The shape of a nose, the sweet of an eye, or the wave of a curl trips him up and settles his hash without an instant of warning, and there he is, the bluest kind of a captive until marriage or some new fascination breaks the charm that binds him. He is pretty sure to love like a burning brush heap while he is about it, but the trouble is his flame is too ardent to be durable. He will swear to a blue-eyed sprite that he loves her for all eternity, and within three months he will slide up to some other heart, in total forgetfulness that he ever lost a wink of sleep by being in love before.

INEXPRESSIBLY SHOCKED.

A drummer struck up an acquaintance with a Boston girl on a train that was snow-bound during the recent blockade. The car was cold and the young lady sat with her hands in her muff. With that gentle and persistent delicacy in such matters for which the male sex, and drummers in particular, are noted, he managed to get one of his hands into the muff along with hers. "Sir!" she said, stiffly, "what do you mean by such conduct? I am inexpressibly shocked, sir. I am from Bosting and I would have you know that such familiarity is resented. I would be justified in screaming for assistance, but I hate scenes, and I'll give you just twenty minutes to take your hand out of there."

A COMPARISON.

The meaner a man is, just in that proportion he considers himself the superior of any woman. It took thousands of years for woman to get up from the condition of slavery to her present state. I hate a stingy man who will pretend to give his heart to a woman and hold on to his pocket-book. I believe in the institution of marriage. I would rather live on earth with the woman I love and the world full of trouble, than in heaven with only men. I believe in the republicanism of the fireside, the democracy of home, and that the wife has every right the husband has, and no more. If your child has got to get up early in the morning it is just as easy to wake him with a kiss as with a club. Let any parent about to whip his child have his photograph taken in the act, showing his passionate vulgar face, and the dimpled face of the child. Then let him think, if that child should die, how sweet it would be to sit on its grave and look at the picture.—R. G. Ingersoll.

THINGS WORTH KNOWING.

To learn to think and act for yourself.

To respect gray hairs, especially our own.

To waste nothing, neither money, time nor talent.

If you have a place of business to be found there when wanted.

To spare when you are young that you may spend when you are old.

To bear little trials patiently that you may learn how to bear great ones.

To be self-reliant and not take too much advice, but rather depend on yourself.

To keep alive in your breast that little spark of celestial fire called conscience.

To do all the good you can in the world and make as little noise about it as possible.

To learn to say no; it will be of more service to you than to be able to read Latin.

To stick to your opinion if you have one, allowing others, of course, the same liberty to stick to theirs.

HE CANNOT UNDERSTAND.

"How was dose dings?" ejaculated an honest German friend named Switzer, the other morning, as he came into the office with a puzzled look upon his honest face. "Some time ago," he said, "I pought myseilluff a pig, and he was the funniest pig I ever did see before. He was only a little feller as high as dat, and he vas only steen months olt. I dook dat pig a pail of swill the other day, and py shiminy christians if that little feller didn't drink up the whole pail of swill before you say Shack Robinson. Den he got right up on his hinder legs and he yelled like the devil for more. Just dink of dat, mine friend. Dot pig eats up dot whole pail of swill. Den I took dat little pig and put him in dat same pail where der swill vas from, and with dat pig inside dat pail der pail was only half filled. Dat's vat got der best of me. Dat was one of the mysteries of physics vat I can no how understand."

Then he scratched his head in deep meditation and looked inquiringly. I could give him no satisfaction and he departed no wiser than when he came.

THE IMPENDING CRISIS.

He got a letter out of his box at the post office, which he hurriedly read and indignantly flung on the floor. On second thought he picked it up and placed it in his pocket, but he was still red in the face when a friend queried:

"From your tailor?"

"I wish it was!" was the reply. "No, it's blackmail."

"How?"

"Why, it's from a friend who got married a few years ago. I had an invite to his wedding, and I had to take a present costing twenty-five dollars."

"Of course."

"Then his first anniversary occurred, and it cost me twenty more."

"I've been there, old fel."

"Then he had a boy born, and our set had to whack up on that. I guess he named that cub after at least thirty of us."

"I see."

"Then came his birthday. Then his wife's birthday. Then the second anniversary. Then the cub's birthday."

"Exactly. And now."

"Well, his mother-in-law has come to live with him, and this is an invitation to come around and leave a seven-dollar rocking chair on her sixty-fifth anniversary."

"And you'll go?"

"I'll have to or be ruled out of our set, but I'll have revenge. There's seven of us in the family, and I'll be hanged if we don't go at it and hold an anniversary or something every two weeks for the next ten years."

Woman is not much of a philosopher, but she is proverbially a clothes observer.

To cure hiccough, says Dr. Henry Tucker in the Southern Medical Record, give a little granulated sugar moistened with good vinegar. Give a few grains to an infant, a teaspoonful to a grown-up person. The effect is instantaneous.

W. L. FORCE & A. L. FORCE,
EDITORS AND PROPRIETORS.

A NOBLE PLEDGE.

To faithfully redeem when in office an open pledge made before election is the highest type of political virtue, although, we are sorry to say, it does not receive at the hands of some modern politicians the respect its value clearly demands.

President Cleveland, as a candidate for popular suffrage, promised, if elected, to dedicate himself to the work of establishing good and honest government.

That was the pledge he made to the people.

It was a praiseworthy obligation, because it meditated the accomplishment of a grand purpose, one of the greatest blessings possible to confer upon the people of the United States, and the strongest bulwark of safety for free institutions—a good and honest government.

The President consistently maintains his recorded pledge.

He does not believe in the crooked doctrine that deception is a justifiable political weapon.

He holds that truth and honor should be as sacredly observed in public as in private life.

He dares to do right.

JAIL BIRDS.

Where there is much smoke there must be some fire.

The investigation into the doings of certain Aldermen in the City of New York, a precious set of legislators, reveals beyond reasonable doubt the existence of deep, dark and damaging corruption.

It may be that the Aldermanic thieves, and their fellow conspirators, the Railroad pirates, will escape just punishment. We hope not. Every mother's son of them, whether a bribe taker or a bribe giver, if proven guilty, ought to be forthwith decorated with the striped uniform of Sing Sing.

It is time to politically behead all official rascals, of high or low degree. A long term in State Prison is a fitting penalty for such miscreants, but a more thorough antidote would be for every honest voter in the land to refuse, aye, positively refuse to deposit a ballot for any man, for any office, of any partisan name, unless, after investigation, he is confident that the candidate has been and will continue to be honest and proof positive against temptation, even though a thousand "Sharpers" shake boodle bags in his face.

Put the rascals in jail!

LABOR AND CAPITAL.

There is evidently wide spread discontent among the wage earners of this country at the present time.

Some people are prone to denounce as wrong-doers those hard working men of daily toil who seek to obtain for their own labor what they conceive to be nothing more than a fair living reward.

Are they not justified in looking out for themselves?

If they do not, who will?

There are two sides to the question of labor and capital. It is absurd and wrong to cast censure solely upon the workingman.

He is the artificer of real wealth.

He has rights deserving of respect.

We confidently believe that the laboring classes of the United States, as a body, are neither exorbitant in their demands nor revolutionary in their designs. They simply want honest recompense for services rendered.

If employers would meet them in a spirit of equity and more generally treat them as men, good feeling and mutual benefit would ensue.

Be just and fear not!

An order has been issued from the Post Office Department establishing a new post office at Landing, Morris county, with William E. King, as postmaster. This is the seventh new post office established in the State since February 1st, last.

Alderman Jaehne spent last Monday night in a police cell in New York city, his bondsmen having surrendered him. The Grand Jury having indicted him for bribery. He plead not guilty, but his lawyer immediately obtained permission of the Court to enter another plea.

The wreckers who are at work on the remains of the Oregon have explicit instructions to give no information to the public. Great secrecy is maintained at the Cunard Company's office. Up to this time there has been no active inquiry for a missing coasting schooner and the opinion that the Oregon ran into the wreck of the Hylton Castle is about five per cent. stronger than it was a week ago. Truth is mighty and it cannot be hidden by a few fathoms of water.

The officers of the State Trotting Breeders' Association are as follows: President, A. B. Darling, of Haherah, proprietor of the Fifth Avenue Hotel, New York; J. W. Ballentine, of Somerville, First Vice President; W. H. Force, of Flemington, Second Vice President; Col. E. H. Edwards, of Newark, Secretary; Matthias Plum, of Madison, Treasurer; Executive Committee, J. C. Shaw, Finderne; J. R. Cadogan, Bayonne; Charles Bassini, Irvington; A. V. Sargeant, Raritan; G. F. The leading Democrats in the House have been convinced for some time that no complicated Tariff bill can be passed through the House this session. David A. Wells and other prominent revenue reformers have been in Washington for some time conferring with Messrs. Morrison and Carlisle. It has been practically agreed to propose a simple bill putting lumber, salt and wool on the free list. It is probable that a reduction on all woollen fabrics to 25 per cent. ad valorem will be added to this list. It had been intended to put coal on the free list, but this has been dropped. It has been Mr. Wells's idea, and, in fact, that of the leading revenue reformers, that no more should be attempted than to put a few articles upon the free list. In this way great opposition will be avoided, and the free-trade people will have an opportunity of proving, by a few articles being added to the free list, the beauty of their theory. Mr. Wells expresses himself as well satisfied with the present programme. Mr. Hewitt favors the present plan and thinks that a great point would be accomplished if the House would simply pass a Free Wool bill.

A SOUTH BRANCH FISH BILL.

The following is a copy of a bill to prevent certain kinds of fishing in the South Branch, introduced in the Senate by Senator Thompson, of Somerville. It has passed the Senate and certainly should be killed in the House:

A Supplement to an act entitled "An act for the better protection of fish in the Raritan river and its tributaries," approved March 17, 1886.

1. Be it enacted by the Senate and General Assembly of the State of New Jersey, That from and after the passage of this act it shall be lawful for any person or persons to take fish from the South Branch of the Raritan river with net, seine, fyke, trap, or set line; provided, however, that no net or seine drawn through the said stream exceeding the length of twelve feet shall have a smaller mesh than one inch; and provided, further, that it shall not be lawful to draw any net or seine in said stream from the first day of May to the first of August, the period known as the spawning season.

2. And be it enacted, That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

3. And be it enacted, That this act shall take effect immediately.

SENATE NO. 177.

The following bill introduced by Senator Livingston passed the Senate last week. It is intended to apply to Plainfield particularly:

An Act for the relief of incorporated fire departments in this State.

1. Be it enacted by the Senate and General Assembly of the State of New Jersey, That whenever any incorporated fire department of this State is limited to raising in any one year for the purposes of the department any definite sum, such sum may be increased by the governing body of such department, whenever in their judgment the public necessities shall require such increase, to a sum not exceeding the rate of twenty-five (25) cents of each and every one hundred dollars of the value of the real and personal property in the place where such department shall exercise its power, such valuation to be determined as the same appears on the assessor's books of such place for the last preceding year, and such increased sum shall be assessed and collected in the same manner as the original and limited amount.

2. And be it enacted, That all acts and parts of acts, general and special, inconsistent with this act, be and the same are hereby repealed.

3. And be it enacted, That this act shall take effect immediately.

The Reading Railroad Reconstruction Trustees have completed the plan of reorganization, and have sent it out for signatures.

Gov. Stoneman, of California, has appointed George Hearst, U. S. Senator, vice John P. Miller, deceased. Mr. Hearst is now in the City of Mexico. It is stated he will proceed directly to Washington without returning home.

Secretary Manning dislocated his right ankle on Tuesday last at Washington. He was returning from the Cabinet meeting and while ascending the steps of the Treasury Department he slipped and fell heavily. His right foot was turned and dislocated. He had to be lifted into a carriage and taken home. Dr. Lincoln was sent for and he pronounced the injury to the ankle to be of a character to keep the Secretary indoors for a few days at least.

The Supreme Court at Washington has rendered a decision in the Mackin-Gallagher case that the crimes charged against the defendants are infamous within the meaning of the Constitution, and the defendants cannot be held to answer in the Courts of the United States otherwise than by a presentation of indictment by a grand jury. Among other decisions rendered was the following: No. 148. The inhabitants of the township of New Providence, New Jersey, plaintiffs, in error, versus Abraham Halsey. In error to the Circuit Court, United States for the districts of New Jersey. Judgment reversed with costs and cause remanded for further proceedings to be had there not inconsistent with the opinion of this Court. Opinion by Chief Justice Waite.

One of the wolf-bitten Russians who recently went to Paris and were treated by M. Pasteur to prevent rabies, died Monday night in great agony, with all the symptoms of hydrophobia. The Russians, nineteen in number, arrived in Paris and were placed under Pasteur's care on March 15. They were Mujiks, and all had been attacked by mad wolves and terribly lacerated. Pasteur willingly undertook to treat them and at once placed them in his hospital. The man who died Monday night had been carefully operated upon and regularly inoculated with virus twice in every twenty-four hours since he arrived. His terrible death, with all the symptoms of hydrophobia in its worst form, has operated as a serious check to public confidence in the effectiveness of Pasteur's discovery. The first positive indications that the patient's system was resisting the treatment manifested themselves on Sunday after the Mujik had been in the hospital only five days and had been inoculated more than half a dozen times. He soon afterwards became the victim of the most terrible suffering, and this seemed to increase hourly up to the time of death, which occurred while the man was mad and wild with physical torture. The corpse has been removed to Pasteur's laboratory, where it will be made the subject of experiment by the scientist. M. Pasteur is much annoyed by the unfavorable comments caused by this failure of his method, but he insists that it establishes nothing.

Governor Abbett has again shown his wisdom and sagacity in appointments. On Tuesday last he reappointed William R. Wilson Prosecutor of the Pleas of Union county. Mr. Wilson was appointed Prosecutor by Gov. Ludlow during his administration and has most ably filled the position since. In reappointing him Gov. Abbett has met the wishes of a large majority of the county's citizens. Congressman Green is a warm friend of Mr. Wilson.

Constable Herman Liebenthal, of Eatontown, N. J., has been arrested on a charge of manslaughter. He had charge of Mingo Jack on the night of the lynching, and, it is charged, did not take care of his prisoner. Constable Liebenthal arrested Mingo Jack and asserted that he would not be surprised if the negro should be lynched by a mob. Other warrants are out and several arrests are hourly expected. The story that Angie Herbert had said that she was sure that it was Mingo Jack who assaulted her is denied by the Coroner.

THE LEGISLATURE.

The Governor's veto of the Chase bill came before the Senate on Wednesday of last week. The measure passed by the following vote:

YEAS—Brinkerhoff, Carter, Chase, Chattle, Cramner, Gardner, Griggs, Herring, Large, Livingston, McBride, Moon, Pancoast and Thompson—14.

NAYS—Bogert, Fish, Miller, Nichols, Vanderbilt and Youngblood—6.

ABSENT—Hanes.

In the House on Monday evening last, a motion to suspend the rules was carried and the veto message was then read. Mr. Parker took the floor against the veto and in advocacy of the bill. Mr. Gourley opposed it and Mr. Besson spoke in its favor. After further remarks by Mr. Hudspeth, against the bill, it was passed over the veto by the following vote:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcott, Armstrong, Banks, Beckwith, Besson, Budd, Condit, Dayton, Gangewer, Harrigan, Hughes, Hutchinson, Jewett, Kinney, Leuson, Martin A. F. S., Martin John, McDonald, Norwood, Oesterberg, Parker, Peal, Pearson, Pesloubet, Roe, Scheele, Schmedder, Seymour, Smith, Taylor, Ten Broeck, Throckmorton, Titus, Tunnilty, Underhill, Van Buskirk, Vandenbergh, Wills, Winton—39.

NAYS—Messrs. Ardwine, Baird, Bolton, Chamberlain, Corbin, Doremus, Drake, Gourley, Hedreth, Hudspeth, Low, Vetterlein, Whitaker, Wolverton—15.

ABSENT—Messrs. Hyer, Lister, Noonan, Pfeiffer, Pintard, Lawrence—6.

The most important feature of the Assembly on Tuesday was the passage of the Capitol Rebuilding bill by a vote of 37 to 6. The bill appropriates $225,000 and will pass the Senate without trouble. The following other bills passed the House: Increasing the pay of the enrolling clerks in the Chancery office from two to three cents per folio; prohibiting the transportation of dynamite or other explosive on trains carrying passengers; allowing investments of the State school fund in certain city bonds. The repealer of the familiar Five County act was defeated, as also a bill permitting persons to become attorney and counsellor at the same time. Several bills were introduced, but none of general interest. The Senate passed the following bills Tuesday evening. Senate 180, providing additional buildings for the Trenton Lunatic Asylum. House 321, conferring additional powers on borough governments or commissioners in the way of appointing regular and special policemen. House 34, making it unlawful for cities to issue bonds, so long as they are in default in the payment of past due bonds or the interest thereon, or county or State tax. House 39, allowing Mayor and Councils in boroughs to appoint a Justice to try violations of local ordinances.

Rules For Guessing Weather.

1. When the temperature falls suddenly there is a storm forming south of you.

2. When the temperature rises suddenly there is a storm north of you.

3. The wind always blows from a region of fair weather toward a region where a storm is forming.

4. Cirrus clouds always move from a region where a storm is in progress to a region of fair weather.

5. Cumulus clouds always move from a region of fair weather to a region where a storm is forming.

6. Where cirrus clouds are moving rapidly from the north or northeast, there will be rain inside of twenty-four hours, no matter how cold it is.

7. When cirrus clouds are moving rapidly from the south or southeast, there will be a cold rain storm on the morrow; if it be winter there will be a snow storm.

8. The wind always blows in a circle around a storm, and when it blows from the north, the heaviest rain is east of you; if it blows from the south the heaviest rain is west of you; if it blows from the east the heaviest rain is south of you; if it blows from the west the heaviest rain is north of you.

9. The wind never blows unless rain or snow is falling within 1,000 miles of you.

10. Whenever heavy white frost occurs, a storm is forming within 1,000 miles north or northeast of you.

Cirrus clouds are those which have a thin, streaming look, sometimes appearing like hair or carded wool, and sometimes like a brush or broom. They are the highest of all the clouds. Cumulus clouds are those which appear in round, rolling masses, piled one above another, and sometimes looking like great mountains topped with snow.

Frederic Archer, the distinguished musical critic, is not altogether favorably impressed with the recent production of "Lakme" by the American Opera Company. In the course of an elaborate critique in The Keynote Mr. Archer says: "The oriental character of the music throughout, although at first singularly captivating, becomes somewhat monotonous and cloying by constant repetition, and for this reason it is unlikely the opera will ever attain permanent popularity. Spoken dialogue is superseded in every case by accompanied recitative of more or less merit, but its adoption is to be commended. The general performance of the work by those on the stage did not rise above the amateur level, save in one or two occasional instances, and there was a mechanical constraint everywhere discernible.

The Public Library and Art Gallery.

MESSRS. EDITORS:

To correct the somewhat general misapprehension regarding the hours when this institution is accessible to the public, permit me to say that the Library is open from 9.30 a. m. to 12.30 p. m., from 2 to 6 p. m., and from 7.30 to 9 p. m. The Art Gallery is open during daylight of the same hours. To this department some very beautiful water colors, and a set of proof engravings of Coles' famous "Voyage of Life" have recently been added. Upon our shelves there are now nearly 1,200 volumes accessible for reference, and others will be added at the rate of about two hundred a week. Those now accessible include the best dictionaries, encyclopedias, etc., as many choice works in art, history, science, and theology. Works in other departments will be procured as rapidly as is practicable, literature, fiction and juvenilies coming last, as they cannot well be added until the circulating department is ready to go into operation. By gift of Mr. John W. Murray we have just received twelve of the large volumes of the Census Reports of 1880, which for the present must be applied for to the librarian. Besides the books mentioned we take seven of the New York dailies, all the Plainfield papers, a good assortment of weeklies and many of the best periodicals, both American and English.

A Just Cause for Complaint.

MESSRS. EDITORS:—I am not one of those unreasonable men who expect impossibilities at the hands of Common Councils or other governing bodies, neither will I ever be found a public fault-finder unless sound reasons exist therefor, and my duty as a citizen forbids silence.

If I understand the chief purpose of a municipality like that of Plainfield, it is to advance the general public welfare, and with the promptness and impartial judgment, protect the property of the people from harm, and as fully as the city's financial ability will allow. For that end taxes are levied and collected. Are they publicly disbursed according to contract? I fear not always, as a case now in mind, I think, plainly shows. It is this:—

The residents along Front street, near Farragut road, are annoyed and damaged by every heavy rain fall, because of a flow of water from towards Cole's hill flooding, their sidewalks, yards and lawns. It is certainly an aggravated nuisance, and one which could be readily prevented by the city's making a pipe or other drain into Green Brook, a natural outlet, at an expense of probably not more than two hundred dollars.

Those inundated residents of Front street are among the largest taxpayers of Plainfield, some of them, as such, handing over to the Collector hundreds of dollars annually, besides contributing liberally out of their own pockets for lights, police protection and street improvements, one of them, to my personal knowledge, having last year paid for repairs on Front street a sum nearly equal to the cost of ridding his and other property of the before mentioned flood nuisance. They have respectfully petitioned the present Common Council for relief, yet no practical attention appears to be accorded them, and, consequently, they very properly feel chagrined. I submit that such neglect is an inflicted wrong upon a number of our most worthy citizens, and hope Councilmen will at their next meeting cause justice to be done by ordering that the request of the petitioners be immediately carried into effect.

A FRIEND OF RIGHT.

SCOTCH PLAINS SCRATCHINGS.

Bill Foster saw a bluebird, and immediately made tracks for greener fields and pastures new.

Mr. Clark, who now occupies the Richie place, has commenced the manufacture of family soap. His factory is located across the road from his house.

The Brown residence which was partially consumed by the recent fire, has been neatly repaired by two of our village mechanics, Phil and Sam Badis.

The horse sale at Brittin's was largely attended. Many of our townsmen had the good luck to purchase animals that suited them to a "dincktum."

The high winds on Sunday night blew the gable end out of Jack Lambert's house. Jack and his wife was sleeping at the time within about ten feet of the afore mentioned gable. Jack says it was a "close call."

All the sports are agog, anxiously waiting for the road to get in order, so they can witness the great trot between Allen's horse "Young Careless," and Harris' "Brighton Boy." The course is to be from Daniel's hill to the Liberty pole. The stakes are for two boxes of "German influence."

The Township Committee of Fanwood held a meeting in Excelsior Hall, on Wednesday, March 17, 1886. Present—Messrs. Miller, Kyte and Terry. The board was organized by electing George Kyte, Chairman, and L. W. Miller, Treasurer. It was voted that the Treasurer's salary for ensuing year be $25. Treasurer reported balance on hand $642.26. Messrs. Jackson and Codington were retained as Township Counsel for ensuing year. Mr. Miller was appointed committee to see Township Counsel, relative to leasing McLaunahan & Kessby's property, and to take such action as he deems best for the interest of township. Certificates of road district meetings as follows were received and their action confirmed: Road district, No. 8, Wm. N. Pangborn, overseer, $200, special tax; road district No. 5, Jacob D. French, overseer; road district No. 6, Isaac Lambert, overseer; road district No. 2, Hezekiah Hand, overseer, $1,000 special tax; road district No. 1, F. Hosinger, overseer, $600 special tax. Official bond of Levi Darby, overseer of the poor, received and approved. The following bills were ordered paid: Edward Miller, inspector of election, $6.00; Wm. L. Force & Bro., printing, $40.45; Wm. N. Pangborn, recording tax certificate, $1.50; Joseph Clark, judge of election, $6; N. Dunn, town clerk, $7.50. Applications for licenses to keep inns and taverns were presented by and granted to John Flannery and B. Brittin. The Township Committee rented for all township purposes, rooms of Excelsior Hook & Ladder Co. No. 1, from April 8, 1886 to April 8, 1887, at an annual rent of $50. Mr. Hezekiah Hand was appointed Constable of Fanwood Township, to fill vacancy caused by failure or neglect to elect a Constable at the election of Township officers in the year 1885. Adjourned to March 27, 1886, at 4.30 p. m.

Two suggestive articles to appear in the April Century are "Strikes, Lockouts and Arbitrations," by George May Powell, and an editorial on The Grant Memorial, —"Who shall make the Monument?" "What kind of a Structure?" "The question of Style," etc. The issue of the new life of Longfellow adds timeliness to a paper by Mrs. James T. Fields, on "Glimpses of Longfellow in Social Life," which is to appear in the same number, accompanying a new portrait of the poet, engraved from an ambrotype taken in 1848.

WESTFIELD WISPS.

The children held a sociable on Monday evening in the temperance rooms on Broad street.

Mr. Ludlow V. Clark, of Clark street, left on Tuesday last on a business trip through the Southern States.

The P. & R. Railroad company are laying a substantial plank walk in the Park, on the south side of the railroad.

Mr. Henry E. Thompson, of Westfield avenue, has rented his house to Mr. Wm. F. Thode, of New York city. Mr. Thompson and wife expect to go to Europe the present summer.

The death of Dr. E. V. Stryker, who formerly resided in our town, occurred at Morris Plains Asylum, on Friday morning last. His funeral took place from the residence of J. Warren Brown, Clark street, on Monday last. Interment in Fairview Cemetery.

The dwelling house of Mrs. M. Gibbons, on Fourth avenue, was entered on Sunday morning last by burglars. The lower floor was ransacked; the silverware was placed upon a table but nothing was taken. The same night the dwelling house of Frank Brumer, on Westfield avenue, was entered, but the thieves, before they had a chance to get anything, were frightened away. This makes four times within two weeks that houses have been entered in our town. There is no doubt professional men are doing it.

The Town Committee met at the Town Rooms on Wednesday afternoon, March 24, at 4.30 p. m. Present—J. L. Miller, E. Embree and K. Tompkins. L. M. Whitaker, Clerk. Minutes of last meeting read and approved. The Clerk reported the election of the road overseers for the several road districts, a list of which was published in last week's CONSTITUTIONALIST. There being no election in road districts No's 6, 9, 11 and 14, the committee appointed the following persons: No. 6, Geo. Campbell; No. 9, Augustus K. Gale; No. 11, G. B. Ripley; No. 14, Chas. R. Clark. The bonds of David T. Pierson, Collector, $15,000; John M. C. Marsh and G. H. Koester, Constables, $500; E. Embree, Treasurer, $1,500, and Hiram L. Fink, Overseer of Poor, $500, were received and accepted and ordered placed on file. The annual report of James T. Pierson, Chosen Freeholder, was received and ordered placed on file. Mr. Frank Bergen was voted to be Township Counsel for the ensuing year.

Surface Indications
What a miner would very properly term "surface indications" of what is beneath, are the Pimples, Sties, Sore Eyes, Boils, and Cutaneous Eruptions with which people are annoyed in spring and early summer. The effete matter accumulated during the winter months, now makes its presence felt, through Nature's endeavors to expel it from the system. While it remains, it is a poison that festers in the blood and may develop into Scrofula. This condition causes derangement of the digestive and assimilatory organs, with a feeling of enervation, languor, and weariness—often lightly spoken of as "only spring fever." These are evidences that Nature is not able, unaided, to throw off the corrupt atoms which weaken the vital force. To regain health, Nature must be aided by a thorough blood-purifying medicine; and nothing else is so effective as
Ayer's Sarsaparilla,
which is sufficiently powerful to expel from the system even the taint of Hereditary Scrofula.
The medical profession indorse AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, and many attestations of the cures effected by it come from all parts of the world. It is, in the language of the Hon. Francis Jewett, ex-State Senator of Massachusetts and ex-Mayor of Lowell, "the only preparation that does real, lasting good."

MR. T. S. [illegible] of East Front street has leased the Cadmus residence on La Grande avenue at the corner of Washington street.

AND now Dunellen is a Borough and will have paved streets, police officers, flagstone sidewalks and lamps—just like North Plainfield.

THE Muhlenberg has recently received from the First Baptist the sum of $50, the amount of a "hospital collection" among its members.

A LIVE horse, all the way from Minnesota by express, was received in good order, recently, consigned to J. Evarts Tracy, esq., of this city.

CORPORATION COUNSEL J. H. JACKSON of North Plainfield has left for a hurried trip, professionally, to the most Northwest corner of the state of Iowa.

THE death was announced last week of the aged mother of Messrs. J. Frank and Joseph A. Hubbard, the Freeholder of Union county and the Assessor of this city, respectively.

YOU residents and property owners, trim the shade trees along your sidewalks before the foliage is all out. And you Street Commissioner, see that the ordinance in this relation is complied with.

THOSE who expect "the flowers that bloom in the spring, tra la," to be here next week, forget that it snowed in Plainfield on April 23d and 29th of last year. During the latter day the storm continued for five hours.

THE remains of the five deceased children of the late Dr. and Mrs. Burlingham, are to be removed from their present resting place in an Eastern state and placed by the side of the father who was so recently buried.

AFTER a week's stay in this city with much financial success, the proprietors of the "World Clock" purchased a team and wagon for $115 and departed for New Brunswick. They won't find dimes so plenty in that embezzled city.

ABOUT threescore and ten of the lately converted at the colored revival meetings that have been held in this city, were baptised by immersion, in the Seventh Day Baptist church, last Sunday afternoon. A large audience was present upon the interesting and novel occasion.

IT is the desire of many of those how have the matter in charge, that the new organ for the Crescent avenue church should be built somewhat lower than the old one so as not to hide more than is necessary of the elegant stained-glass window back of the instrument.

STORM clouds have obscured the skies and the city has been in total darkness during the recent nights of full moon. What a blessing if the electric light was in operation and the orders of those in authority could have flooded our streets with light at no additional expense.

THE ladies of Grace church are arranging a grand fair to be held in The Crescent, as that building has been secured for the purpose. It will take place during the third week in May, and is to eclipse all previous attempts of the Grace church people or the efforts of others.

THE New Brunswick Home News has the proper idea of Griggs' bill to muzzle the press. It says: "That any editor knows better what is decent to put in his paper than legislation can teach him. If he does not, the community in which he publishes will not be long in letting him know his mistake."

MR. WILLIAM H. BROWER has been nominated to succeed himself as a member of the Board of Fire Commissioners, and William H. McClure, Esq., has been nominated to fill the vacancy caused by the expiration of the term of Commissioner Morris. The election takes place Monday, April 12th.

THE Plainfield Bicycle Club's new house to be erected on Sycamore street, is to be furnished with open fireplaces and a billiard table, donated by one of its members. The estimates are all in, and the contracts for the work were given out at once so as to avoid all delay in the completion of the building.

THE 11 50 train from this city to Trenton, Tuesday noon, carried a car load of Plainfield dignitaries and firemen on their way to the Halls of Legislature, to labor for or against the proposed bill to change the nature of the Fire Department and its control. The bill is unfair and will never be enacted as it now provides.

MISS L. ADAMS, milliner, having returned from her visit among friends at Toledo, Ohio, will display a fine line of new Spring goods at her establishment, No. 42 West Front street, this week. Mrs. Adams' has excellent taste, and the ladies of our city will no doubt visit her in scores to admire her bright new goods.

IT is probable that The Crescent will open for a season about the first of next month. A fine band will be selected, and everything for pleasure of its patrons presented. The rates of admission are to be the same except in the matter of commutation tickets—more admissions for a dollar being allowed, and also a like arrangement regarding floor permits.

THE funeral services upon the burial of the late Dr. Burlingham, last Saturday, were most impressive, the display of flowers was extensive and elegant, and the large attendance of private citizens, city officials, and members of the Masonic and Grand Army orders, Muhlenberg Staff and Union County Medical Association, to which the deceased had belonged, testified the esteem in which he was held.

SOME of the employees of the Scott Printing Machine Works struck for higher wages on Monday and still remain out of work, because they won't submit to any scale in a readjustment of the wages. Mr. Scott is said to be perfectly willing to increase the pay of any whose labors are worthy or skilled enough to make such advance just, but he refuses to submit to demands that he shall pay the bad and the good alike whenever ordered so to do by his employees.

THERE is to be a prominent revivalist at Reform Hall, during the coming week.

THE Grace church congregation is now holding its Lenten and regular services in the remodelled church.

THE business of H. S. Barnes on East Front street is being closed up on account of financial embarassment.

JAKE, the colored valet of Gazelle engine company No. 1, has returned to the city after an absence of some months.

POSTMASTER Force received his commission on Friday of last week. He takes possession of the office April 1st.

F. C. GREEN has secured the services of Mr. Samuel Dean of Boston, who will take full charge of his upholstering and carpet departments.

THE North Plainfield public school will close to-day to re-open Monday, April 5, thus giving the scholars a chance to "help the folks move."

M. UNDAL, who received the contract for grading about the grounds of the new public school building, is doing the necessary work in a commendable manner.

THE Court has confirmed the recent sale of the Casino rink to Mr. John Cameron, and that gentleman will probably reopen the same about the first of April.

MR JOHN WALKER has left Plainfield for an extended sea voyage into the waters of milder climates, hoping, as his friends hope, that renewed health may result.

ONE of its large printing machines was shipped from the Scott Works, Monday, and others are being rapidly constructed to fill the many advance orders of this successful firm.

THE Metuchen Inquirer says at the revival meeting held at the Presbyterian church last Thursday evening, those present were addressed by the Rev. J. Willis, of Plainfield.

MR. J. FRANK MUNDY has accepted the position of General Manager of the Plainfield District Telegraph and Fire Alarm Company, and the local branch of the B. & O. Telegraph Company.

SUBSCRIPTIONS towards the furnishing of the Job Male Public Library and Art Gallery, are being called in. If the trustees have "got you on the list," don't be backward in coming forward.

EVERY afternoon and evening next week—except Thursday evening—at 3:30 and 7:30 o'clock, Major Hilton will conduct gospel temperance meetings in Reform Hall under the auspices of the W. C. T. U.

IT was proposed to have a "Mikado" table at the coming fair of Grace church, in The Crescent, May 18th and 19th. But a tall member of the congregation justly remarked that "that" would be a chestnut. Yes, or a Ko-Ko nut.

T. J. GILLIES, auctioneer, will sell on the premises at the corner of LaGrande avenue and Washington street, Tuesday morning of next week, commencing at ten o'clock, a quantity of household furniture, carpets and kitchen utensils.

NEXT Monday, at two o'clock p. m., the house and lot formerly known as the St. Mary's church rectory, at the corner of Fourth and Liberty streets, will be sold at auction. A chance to secure a desirable residence property, is thus presented.

MR. JOHN DUNNING of North Plainfield has given up a residence of very many years in the Borough, and said good bye to his host of friends. He has yielded at last to the earnest desires of his son and daughter, and will for the future live with them, in Brooklyn.

THE North Plainfield township committee held an adjourned meeting on Tuesday evening and accepted the several bonds of Treasurer Gardner, Collector Spencer, and Constables Weaver and McDonald. Dr. M. B. Long was chosen Township Physician, and the oath of office was administered to a number of the recently elected.

CITIZENS everywhere demand it, and we want it here. Just now Easton is greatly interested over the way its streets should be lighted. A Com. of its Council has been roaming over the country viewing different electric light systems and made its report recently. It is altogether likely that the whole borough will be lighted with electricity before long.

THE new Republican daily paper in Elizabeth, of which so much that is incorrect has been written and extensively circulated, is not started yet by any means—not even the means of ex-Congressman Kean and others. Neither is it expected that Mr. E. O. Chamberlin (late of the Bulletin) nor Mr. Winfield Angleman of this city, will be concerned in its management.

TO omit all mention of the faithful services of Mr. F. H. Gardner in bringing about the success and high standing of the North Plainfield public school, betrays the ignorance or malice of any who would praise Messrs. McGee and Carroll alone, although justly deserving their own share of the credit. Principal Boss' earnest labor towards such end should not be ignored, either.

WE trust our readers will forgive us for devoting so much of our space to the recent attempt to secure an enactment by the Legislature affecting so unfairly the rights of our firemen and the best interests of the city. A reading of our presentation of the facts of this matter will show all how they are concerned and how they would be affected, and will open the eyes of all as to the manners of some men.

THERE was a leak somewhere in the gas pipes of Sheriff Stiles' elegant new building on Front street, Thursday morning, which was discovered by the plumber who entered the front room of the second story with his torch, blew out the plate glass windows and tore down a big piece of the ceiling. The plaster walls in other parts of the building were cracked slightly by the explosion, but the plumber escaped with no damage.

THE legal fraternity of this city met in the office of Messrs. Suydam & Stillman, Tuesday evening, for the purpose of considering the formation of a Bar Association of the City of Plainfield. Mayor Van Winkle was chosen Chairman and Walter L. Hetfield, Esq., Secretary. The necessity and justice of such an organization was felt to be proper by all. A schedule of rates and fees for office business will eventually be agreed to.

AN evening social was tendered Miss Lillie A. Force, at her parents' residence, No. 38 Duer street, North Plainfield, Friday evening last, the event being in honor of her birthday. The large number of friends present enjoyed themselves in dancing to excellent music furnished by Prof. Frase, and other social intercourse, until the approach of morning's small hours warned the merry visitors to cease their enjoyable pleasures and retire to their homes. The Committee under whose management the Social was made so successful, were Fred. H. Dunn, Minnie L. Force, John L. Force, Emma U. King.

ARTICLES of Incorporation were filed at the office of the County Clerk, recently, of the "Live Stock Car and Equipment Co." whose incorporators are Messrs. Charles Matthews, Peter B. Matthews and B. A. Hegeman, Jr., of this city. This company has been engaged in the manufacture of cars for the transportation of live stock, for some time, and many of its cars are now in use on Western roads with entire satisfaction to shippers. The filing of the papers as spoken of above, was merely a legal process necessary for the organization of the company in this section of the country. No cars will be built here, however.

Preparing For a Model Jail.

Director Martine and Freeholders Vanderbeek and Oliver of the Union County Board, will visit next week the Moyamensing Prison, the pride of Pennsylvania and the model jail of the country, to inspect its ways and methods, comforts and conveniences. Our county officials have in view the construction of a new jail under their rule, and propose to avail themselves of the experience and judgment of others, and adopt such features as have proved desirable and necessary.

"Uncle Josh" at Music Hall.

Next Tuesday evening at Music Hall, Mr. Denman Thompson will again appear and delight a large audience, undoubtedly, in his great play of "Joshua Whitcomb." That no more pleasing, entertaining and amusing comedy has ever been presented the public, is proven by its success wherever given, and a treat is in store for those who attend its representation. Mr. Thompson is supported this year by a much stronger company than is generally the case with, so called, one part plays.

The Weather.

Friday afternoon of last week the tinkling of the telephone bell in THE CONSTITUTIONALIST office announced the coming of the first thunder storm of the year, and an equinoctial set in that lasted for two days. Last year the first thunder storm arrived on April 28th, so by this sign alone, the Spring of '86 is more than a month in advance of that of '85. The sun has crossed the line and everybody is impatient for Summer, and, although much cold and disagreeable weather is yet to be experienced, the promise of the hammock and picnic season is good.

Tribute of Respect.

The Union Court of Common Pleas, Judges McCormick, Hyer and Harper on the bench, opened at the usual hour Wednesday morning, whereupon Prosecutor Wilson arose and after a few well-timed remarks moved, as a token of respect to William B. Maxson, an esteemed member of the bar of New Jersey, that the Court do now adjourn. Judge McCormick responded in fitting terms and ordered an immediate adjournment. The Bar Association then convened in the Court Room and adopted appropriate resolutions relative to the death of Mr. Maxson, its late President.

A Seventh-Day Donation.

The young folk and the old folk of the Seventh-Day Baptist church, made an evening call upon their pastor Thursday evening of last week, and filled his house with bright faces, merry laughter and the warmth of true friendship. There were refreshments and lots of fun, but the main feature of interest to congregation and pastor alike, was the presentation to the latter by the former of a volume of "Helps Over Hard Places," with steel plate illustrations by "Uncle Sam." The outside of the book, except for its "hand-painted" title, looked very much like a blotter, but between each of the inside leaves was a crisp bank note that, added one to another, reached a total of $130. Dr. Lewis was so surprised that he handed the gift over to his better half.

The Borough To Be Permanently Illuminated.

The Plainfield Electric Light Company will petition the Borough Council at their next meeting for permission to erect poles and wires for the purpose of lighting Washington Park, Somerset and Duer streets by electricity with the celebrated Thomson-Houston system. Twenty-five arc lights will be paid for by private subscription. We understand that only a dozen more subscribers are needed to complete the amount required for the Washington Park lights, and that Somerset and Duer streets are progressing so favorably that the Company deem it advisable to petition the Council without any further delay, as many of the residents of the Park are getting impatient and some threaten to withdraw their subscription unless something is done at once. Judging from the locations selected for the lights the Borough will be beautifully illuminated.

Jersey Art.

We would respectfully but earnestly call the attention of Mr. Anthony Comstock to the supplement issued by the Elizabeth Herald, on Saturday of last week. The pictures of the county officials therein contained—either executed with the editor's little hatchet, or the devil's shooting stick—will so incite the gentlemen so grossly libelled, to profanity, that the publication is really immoral, per se. The "artist's" doom, should he ever stand up before Judges McCormick, Harper and Heyer to be sentenced, we shudder to think of, and should they "make the punishment fit the crime," death awaits him. The County Prosecutor looks as if he had been run through a stone crusher, the Sheriff's right eye gazes heavenward in agony, the County Clerk's mouth has slipped around under his off ear, the Surrogate has the mumps, a two-shilling electro of President Cleveland is used for a picture of Chief Keron, and the "bench," from Judge Harper with one ear to Judge Hyer with one eye, could discount any cat at frightening away the rats should you hang the supplement in your cellar.

Death of Ex-Mayor William B. Maxson.

Less than three weeks ago, the Hon. Wm. B. Maxson, ex-Mayor of this city, left Plainfield to search in the milder climate of Florida for the good health that he had lost long since. Last Friday a telegram was sent Mrs. Dr. Wells—Mr. Maxson's sister—by Mr. C. B. Rogers, formerly of this city, stating that her brother was dead. The deceased's journey had increased his illness, and upon reaching the residence of Mr. Rogers the verdict of attendant physicians there had induced that gentleman to send for Mrs. Maxson. Being in the midst of preparation for removing to another place of residence, she had sent word that unless absolutely necessary she would not leave Plainfield until later—but an answer was received to come at once. Mrs. Maxson left this city so as to arrive in Jacksonville the day after her husband's death, and returned with the remains Tuesday.

The deceased had been Mayor of Plainfield, was President of the Reform Club League of the State, and the Union County Bar Association, and a Past Master of Jerusalem Lodge of Masons. He came to this city in 1874 and was the partner of Mayor Van Winkle of North Plainfield from February 1875 to April 1883. In his official positions among the members of his profession, and in society, church and social circles, he was universally respected and esteemed.

The funeral took place on Wednesday from the house at 2:30, p. m., followed by services at the Seventh Day Baptist church at three o'clock. The pall-bearers were Mayor J. H. Van Winkle, Dr. T. H. Tomlinson, and Messrs. C. E. Tyler, J. H. Cuthbert, N. Runyon and J. H. French. The attendance was unusually large and included the prominent residents and officials of the city, the members of the legal profession of the county and scores of other friends.

THE cost of manufacturing steel has been so reduced in England by the Bessemer process that steel ships can now be built at the same price as iron ones.

NOW is the time to buy fertilizers, and Mr. John A. Thickstun has the most complete variety in the city. There is guano for wheat, and dissolved ammoniated bone for all purposes; superphosphate of lime, Lehigh phosphate and guano for all crops. Try them.

A Bountiful Fee.

There was a large crowd gathered in the lecture room of the Methodist church, Thursday evening of last week, and a meeting of unusual enthusiasm. The occasion was to some extent a "farewell benefit" to the Rev. A. H. Tuttle, who for the past three years has been the beloved pastor of the Methodist flock of this city. There were present besides the members of Mr. Tuttle's congregation, hosts of his friends of other denominations, and the Revs. Richards, Yerkes, Raymond and Hurlbut. Vocal and instrumental music, added to speeches by the orators present, and refreshments later, closed an evening enjoyable in all respects save its memories of a pastor's farewell. During the evening, Mr. James McGee, that Prince of Laymen, presented the Rev. Mr. Tuttle in behalf of the church whose individual members had made such presentation possible, a check for $500.

Tribute of the Bar.

The following is the tribute paid by the Plainfield Bar Association to the late W. B. Maxson:

When the ties of affection which have bound a fellow-man to us have been sundered by death, and especially when he who has departed this life has left a memory characterized by noble deeds, and fragrant with high motives and noble impulses, it is fitting that we who remain should testify our appreciation of the life which has closed, and our sorrow at the loss which we are called upon to sustain.

And whereas it has pleased our Heavenly Father in his infinite wisdom to summon from our midst our friend and associate William B. Maxson,

And whereas our departed friend possessed those traits of character which fitted him for the high positions which he attained in both his professional and social relations, which made him self-sacrificing in his zeal to do good to others, and which endeared him to all with whom he came in contact, therefore

Resolved, That we the members of the Plainfield Bar Association, while bowing in submission to the will of Him, "who doeth all things well," do hereby express our sorrow at the departure of one who was an ornament to his profession, an opponent to corruption and vice, an honest man, and a true friend. As such, we shall ever revere his memory.

Resolved, That these resolutions be published in the city papers, and a copy thereof be forwarded to the family of the deceased.

Of Importance to the Ladies.

At just this time and season, the ladies are planning and consulting one another, and reading the fashion notes and wondering over the depths of their husband's pocket books and the extent of their own finances, preparatory to ordering new suits for Spring wear and indoor toilets for the full-dress entertainments and evening receptions that begin at once upon the closing of Lent. A visit to the city shows them the latest materials of all colors and qualities, but every lady of taste knows that upon the make, and the trimming, and the finish and the set of the costume, depends its success as a stylish garment. After years of long and extended experience in New York and a thorough acquaintance with the French styles of trimming, combination of colors and the art of draping, Mrs. A. E. Andrews has established rooms at No. 11 West Second street, where all desiring the proper cut and style of make-up will find her ready to advise, consult and carry out the wishes of those who may patronize her. This lady comes to this city highly recommended, and a trial of her taste and ability will prove whether she is worthy to command the endorsement of the ladies of Plainfield who are so particular as to the perfection of their dresses.

Resolutions of the Muhlenberg Staff.

Muhlenberg Hospital is called upon to mourn the loss by death of another member of its medical staff. Again are we warned of the uncertainty of life. While we acknowledge the wisdom of Providence, who ordereth all things well, we cannot but grieve at our affliction and lament the loss of the skillful and valuable services of our late colleague and friend, Dr. H. D. Burlingham. In testimony of his worth and of our personal esteem, be it

Resolved, That in the death of Dr. Burlingham, Muhlenberg Hospital loses one who was ardently interested in its founding, and who has served the institution with a fidelity prompted by an earnest, professional and personal zeal for its welfare.

Resolved, That we hereby express our deep sorrow for the loss of one of our most talented and efficient members.

Resolved, That we will attend his funeral in a body, and that a copy of this minute be sent to his bereaved companion, with an assurance of our heartfelt sympathy in her affliction.

Resolved, That these proceedings be published in the Plainfield papers.

Building and Loan Association.

The annual meeting of the Plainfield Building and Loan Association was held in Cutter's Hall, Monday evening last, with a large attendance of members. The Secretary presented a statement of business transactions for the year ending Feb. 22, 1886, as audited by a committee of the Board of Directors—Messrs. P. S. Runyon, B. F. Coriell and J. P. Homan, and which showed the Association to be in a sound and prosperous condition, the net assets, securely invested, amounting to $29,516.68. Certain proposed amendments to the Constitution were duly considered and adopted by a majority vote of the 1,016 shares outstanding, Mr. W. R. Codington acting as teller. The principal amendment was as follows:

"Any member in arrears on unborrowed shares because of non-payment of monthly dues for the period of six months or over, shall be refunded by order of the Board of Directors the amount paid to the Association on shares so held by him or her, with interest at the rate of four per cent per annum, but less the amount of fines incurred, and all such shares shall then be canceled."

The Association then proceeded to the election of twelve Directors to serve for the ensuing year. The following named gentlemen were declared duly elected:

Isaac Brokaw,
L. E. Barkalew,
G. Bachman,
Joseph S. Cutter,
B. F. Coriell,
W. R. Codington,
T. Chamberlain,
Nathan Harper,
John Hickey,
J. P. Homan,
W. A. Woodruff,
W. H. Williams.

Notice was given that the newly elected Board of Directors would meet for organization on Thursday evening, 25th. The net assets of the Association are $29,516 68, which makes the value of each share (costing, originally, $24) $29 05. The following are the receipts and disbursements for the past year:

A Scheme that Failed.

A bill has recently been drawn up by a certain few of this city, and presented before the legislature by Mr. Corbin, of Elizabeth at their request, intending on its face to provide relief for the crippled Fire Department of Plainfield and North Plainfield, but really to take away the fireman's right of say in the management of the affairs he voluntarily gives time and risks life and limb to maintain, and place such government in the hands of Councilmen elected on other issues and by arising circumstances and combinations that should effect in any particular the choice of those that are called upon to govern the Fire Department. This bill was and is carefully withheld from the gaze of the community, and its provisions are only disclosed in a general way, that presents the fairest—and not the truest—appearance. All those honestly interested in the best form of relief and government for the department, were, of course, opposed to any underhand legislation in such direction, so an opposition to the bill was at once organized and successful measures adopted and put into effect to "kill" it. A delegation composed of representatives from each fire company appeared before the Committee on Corporations at Trenton, Tuesday, demanded to see the bill, and in the presence of the Mayor, Councilmen C. M. Goddard and William H. Voorhees and Corporation Counsel Marsh (who were supporters of the bill) made forcible and just argument against an enactment of the sort. The reasons of such argument were so strong that the projectors of the bill saw the ground beneath their feet gape open to bury them, and were at once anxious to agree to whatever amendments should be demanded. The result will be the presentation of another bill, embodying the rights of the firemen, but which is none the less unnecessary and which will fail of adoption by the people should its improbable passage by the legislature result. We give below some of the many strong arguments against the amended bill made by Counsellor McClure before the Legislative Committee:

"MR. CHAIRMAN;—The amendments that have been made to the bill before you as a compromise with the firemen, are well enough as far as they go. 'Tis true they leave the control of the Fire Department with the firemen, to whom the control naturally belongs, and not with the Common Council as was designed in the bill. But, sir, as a representative of one of the companies, I will consent to no amendments until I have first seen and had time to examine the bill itself. Why, sir, we do not know, even now, what the bill contains! To-day for the first time have any of us been permitted to see it at all, and then but for a few moments whilst on the cars coming here—we therefore know not but there may be something stuck away somewhere in the bill that may undo any concessions that have been made, and thus leave all the power they want still in the hands of the Mayor and Common Council. The sly, secret and underhand manner in which this bill has been gotten up, and introduced here, and the conduct of the promoters of this bill from the very beginning give us cause for the gravest suspicion of its contents, notwithstanding the gentlemen have made, by amendments, every concession demanded by the firemen. Therefore, as one, I shall accept nothing; I shall agree to nothing that may be offered as a compromise until I have first had an opportunity to examine the bill. 'But,' say the gentlemen who are pressing this bill, 'you will have an opportunity to vote on the bill before it becomes a law.' Gentlemen, we do not want an opportunity to vote on the bill; the firemen do not want an opportunity to vote on the bill, nor do the larger part of the residents of the city of Plainfield want an opportunity to vote on the bill; and I maintain that until there is some evidence before this committee that the people want to vote on this bill, it would be manifestly unjust, unfair and unreasonable, to drag the people to the polls, at great inconvenience and loss of time to themselves and expense to the city, to vote down a something that they never for a moment desired. Just as reasonably might any individual, or clique of individuals, who had some pet scheme to rob the people to be put through, have the right to demand an election upon their schemes, as to make the demand in this case. I repeat, sir, it would be unjust and unfair, and unwarranted for this committee to put the people to the trouble and expense of holding elections to vote upon every scheme that might be conceived in the brains of some erratic individuals. I therefore submit that the gentlemen pressing this bill would furnish some evidence that the people want to vote upon this subject, before putting us to the trouble and expense of holding an election. Mr. Chairman, the Plainfield Fire Department was incorporated in 1854, and has been in active service ever since. At no time in the thirty-two years since its incorporation has it failed to fully do its duty, or give entire satisfaction to the inhabitants of the city of Plainfield and the borough of North Plainfield—that it is one of the most efficient fire organizations, crippled though it is for want of funds, that exists anywhere in the State, no one will deny. The late fire in Cook's lumber yard is an example of the efficiency of the department, and the self-sacrificing interest and devotion of its individual members. All will admit this. Then why do these gentlemen want a change? Why did they want to take the department from under the control of the people and put it under the control of the Mayor and Council? Why then this bill? I know not unless there lurks somewhere in it some scheme that will prove financially beneficial to its promoters. Again, Mr. Chairman, you may not know much about the Common Council that we have had in the past in the city of Plainfield. You, sir, are not expected to know, but we residents of the city of Plainfield do know that the Common Councils of the past have not shown that ability and disinterested zeal for the welfare of the people in the management of the city government that would justify us, or lead us to place further confidence in them in the future. Whilst elected to represent the majority, they have frequently misrepresented them. We therefore are bitterly opposed to granting the Council any further power. But, Mr. Chairman, there is another objection to this bill that I desire to call your attention to. The Plainfield Fire Department is a corporation established by an act of the legislature, approved March 3, 1854, since which time its powers have been enlarged, capital increased and limits extended by legislation. By the act of incorporation it will be seen that it is a body corporate, with a large capital stock vested in real and personal estate, in both Plainfield and North Plainfield, in engine houses, fire engines, and all other fire apparatus with outstanding bonds and other obligations, and is composed of the owners and proprietors of property in the two places, controlled by a board of managers who are elected by a vote of the people of both Plainfield and North Plainfield—who are its members. Now this bill before your committee proposes to submit the change in the manner of selecting managers to the voice of the people of the city of Plainfield only, entirely ignoring the members of this organization residing in North Plainfield. Have not, sir, the people of North Plainfield, who are members, a vested right to a voice in the management and dissolution of this corporation? And, if so, can the members of this corporation, residing in Plainfield, even should they wish to do so, deprive the members of the corporation residing in North Plainfield, of the right to a voice in saying whether this change shall be made or not? Can the legislature give the right so to vote to the residents of Plainfield, without giving the same to the members of the corporation residing in North Plainfield?"

THE following from the Sussex Register fits one locality as well as another. Read it, and act accordingly: "A number of handbills in town bear the imprint of Orange county printing offices. That is all right, but Sussex county has at least four papers published within her limits, and each with well equipped offices, and occasionally these parties, who go out of the State for their printing, come to the correspondents of our county papers and would like free notices. Question: If a local notice is worth anything, why not have it in the same paper that did the rest of the printing? It is no uncommon occurrence for one of our county papers to get the printing for an excursion, festival, or some like occurrence, and for each of the other papers to give free notices of the same. That is only a courteous exchange, but when the money leaves the State and does not go for the support of those whose public interests are in common with our own, it indicates a vast amount of impudence or ignorance of business affairs to ask home papers for free notices."

Kill It.

"We give in full below the substitute for the original bill that an endeavor was made to secretly push through the Legislature recently without its provisions becoming known to the public before enactment. The original took from the firemen who voluntarily devote their time and personal safety to protect the lives and property of our citizens, all right to choose Commissioners to govern the department, deprived the taxpayer of the same right, and permitted the firemen no power to act even in the choice of their own company officers, but made them in reality serfs and servants without freedom of action in the regulating of their own affairs. The bill below is, in many instances, just as unfair, and, as a whole, just as unnecessary. And the representatives of the companies that met to consider it, Wednesday evening, unanimously condemned it:

An Act concerning Fire Departments in cities.

1. Be it enacted by the Senate and General Assembly of the State of New Jersey, That there is hereby created and established in each of the cities of this State, which shall accept the provisions of this act, a board of fire commissioners to whom shall be entrusted the government, control and management of the fire department and the direction and control of all public firemen therein [illegible] respectively subject to the inspection and supervision of the Common Council of such city as hereinafter provided.

2. And be it enacted, That such Board of Fire Commissioners shall consist of three persons resident in such city who shall be elected by the legal voters of said city. The first election for said commissioners shall be held at the same time as the election at which this act shall be submitted for acceptance in such city, and in case of the acceptance of this act the commissioners elected shall organize within ten days of their said election and shall by lot determine which of said commissioners shall serve for one year from the first Tuesday in April next following said election, which for two years therefrom and which for three years therefrom, and until their respective successors shall be severally elected, and thereafter one commissioner shall be elected annually on the first Tuesday in April (except in the year immediately succeeding the acceptance of this act as aforesaid) to serve for three years and until his successor shall be elected.

3. And be it enacted, That such board of commission[illegible] shall be entitled to have and appoint a clerk, who shall keep a record of all their proceedings and an account of all money received and expended, and said board of commissioners shall make detailed reports monthly to such common council.

4. And be it enacted, That before entering upon the duties of such office, each of said commissioners and the clerk of said board, shall take or subscribe an oath or affirmation before the mayor or some magistrate of such city, faithfully and impartially to perform the duties of such office.

5. And be it enacted, That the common council of such city shall have power to remove from office any of said commissioners therein on good cause shown, and after a trial of such commissioner before such common council, and for such purpose the common council shall be duly authorized to summon, swear or affirm and examine witnesses, hear counsel and try and determine the charge against such commissioner as to said common council shall seem just.

6. And be it enacted, That in case a vacancy occur in said office of fire commissioner, such vacancy shall forthwith be filled until the first Tuesday in April following by the remaining commissioners, and at the election then held in such city, the vacancy shall be filled for the remainder of the unexpired term.

7. And be it enacted, That all firemen and members of fire companies in such city at the date of the acceptance of this act shall be and remain members of such companies thereafter, subject to such rules and regulations as may be adopted by such commissioners. The officers and members of said companies shall be elected by said companies respectively, and the chief engineer by the active firemen of such city, subject to the approval of said commissioners, and said board shall have power to make from time to time such by-laws, rules and regulations for the government of said board, and for the conduct and the management of the affairs of such board and the department under its control, as to the members of such board shall seem proper; provided, such by-laws, rules and regulations are not contrary to the constitution and laws of this State or the provisions of this act.

8. And be it enacted, That said board shall have full power and right to suspend and to expel or discharge any member of or persons employed or appointed in or under the department under the control of such board, provided good cause shall be shown for such suspension, expulsion or discharge after an investigation by such board.

9. And be it enacted, That each of said commissioners of such fire board shall devote such time and attention to the duties of his office as the welfare of the department under his control and the public interest therein may require.

10. And be it enacted, That upon election of such commissioners, the powers of any other public fire department theretofore supported by taxation, shall in such city immediately cease and determine, and said commissioners shall immediately assume control of the apparatus, houses and other property, real and personal in said city of any such other public fire department. Provided, That in case any fire department formerly exercising jurisdiction in said city shall have had jurisdiction beyond the limits of such city, the fire commissioners elected under this act shall make application to the Chancellor for the appointment of three disinterested commissioners to apportion the property and debts of said previously existing fire department between said city and that portion of said previously existing fire department which lies outside of such city. Fourteen days notice of such application shall be served upon the president or clerk of said previously existing fire department and also upon the clerk of every municipality to be affected by such proceedings, and said notice shall also be published for two insertions in one or more newspapers circulating in the municipalities to be affected. Upon proof of service and publication aforesaid the Chancellor shall appoint three disinterested commissioners whose duty it shall be to equitably apportion the property and debts of said previously existing fire department on the basis of the last assessed valuation of property liable to fire taxes, in and beyond said city, respectively, and the determination of such commissioners shall be final, provided further that in lieu of the proceedings above specified it shall be lawful for the common councils or governing bodies of the municipalities interested to mutually agree upon an apportionment, and when such apportionment is made either by mutual agreement, or by commissioners appointed as aforesaid, the property apportioned to said city and the portion of the previously existing fire department beyond said city shall vest in and be owned by the same respectively and the debts apportioned to each shall likewise be and remain the debts of the same respectively, and until such apportionment shall have been made the fire department previously exercising the jurisdiction in said city and other interested municipalities shall continue in control as before.

11. And be it enacted, That any city which shall accept the provisions of this act shall have full power to enforce the collection of past due fire taxes assessed in said city, and it is hereby made the duty of the treasurer or other officer of said previously existing fire department as may have the custody of the books or records of taxes of such department, to make return under oath to the collector of said city, within ten days after the confirmation of said commissioners, of all delinquents in the payment of fire taxes therein assessed in said city with the amounts remaining unpaid, and in case of delinquent real estate taxes, the description of such real estate and upon the return by the collector of said city to any magistrate of said city of such list of delinquents based upon the return made to him as aforesaid, such magistrate shall upon request of the common council of said city, issue his warrant to such officer as shall be designated by said common council, commanding him to make said taxes out of the goods and chattels, and in case said taxes were assessed on real estate, then out of lands and tenements of delinquents, and said warrants shall be in like form and have like full force and effect as other warrants for the collection of taxes in said city.

12. And be it enacted, That the said board of Fire Commissioners shall have power to issue subpoenas in the name of the president of such board, and compel the attendance of witnesses upon any proceedings by virtue of its rules and regulations, and each member of said board is hereby authorized to administer oaths or affirmations in any matter or proceeding as aforesaid, and any willful or corrupt swearing by any person before said respective boards shall be deemed perjury, and punishable in the same manner as is now prescribed by the statutes of this State in cases of perjury.

13. And be it enacted, That on or before the first day of June in each year the said Board of Fire Commissioners respectively shall estimate in detail the expenses of the fire department for the ensuing year, which shall include such indebtedness of any previously existing fire department as may be payable by said city in said year, but which estimate shall in no event exceed one-fourth of one per cent. on the last preceding assessable valuation of property in said city, and transmit the same to the common council of such city, which body shall make provision for the assessment of the same in the tax ordinance of each year.

14. And be it enacted, That no money shall be drawn from the treasury of any such city for the Board of Fire Commissioners aforesaid, except by warrant ordered by the common council, in pursuance of a requisition by such Board of Commissioners.

15. And be it enacted, That it shall be the duty of the common council of any city in this State wherein is established a Board of Fire Commissioners, to provide such board with suitable and proper quarters and accommodations.

16. And be it enacted, That this act shall not apply to any city until its provisions shall be accepted by the voters of such city by a majority of the votes cast for or against said act, at any charter or general election, or at any special election called for that purpose hereafter, to be held in said city.

17. And be it enacted, That if a majority of those voting for the acceptance or rejection of this act shall be in favor of the acceptance, then this act shall go into effect immediately, and the provisions thereof shall be deemed to be accepted by such city, and such city shall be bound by the terms of this act; persons entitled to vote at any charter or municipal election shall express their assent to or rejection of this act by depositing their ballots in a separate box to be provided for depositing such ballots at such election, in the election precincts or districts, or wards of any such city, and those who are in favor of the acceptance of the act shall each deposit a ballot containing the words "Fire commission act accepted," written or printed thereon, and those who are opposed shall each deposit a ballot with the words "Fire commission act rejected," written or printed thereon; there shall be a canvass of the return of the votes upon the question of such acceptance or rejection, made by the election officers in the same way and manner as for officers voted for a charter election; and if a majority of the votes cast for or against this act shall be found in favor of its acceptance, it shall then, but not otherwise, go into effect, and be binding upon such city wherein such vote shall have been taken.

18. And be it enacted, That all acts or parts of acts, general, special, local or private, inconsistent herewith, be and the same are hereby repealed, and this act shall take effect immediately.

On the 21st inst. the sun in his return from the south crossed the equator to again bring spring and sunshine to the northern hemisphere. This makes the days and nights of equal length all over the globe for a short period. This occurs but twice a year, in what is called the vernal equinox, and again in the fall or autumnal equinox. These semi-annual occurrences are usually accompanied by a storm of more or less severity, but they do not always come on the exact day fixed by the calendar for the attainment of the sun to the equinoctial circle. During every transition from winter to summer there is a struggle for the mastery, and the moisture-laden south winds coming in contact with the cold winds of the north precipitate their moisture, and we have heavy rains, often accompanied with more or less wind.

MISCELLANEOUS READING.

THE LOST LETTER.

Jacob Carter and Albert Harrison were merchants living in adjoining towns. The strong friendship existing between them in boyhood had not declined in manhood.

Each possessed sterling traits of character, though the two men were unlike.

Mr. Carter was much beloved for his gentle nature and kindly qualities. The shortcomings of his fellow men were always viewed by him with a charitable eye.

Mr. Harrison, on the contrary, though an honest, true man, was harsh and inflexible, and quick to condemn any deviation in others from the code of rectitude laid down for himself.

One bright morning he said to his son, as he sealed a letter he had just written:

"Paul, I want you to carry this letter to the post office. Don't stop on your way. It must go out in the next mail."

Paul took it, put on his hat, and went whistling down the street. On his way he had to pass the house of Caleb Parker, his most intimate friend.

"Halloo!" called Caleb from the piazza. "I have just had a streak of luck. Uncle Roger has given me a splendid Newfoundland dog."

"Oh, that's jolly!" returned Paul, eagerly.

"Come in and see him," urged Caleb.

Paul glanced at the clock on the church steeple. It lacked a full half hour to mail time. Thoughtless of the disobedience he was committing, he yielded to the temptation before him. A few minutes could be easily spared.

He hurried with Caleb to the shed where Rover was tied, and spent five minutes admiring and praising the "splendid puppy."

Then he continued his walk. But on reaching the post office, he found, to his dismay, that the letter was missing.

He was sure he had carefully put it in his pocket. What should he do? He remembered pulling out his handkerchief while talking to Caleb, and thinking it was probable it fell out then, he retraced his steps to Mr. Parker's house.

He told Caleb his trouble, and the two made a thorough search. But the letter could not be found.

"I'd about as soon be killed as to go home and tell father. He told me not to stop by the way, and he'll whip me awfully."

"Do you know what was in the letter?" inquired Caleb.

"Yes. Father wrote to Mr. Carter to send him twenty barrels of flour, to last till he gets a supply from the West."

"Then save yourself a whipping by holding your tongue. Don't say a word to your father about it. Come to my room and write another letter, and sign your father's name to it. It won't do any harm, and it will bring the flour all the same. Only keep whist."

Paul hesitated. He knew Caleb was a wrong counselor; that a frank and straightforward course was the only right one.

But he had been twice severely punished for small acts of thoughtless disobedience, and the pain of the blows was fresh in his memory.

"Well, on the whole, Caleb, I guess I'll follow your advice. I can't see what hurt it can do."

They went into the house. Paul took the offered pen and ink, and quickly wrote thus:

MERRITOWN, May 8, ——.

"MR. CARTER—Dear Sir: I wish to purchase of you twenty barrels of flour, to be sent immediately.

A. HARRISON, per P. H."

Paul had seen his father's clerk write letters on business, and sign them in this way. Ten minutes later he deposited the letter in the post office and went home.

"Did you get my letter in before the mail went?" asked Mr. Harrison, as Paul entered the parlor.

"The letter was there in time," was the evasive reply.

A growing uneasiness now took possession of the boy's heart, and he really felt sorry he had not braved his father's displeasure, and owned the truth. He had been guilty of crooked dealing, and his act (such acts always do) left something to dread. It was too late now, he reasoned, to retrieve the mistake; but what might come of it, he could not tell. Three days afterwards, Mr. Harrison received twenty barrels of flour from the wholesale house of Mr. Carter.

A week went by. One morning Mr. Harrison said to his wife at the breakfast table:

"I sent a check of one hundred and fifty dollars to Mr. Carter. Don't see why he hasn't acknowledged it."

Terror and dismay instantly overspread Paul's face, and he quickly left the table. It had not before occurred to him that the lost letter held a check, which was lost too. The thought appalled him, and terrible forebodings tortured his soul.

Later in the afternoon of that day, as Paul sat alone in the library, the door bell rang, and a moment after, he heard his father cordially greet Mr. Carter and invite him into the parlor.

They held a low, earnest conversation together. Mr. Carter seemed to be giving some important information which astonished Mr. Harrison.

The door was closed, but occasionally part of a sentence came distinctly to Paul's ears. He heard the words "check," "stolen from a letter," "State prison offense," "young for such a crime."

He looked out of the window into the street, and a strong impulse seized him to flee from the house, but his limbs were powerless to act.

Suddenly Mr. Harrison opened the door.

"Paul, come here," he said. "Mr. Carter wishes to talk with you."

The boy went into the parlor, nervous and trembling. One glance at the weary, serious expression of Mr. Carter's face seemed to assure him of his coming doom. Faintly, and with a palpitating heart, he returned the good man's salutation.

"I want to ask you a question," began Mr. Carter. "Can you tell me—why, how you shake? What's the matter?"

"Nothing—yes—I don't know," stammered Paul.

"I want you to tell me all you know about—"

"Oh, sir," interrupted Paul, "I never told you a lie! never, never! and I hope you'll believe me now!"

"Believe what, my son?"

"That—that I didn't steal the check! —I—I lost your letter—but—but—I didn't know it held a check!" with chattering teeth.

"Lost my letter! what letter? Out with the truth!" commanded Mr. Harrison.

"The one you wrote to Mr. Carter. You gave it to me to carry to the post office. There was plenty of time before the mail closed, and I stopped a few minutes to look at Caleb's new dog. The letter was dropped somewhere, and I couldn't find it—and—and I thought it was only an order for flour, and I wrote another and signed your name to it. I knew it would bring the flour all the same, and it did."

Paul began to cry.

"I received that letter and forwarded the flour at once," put in Mr. Carter.

"Go on, Paul. So you have forged a letter for me. What else have you done?" asked Mr. Harrison, in a severe tone.

"That's all I have to tell—nothing else," sobbed the boy.

"Your father's letter, with a check of one hundred and fifty dollars, came to me. I had two letters, one a few days after the other," said Mr. Carter. "The last letter had been picked up and forwarded according to its written direction."

A look of mingled relief and surprise suddenly came over Paul's face.

"Why did you suspect me of stealing the check, then?" he asked, drying his tears.

"Don't see what led you to think I did suspect you. What did?" questioned Mr. Carter.

"Because I heard father and you talking about a check that was stolen from a letter, and just after that you mentioned my name."

Mr. Carter burst into a hearty laugh, and even the knitted brows of Mr. Harrison relaxed. Paul's face flushed crimson.

"You were more frightened than hurt, my boy," said Mr. Carter, laying his hand on Paul's shoulder. "Your course was not right, and guilt is a loud accuser, and is easily alarmed. But no one had suspected you of stealing, Paul. I was only telling your father that Able Phillips, the son of one of our friends, had lately forged a stolen check, and is likely to go to prison."

"But something was certainly said about me."

"Yes; I asked to see you to inquire about your schoolmate, Ned Lee, who wants a place in my store."

Paul gave Mr. Carter all the information he wanted about his schoolmate, while Mr. Harrison sat thinking. He was not quite ready to change the subject.

"Paul," said he, sternly, "how comes it you are so late in owning that you lost my letter?"

Paul hung his head.

"It wasn't right, I know, father. I hated to hide it, but I thought it would save me from a beating."

Paul left the room, and the merchants were alone.

"Albert," said Mr. Carter, earnestly, "we have been friends from boyhood, and I hope you won't take offense at my plain speaking. Don't you see you are helping your son to make a rogue?"

"A rogue! What do you mean?"

"That's what the end will be. Paul is a little thoughtless and impetuous, but a good boy in the main. It was dread of punishment, you see, that forced him to act underhanded in this thing. Encourage frankness in him by keeping him under. He has taken his first lesson in artifice. God grant it may be his last."

Half an hour later, Mr. Carter went away, and Mr. Harrison sat long absorbed in thought.

A revelation had been made to him and he rose and went to Paul's room.

"Well, Paul," said he, "you have paid a heavier penalty for concealment than if the truth had been told at first."

"Indeed I have, father; I never had anything worry me half so much."

"Always be true and open, Paul, and you need have no fear of me."

Father and son had both learned an important lesson.

WITHDREW HIS ALLEGATIONS.

A few days ago, on the Grand Rapids train, a passenger got on at a small station and walked through the coaches without being able to find a seat. He finally halted before a man who occupied a whole seat and seemed bound to keep it. He was not invited to sit down. On the contrary, the occupant of the seat assumed a more frigid attitude.

"Sir!" finally exclaimed the indignant stranger from the small station, "you are an infernal hog!"

"What's that? What do you call me?"

"An infernal hog, sir!"

"You do! you do! Why, sir, I'll knock the top of your idiotic head clear across Eaton county!"

"You can't do it!"

"Yes, I can!"

Both men were on their feet in the aisle and ready to spill gore, when the conductor came in and shouted to the one who had been called a hog:

"Hold on, Doctor. What is it?"

"Doctor?" queried the man from the small station; "are you a doctor?"

"Yes, sir."

"Why, so am I."

"Good gracious, is that true?"

They exchanged cards.

They shook hands.

"Why; of course you can have half my seat—all of it—the whole car!"

"Oh, no, no, Doctor! I wouldn't for the world!"

"But, Doctor, I insist!"

"Well, Doctor, if you insist, I'll be glad to sit with you."

"Of course, Doctor."

And the doctors sat down together in one seat, and were so soft and tender and loving that tears sprung to the eye of every passenger.

A very interesting experiment was successfully made recently in the matter of using the telephone for long distances, and the result is such as to encourage the hope that this can soon be effectively done. The experiments were made with a telephone between New York and Washington, a distance of 228 miles, and free conversations were had between these two cities. The interesting experiments in that direction of a few years ago and when the telephone was yet a novelty may be remembered. Sounds were caught in this city from Beecher's church. Of course, there has been frequent transmission of talk between New York and Newark and this city over the telephone, but the messages have been delivered, as far as our observation goes, with a painful indistinctness. Whether this was owing to the fact of their delivery over telegraph wires and the necessary great induction or not, we cannot say. It has always seemed possible, however, that, at least for moderately short distances, the telephone might be used as effectively as the telegraph. If this is now to be fairly tried, the public will watch such trial with interest and will wish it the greatest success.

"A man never loses anything by politeness." At all events, there are a great many who never do or never intend to.

FOR WIVES.

A Few Suggestive "Don't's" that Wives Should Remember.

Don't disturb your husband while he is reading the morning or evening paper by asking foolish questions. He may be reading the latest scandal or divorce suit, but he is just as much interested as though it were foreign news or market reports. Be patient, and when he comes across anything he thinks you can comprehend perhaps he will read it to you.

Don't communicate unpleasant news or ask a favor before eating. The heart is not easily touched when the stomach is empty.

Don't ever tell a man he is good-looking. Some other woman will probably some time, and in that case he won't know that her opinion coincides with yours. He carries a pocket hand-glass now, and he will shortly become addicted to Panjamas.

Don't ever tell a man he has pretty legs. Men who have been known to bear up under facial compliments fall completely when they realize their legs are notably good.

Don't put the morning paper at the bottom of the pile, and don't have more than a dozen different places for the button-hook.

Don't impose upon your husband just because he is good enough to assist you a little in your housework.

Don't leave the stove handle on the red-hot stove, and don't ask him to empty the ash bed. Draw a line on the ash bed, and don't run a free horse to death.

Don't gather up all his receipts and notes that he has put carefully away on the sitting-room table and tuck them in the fire the moment his back is turned.

Don't monopolize every hook in the closet. Graciously tender him one nail for his very own—and then in mercy hang your Mother Hubbard, your pelerine, your shopping bag and your bonnet in some other place.

Don't be explicit in giving directions. When you ask him to go up stairs for your pocketbook tell him that it is either on the table or in the further corner of the left-hand side of the upper bureau drawer, or in the pocket of your brown dress in the closet. He will have no trouble in finding it—if you tell him just where it is, especially the pocket.

Don't ask him where he has been the moment he enters the house, or where he is going if he starts out for a walk before breakfast. It settles him, and men hate to have such pointed questions sprung upon them. Besides that, we live under a free flag.

Don't ask him to walk the floor with the baby half the night. A man who tramps industriously around a billiard table three nights in the week, or buys an admission ticket to the opera, can't be expected to be on duty at home the other three nights. Have mercy upon him and give the man an opportunity to recuperate.

Don't waste your breath in useless vituperation against his chum. Cultivate the chum yourself—ostensibly—when your husband is not around, and matters will assume a different aspect.

Don't put pins in your curl-papers or let your crumping-pins dangle on your forehead. They are abominations and feminine implements of warfare that men despise.

Don't leave hair in the comb or your neck curls where they will stick to his hairbrush.

Don't put a long hair on the soap or in his tooth-brush—purposely.

Don't mend his hosiery with cotton having knots in it bigger than a pea.

Don't scold him because he leaves ashes in his pipe. One of the privileges of a married man is to leave an old pipeful of ashes in just the position to empty the contents on the window-sill or the mantel the moment it is touched.

Don't indulge in flights of temper when your husband suggests how his mother did. If he objects to having eggs boiled in the tea kettle and prefers them washed previous to cooking, endeavor to please him by indulging him in his fancies. In the meantime bring your sons up as carefully as you can, and when they are married you yourself will doubtless be held up as an example of virtue—and revenge is sweet.

PUTTING A CASE.

A teacher, putting a question in mental arithmetic said, by way of illustration:

"If there were three peaches on the table, Johnny, and your little sister should eat one of them, how many would be left?"

"We hain't had a peach in the house this year, let alone three."

"We are only supposing the peaches to be on the table, Johnny."

"Then they wouldn't be real peaches?"

"No."

"Would they be preserved peaches?"

"Certainly not."

"Pickled peaches?"

"No, no. There wouldn't be any peaches at all, as I told you, Johnny; we only suppose the three peaches to be there."

"Then there wouldn't be any peaches left, of course."

"Now, Johnny, put that knife in your pocket, or I will take it away from you, and pay attention to what I am saying. We imagine three peaches to be on the table."

"Yes."

"And your little sister eats one of them, and then goes away."

"Yes, but she wouldn't go until she had finished three. You don't know my little sister!" said Johnny.

"But suppose that your mother was there, and wouldn't let her eat but one."

"Mother's out of town, and won't be back till next week."

"Now, Johnny," said the teacher, sternly, "I will put the question once more, and if you do not answer it correctly I shall keep you after school. If three peaches were on the table, and your little sister were to eat one of them, how many would be left?"

"There would not be any peaches left," said Johnny, straightening up. "I would grab the other two."

"The scholars are now dismissed," said the teacher, touching the bell. "Johnny White will remain where he is."

Delicious Food, Healthfulness and Economy.

CLEVELAND'S
SUPERIOR
BAKING POWDER

Manufactured by Cleveland Brothers, Albany, N. Y., is the PUREST, STRONGEST, MOST HEALTHFUL, and will always be found THE MOST RELIABLE AND MOST ECONOMICAL preparation ever produced for making most delicious, light, white, sweet and healthful biscuits, cakes, pastry, puddings, &c., and has met with unprecedented success wherever introduced during the past fifteen years.

The public have a right to know what they are using as food. Anything that so vitally affects the health of the family as the daily bread we eat should be free from any suspicion of taint, and housekeepers should demand that manufacturers plainly state all the ingredients of compounds that are used in the preparation of our daily diet. Do not use baking powders whose manufacturers wholly or partly withhold from the public a knowledge of the ingredients from which they are made. CLEVELAND'S SUPERIOR BAKING POWDER is made only of purest Grape Cream of Tartar, Bicarbonate of Soda, and a little wheat flour, the latter to preserve the strength of the powder. Nothing else whatever is used in its manufacture.

NEW YORK, July 11, 1884.

In analyzing samples of baking powder purchased by myself of a number of grocers in New York City, I find that CLEVELAND'S SUPERIOR BAKING POWDER contains only pure Grape Cream of Tartar, Bicarbonate of Soda, and a small portion of flour.

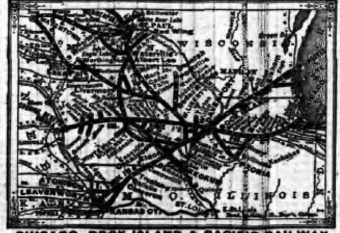
A MAN
WHO IS UNACQUAINTED WITH THE GEOGRAPHY OF THIS COUNTRY, WILL SEE BY EXAMINING THIS MAP, THAT THE



CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC RAILWAY
By reason of its central position and close relation to all principal lines East and West, at initial and terminal points, constitutes the most important mid-continental link in that system of through transportation which invites and facilitates travel and traffic between cities of the Atlantic and Pacific Coasts. It is also the favorite and best route to and from points East, Northeast and Southeast, and corresponding points West, Northwest and Southwest.
The Rock Island system includes in its main line and branches, Chicago, Joliet, Ottawa, La Salle, Peoria, Geneseo, Moline and Rock Island, in Illinois; Davenport, Muscatine, Washington, Fairfield, Ottumwa, Oskaloosa, West Liberty, Iowa City, Des Moines, Indianola, Winterset, Atlantic, Knoxville, Audubon, Harlan, Guthrie Centre and Council Bluffs, in Iowa; Gallatin, Trenton, Cameron and Kansas City, in Missouri; Leavenworth and Atchison, in Kansas; Albert Lea, Minneapolis and St. Paul, in Minnesota; Watertown in Dakota, and hundreds of intermediate cities, towns, villages and stations.
THE GREAT ROCK ISLAND ROUTE
Guarantees its patrons that sense of personal security afforded by a solid, thoroughly ballasted road-bed; smooth tracks of continuous steel rail; substantially built culverts and bridges; rolling stock as near perfection as human skill can make it; the safety appliances of patent buffers, platforms and air-brakes; and that exacting discipline which governs the practical operation of all its trains. Other specialties of this route are Transfers at all connecting points in Union Depots, and the unsurpassed comforts and luxuries of its Passenger Equipment.
The Fast Express Trains between Chicago and the Missouri River are composed of well ventilated, finely upholstered Day Coaches, Magnificent Pullman Palace Sleepers of the latest design, and sumptuous Dining Cars, in which elaborately cooked meals are leisurely eaten, "good Digestion waiting on Appetite, and Health on both." Between Chicago and Kansas City and Atchison, are also run the Celebrated Reclining Chair Cars.
THE FAMOUS ALBERT LEA ROUTE
Is the direct and favorite line between Chicago and Minneapolis and St. Paul, where connections are made in Union Depots for all points in the Territories and British Provinces. Over this route, Fast Express Trains are run to the watering places, summer resorts, picturesque localities, and hunting and fishing grounds of Iowa and Minnesota. It is also the most desirable route to the rich wheat fields and pastoral lands of interior Dakota.
Still another DIRECT LINE, via Seneca and Kankakee, has been opened between Newport News, Richmond, Cincinnati, Indianapolis and Lafayette, and Council Bluffs, Kansas City, Minneapolis and St. Paul and intermediate points.
For detailed information see Maps and Folders, obtainable, as well as Tickets, at all principal Ticket Offices in the United States and Canada; or by addressing

An Efficient Remedy
In all cases of Bronchial and Pulmonary Affections is AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL. As such it is recognized and prescribed by the medical profession, and in many thousands of families, for the past forty years, it has been regarded as an invaluable household remedy. It is a preparation that only requires to be taken in very small quantities, and a few doses of it administered in the early stages of a cold or cough will effect a speedy cure, and may, very possibly, save life. There is no doubt whatever that
Ayer's Cherry Pectoral
Has preserved the lives of great numbers of persons, by arresting the development of Laryngitis, Bronchitis, Pneumonia, and Pulmonary Consumption, and by the cure of these dangerous maladies. It should be kept ready for use in every family where there are children, as it is a medicine far superior to all others in the treatment of Croup, the alleviation of Whooping Cough, and the cure of Colds and Influenza, ailments peculiarly incidental to childhood and youth. Promptitude in dealing with all diseases of this class is of the utmost importance. The loss of a single day may, in many cases, entail fearful consequences. Do not waste precious time in experimenting with medicines of doubtful efficacy, while the malady is constantly gaining a deeper hold, but take at once the speediest and most certain to cure,

ORIGIN OF A FAN.

BY JEAN ARCARD.

Love never was a hidden god,
And spite of what the ancients say,
'Twas he who sought to see the maid:
He told me so—believe, who may.

Eros loved Psyche: while she slept,
Spying the virgin he admired,
At sight of such rare loveliness
His heart was thrilled, his senses fired.

And as he bent in rapture lost,
The oil fell on her where she lay:
Startled, she awoke; and seeing Love,
At once took wing and flew away.

Vainly since then the lovelorn boy
Had sought the maid with azure wings;
No form of such soft beauty came
To cheer him in his wanderings.

At length one day, as sad he strode,
By paths made sweet with April dew,
He spied a butterfly that passed
On a large rosebud, full in view.

"'Tis Psyche!" said he: "surely this Must be the wing that went and came
About her shoulder, when she fled
With flush of rosy colored shame!"

"Could I but seize it!" And he sprang
Like a rash lover, and his lip—
With the wild ecstacy of love—
Closed on its fluttering azure tip.

And as he held the broken limb,
And wondered to what purpose coy
He now should turn the beauteous thing;
"I'll make of fair woman's joy!"

So fashioned quick, with dexterous art,
At once her shield and yataghan:
"Go flutter now for evermore!"
Sad Eros—and he made the fan.

MISCELLANEOUS READING.

IN SEARCH OF THE TIDE.

Mr. Perkins laid down the newspaper and briskly stirred the fire, as he casually remarked:

"There was a great tide last night; the highest water known here for years. I suppose the full moon and the strong east wind we have had for the last week account for it."

"How high was it, father?" asked Charlie as he buttered the fifth piece of toast.

Charlie was fourteen and the other Perkins children looked up to him as the head of the family.

"Sixteen feet," answered Mr. Perkins.

Harry, who was not quite seven, and who was always trying to find out things for himself, looked thoughtfully out of the window. The cottage stood a stone's throw from the water and Harry could look through the open channel between the two islands out to the wide sea that was tossing restlessly in the distance.

"Father" he asked, "where does the tide come from?"

Mr. Perkins sipped his tea before he carelessly replied:

"Oh, from a long way out at sea."

"But where does it start from?" still persisted Harry.

"I don't think it starts from any particular place," said Mr. Perkins. "I should say the surface waters run in from all over the sea."

"But it must start somewhere," said Harry.

Mr. Perkins had not studied up the subject of tides and feeling that his answers had been rather vague, did not try to say anything more.

When supper was over, the family went out on the piazza which stretched across the front of the house. Mr. Perkins lighted a cigar. Mrs. Perkins brought out some pretty worsted thing she was knitting. Charlie walked down to the beach and began skipping stones across the water, and Harry sat down on a large rock and watched the tide running up and down on the beach. The sun had gone down and left a few rosy clouds trailing after him, the mountains were growing dim in the distance and among the islands of the bay the water lay quiet and dark. It ran up the beach as if it meant to travel far inland and then something stopped it and drew it back with a long wash that sounded as if all the wet stones over which it ran were slipping back with it.

Harry had often watched this advance and retreat of the tide, but it had never seemed so curious to him as now. "What sends it up the beach and why does it go back instead of going on?" were questions he was trying to answer. The long, low wash of water along the line of shore as far as Harry could see grew more and more mysterious to him as it became darker and the sights began to change into sounds. The great sea beyond the island seemed to be sending its waves in and then suddenly stopping them and the murmur of the waters seemed to be the many voices of the sea calling its waves back again.

At last Mr. Perkins took out his watch and looked at it by the light of his cigar.

"Why," he exclaimed, "it's later than I thought; it's after nine."

Mrs. Perkins called to Harry, who very unwillingly left the shore and went to his room. When he had undressed and blown out the candle he opened the blinds and looked out. The moon had just risen and was sending a silvery light over the sea and the trees on the islands stood out dark and motionless. Up to the window, in the stillness of the night, came the murmur and splash of the rippling tide, almost at its flood.

"Where does it start from?" said Harry to himself as he fell asleep.

It might have been two hours—it was probably more—when Harry suddenly awoke. The moon was shining into the room and the cool splash of the sea on the beach came in at the windows.

"Where does it come from?" said Harry to himself again.

Then, quick as a flash, the thought came to him to go and see. Why not? The sea was only a little way off, the night was almost as light as day and at the little dock below the cottage Charlie's boat "Sallie" was tied. He slipped out of bed and ran to the window; the tide was falling, and this would be the best time to go out and find where it came from.

In five minutes Harry was dressed and taking his shoes in his hands, he crept softly down stairs, opened the door into the piazza and shut it again so quietly that no one heard a sound. Once on the ground he sat down and put on his shoes, then ran swiftly down to the dock where the "Sallie" was dancing on the water, slipped the rope off the iron rod, and jumped into the boat.

Harry had spent no end of time in the boat, and knew more about sailing than many older boys. The tide was falling fast, and the water along the shore was rough. The "Sallie" danced up and down, and before Harry could get an oar he was thrown over a seat into the bottom of the boat, which drifted rapidly out into the bay. It was a still night and a light mist had spread over the sky, making the stars dim and faint. The islands looked strange and vague to Harry, and the sea was white and weird. Things did not look at all as they did by daylight; everything was queer and ghostly. Not a sound came from the cottages scattered along the shore as the boat drifted away from them; not a light was burning in a window anywhere; the whole world had gone to sleep except the sea; and a strange dream had come over that.

When the tide falls as far as it did in this bay it makes a good deal of commotion, and there are swift currents between the islands. In one of them the "Sallie" was caught, and swiftly carried seaward. Soon cottages and islands lay behind, growing dimmer and dimmer every minute, and the sea was close at hand. The water along the beach was white and foaming, and around the rocky head at the entrance of the bay the sea rushed and roared mightily.

Harry was not at all frightened; he loved the water, and had not so much as thought that he might have trouble in getting home again. The tide was running swiftly out, and if he followed it he would surely find where it came from. On and on, out into the strange, lonely sea, the little boat drifted; once in awhile the moon would look out for a moment between the clouds, but most of the time she was hidden by them. Sometimes the foam on the crests of the waves would flash in sudden points or lines of fire; sometimes a quick gleam would show itself at a distance, and Harry would wonder if it were not the fin of some great fish cutting the surface of the sea.

He had left the silver watch which his father had given him on his last birthday, hanging on the head of his bed, and so he could not tell what time it was; but he noticed after awhile that the stars began to grow pale, and the heavens a little less dark. A fresh breeze had sprung up, and went singing over the sea; fortunately it was a light wind, and did no harm beyond making Harry a little chilly. The boat drifted wherever the waters carried it, and they carried it straight out to sea. When the sun rose, and the morning mists had rolled themselves out of sight, Harry saw far behind him the island from which he had sailed, its mountains standing out green and solemn against the sky; far ahead were the barren rocks from which at night a light-house sent its solitary beam over the sea.

Breakfast time came, but no breakfast, and no sign of any. The sun marched steadily up the steep circle of the sky, and found it such a hard climb that he not only got very warm himself, but put everybody else into a profuse perspiration. On Harry he fairly poured his heat until the poor little fellow's head buzzed and ached, and he began to wish himself safe at home, tide or no tide.

Dinner time came, but no dinner; and finally, after a long hot afternoon, tea time, but no tea. The boat had floated further and further, but Harry had not found where the tide started from; the further he went the wider the sea spread out, and there was no sign of a beginning or an end anywhere. Harry began to think he had passed the place where the tide started; certainly, if it got out as far this, it would lose itself and never get anywhere.

The sun, tired with his long day's work, went down hot and red; by and by, one by one, the stars began to steal out from the places where they had hidden away from him. Harry, tired, hungry and a little frightened, had fallen asleep in the bottom of the boat, and was dreaming of sitting down to a nice dinner, when the moon came up and found him lying there, far out to sea, when he ought to have been in his bed at home.

CHAPTER II.

Capt. Peleg Waters was coming home with a goodly load of fresh mackerel; wind and tide being favorable, he expected to make Rockland sometime the next afternoon. Capt. Peleg was rather a rough looking old fellow, but he had the kindest heart in the world. At the time he sailed into this story he was taking his turn at the tiller, and was enjoying about equally the beautiful moonlit night and the short pipe from which he blew occasional puffs of tobacco smoke.

"This is the purtiest night we've had this trip," he said to himself, as he looked up at the full moon sailing serenely through the clouds, and at the silvery sea whispering to itself as if in a dream.

Just then something ahead caught the captain's eye.

"Wa'al, I declare," he exclaimed aloud "if there ain't a boat! What's she doing twenty miles out to sea?"

In ten minutes Capt. Peleg had brought the schooner alongside the little boat, and was looking down at the small boy still fast asleep.

"Wa'al, I vow," said the captain, "if that ain't the littlest crew and the sleepiest that I ever see afloat."

Capt. Peleg whistled to himself, as he always did when puzzled; then he leaned over, and called out softly,—

"Ahoy, there!"

Harry opened his eyes wide, and jumped up in a second. He was a bright, honest boy, and the captain knew it the minute he laid eyes on him.

"Where you from?" he asked, as gently as he could, for a voice that gets used to bawling in the teeth of all sorts of winds, isn't very soft.

"Bar Harbor," answered Harry promptly.

Capt Peleg's eyes twinkled. This was the queerest craft he had ever fallen in with on the sea.

"Where you bound?" he continued.

"I want to find where the tide comes from, sir," was the quick reply.

Capt. Peleg whistled long and loud.

"What you got in your locker?" he said looking quizzically at the boy.

"Nothing said Harry, dolefully, for he knew this was the weak point of the voyage.

"How long you been out?"

Harry hesitated a moment for he was rather confused by the absence of dinners, teas and clocks; finally he said he had been out a day and a night.

"Anything to eat?" asked Capt. Peleg.

"Nothing," answered Harry, mournfully, for he was becoming very weak, and there was a strange feeling in his stomach.

The captain whistled again.

"Hi, there, Jim!" he called out, in a very loud voice.

In a minute Jim came stumbling up from the little cabin, very frowsy and sleepy.

"Just you take this tiller," said Capt. Peleg. Jim took the tiller. "Now," said the captain to Harry, "throw me that rope."

Harry threw the rope, and the captain made the little boat fast to the big one. Then he held out his hand, and with a vigorous pull the boy was on the schooner and the little boat was floating behind.

Meanwhile the captain disappeared. When he came back he handed Harry some big slices of well-buttered bread.

"Just stow that away in your hold," he said to Harry.

The boy needed no second invitation, and the bread speedily disappeared.

"Now you turn in, and in the morning we'll take our bearings," said Capt. Peleg, and the last piece of bread went out of sight.

Harry was thereupon slipped into the captain's bunk and within a few minutes he was fast asleep. When he awoke it was after ten the next morning. He found Capt. Peleg on deck, with his short pipe in his mouth.

There was a fresh breeze blowing, and the schooner was dashing along, sending little showers of spray right and left from her prow.

"Mornin'. 'Hope you slept well?" said Capt. Peleg, when he spied Harry.

Harry thought he had never slept better.

"Well, I've followed the sea going on forty-five years, and my advice is, give up this ere voyage of yours and put for home," said the captain. His eyes twinkled, but his face was perfectly sober. "I'll take you into Rockland, then you can telegraph to your friends."

Harry thought this was the wisest plan, and was quite willing to give up the matter of the tides if he could only get home.

About three o'clock in the afternoon the schooner came up to the dock, and Capt. Peleg went straight to the telegraph office, and sent this despatch:

ROCKLAND, Aug. 2, 1884.
George Perkins, Bar Harbor, Mt. Desert, Me.
Boy Harry and small boat "Sallie" picked up at sea. Send directions.
PELEG WATERS.

This little piece of paper which bore this good news filled the Perkins family with joy. They had found the little boat gone, had guessed what had happened, and had telegraphed in every direction without getting any news of the lost boy. Mr. Perkins ran down to the office and sent this message in reply:

BAR HARBOR, Aug. 3, 1884.
Peleg Waters, Rockland, Me.
Heartiest thanks. Send boy and boat by steamer to-morrow.
GEORGE PERKINS.

The next day the steamer came along the dock of Bar Harbor, and Harry ran off the gang plank among the first, and was kissed and hugged and cried over to his heart's content.

Charles got into the "Sallie" and rode home, but Harry had had enough of boats for the present, and preferred to walk.

About a week later Capt. Waters was surprised by the arrival of a small and very nicely tied package. He opened it cautiously and discovered a very substantial watch, with the graceful regards of Mr. George Perkins and family.

Harry has not yet found out where the tide starts from.

A MOTHER'S SACRIFICE.

"Now, Eliza, listen to me and pay attention, for on these few words may depend your future happiness."

"Yes, ma."

"When Henry comes this evening and you pass him the pie, watch his countenance closely."

"Yes, ma."

"If he trembles with joy, ask him how he likes your cookery. But if he shudders, just mention casually that your mother always attends to the pastry."

"Oh, ma! how kind of you."

"Don't mention it. He will hate me, but when I live with you after marriage all will be explained."

GOOD HEARTED JACK LOGAN.

A gentleman recently visited the Soldier's Home in Milwaukee. "I was going among the old boys," he said, "answering questions about their old commanders, &c., when an Irishman saluted me, and I found out he had been in the Seventh Missouri.

"'D'ye iver see the ould bye now?' he inquired.

"'Do you mean Logan? Oh, yes, often,' I answered.

"'Well, if ye plaze, sor, wud ye moind telling him of the thrick I played on 'im at Vicksburg? It was a mane thrick, an' I'd loike to know that he didn't howld it agin me.'

"'What was the trick, Barney?'

"'Well, it was this way, sor; I was divilish thirsty, sor, an' was dyin' for a drap o' whiskey, so I took me canteen an' a scrap av paper an' a stump av a lid pincil an' I goes up t' him quite brave like where he was a standin' by one av the navy goons, an' I makes me salute. So I says: 'If ye plaze, Giniril, I'd be afther likin' an ordther for a quart av whiskey, I've a powerful wakeness in my stumick.' An' he smiles a bit, and he says: 'Write out the ordther, Barney.' An' I writes: 'Give Barney O'Toole for cash 1 quart av whiskey,' an' he takes it an' scratches out for cash an' writes 'Charge to John A. Logan.' I thanks him an' runs off, but when I put a bit bechune up I put an 's' to the quart an' I makes an illegant 4 out av the 1 an' I gets three more canteens an gets four quarts av whiskey charged to John A. Logan. An' miny's the other fellow played th' same thrick on th' good hearted ould man. An' a foine riputashun he got wid th' timperance people at hidquarthers.'"

THOUGHTS ABOUT LOVE.

Love is cheap, and I enjoy it.

It is another name for godliness.

It is the only modern swindle easy forgiven.

It is the ingredient that greases the saw of life.

It is a nice cross between religion and happiness.

Like the olive tree, it fertilizes the surrounding soil.

It lifts fifteen ounces off from every pound of sorrow.

It is the first virtue weaned, and begins to root early in life.

Like in small pox, in bad cases the only way to cure it is to die.

Some natures never succeed in loving anything but new cider.

The love that comes from heaven is that of a son for his mother.

It is just as natural for humanity to love as it is for a frog to jump.

It is charity's best substitute, as love is charity, with a pedigree from heaven.

It is the second law of nature, and plays second fiddle only to the law of self preservation.

Love dates from the beginning of the world, and is therefore the grandmother of creation.

Next to whiskey, it has probably done more to make a fool of man than any other one thing.

To many love is like the measles. It never catches either but once, and that seems to satisfy them.

Some people are not constituted to love anything, and I pity them as much as I do a spoiled child. They were made in vain.

There is the common sense love; the kind that, when its lavished affections are not reciprocated, apparently throws up the claim and makes love to the younger sister.

There is a species of love that never comes out of its hole and is of no more use in adversity than a pump handle in the Sahara Desert. For relieving the pain of the unfortunate it is about as much account as a weak poultice.

A FORTUNE TELLER.

One day Mrs. Lorrimer's daughter, Violet, was nowhere to be found; neither was the gentleman, Senor Espanol, who taught the guitar. The whole city was alarmed by the account of the mysterious disappearance of a beautiful belle and a hard-working gentlemanly young foreigner. However, when some one had discovered that the last gave lessons to the first, an inference was drawn by some cool lookers-on.

"May they not have gone together?"

The mother at once drove the slanderer from her presence, preferring the idea that her Violet was murdered. However, before long a penitent letter all blotted with tears reached the poor old lady, all alone in her great Fifth avenue mansion. Violet was married to Senor Espanol.

The more one loves a person the more furious does any deception on her part make one. A less loving mother might have forgiven. Stung to madness, this one wrote a terrible letter to the foolish girl who had so hurt her. The husband, a hot Spaniard, read it. It insulted him, and he forbade his wife ever to see her parent again. To do him justice, love, and no mercenary motive, had led him to elope with the pretty heiress.

So the gulf was fixed between the only two of the same blood who lived on earth, and Senor Espanol began to give lessons on the guitar for two instead of one. Then for three, four and five. If he had lived a little longer it would have been for six. But the day the fourth child was born, a countryman, who had mistook him for a rival, stabbed him in the back. He apologized the next moment, but the poor victim did not live to hear him through, but died trying to express the fact that the gentleman was perfectly excusable.

And so Violet, who had been very happy with her music master, was left a widow with four babies, no money, and no accomplishment that had been sufficiently cultivated to earn a living by. Of course she took in sewing, and of course a day came when there was a very small prospect of supper and not even a dream of breakfast.

Not a penny in the house, not a loaf of bread in the closet, not a dollar's worth of work to be got anywhere, what was she to do? The poor little woman walked up and down and cried. That did not help her. She looked over the relics of the past. There were pretty pieces of jewelry, worth nothing. Valuable things had all been sold long ago. She glanced out of the window. A woman with a very large new basket and no shoes went begging from door to door.

The basket was worth two dollars and a half, the shoes could be bought for two. The singular circumstance preyed upon her mind. She began to take an interest in the ways and manners of beggars as the awful expectation of becoming one began to haunt her.

"I could drown myself," she said, "but I could not well drown four children like a litter of puppies."

Then leaning her chin on her hands she watched from her window another with a handkerchief over her head going from door to door. Was she begging? It seemed not. Once or twice she entered and stayed some time. At last she saw her at her own door, and heard her going from room to room. There was a knock at the door. She opened it, and the woman was there.

"Well?" she said inquiringly.

"Let me tell your fortune, lady. I only charge twenty-five cents," said the woman.

"My fortune is told, since I have not twenty-five cents in the world," said Violet.

The woman turned away.

"Stop a minute," said Violet. "In this age do people say you tell your fortunes?"

"No age is too old," said the woman. "I just told an old lady's fortune below. It was in the cards that she was to have a husband—her fourth. She gave me a dollar. Look!" she opened her palm. "I make money, I do. I'm a seventh child; I see the future. I'll take any bit of jewelry if you have not any money. Have your fortune told?"

But Violet shook her head and closed the door hastily.

"I cannot steal, and to beg I am ashamed," said she to herself. "After it is dark to night I will go out and tell fortunes." Then she took two flat-irons to the junk shop, bought a loaf of bread and a pint of milk, and fed her four children—she for whom nothing had once been dainty enough, and who had ridden in her own carriage.

She put the children to bed, and left the key with a neighbor, in case of fire, a dread that haunts those many storied houses like a ghost, and then, disguised in veil, hood and shawl, went forth on her errand. It was a crazy dream. She had not courage to attempt fortune-telling. It was worse than begging. She wandered along the streets, coming at last to the homes of luxury. In the end she stood before her mother's window. There was a light in the basement, and through the lace curtains she saw a table spread, and the shadow of a figure she knew to be her mother's on the curtain; and there, drawing down the shade, was Martha, who had nursed her when a child.

Tears filled her eyes. It was a paradise which she never hoped to regain. Had not her mother written:

"A curse on you. Never darken my doors more unless you wish to hear me utter it."

But there at least she had not the terror of strangers upon her; she could beg or tell fortunes. Martha was superstitious and always had dreams of matrimony, and of the coming back of a lover who had gone to sea when she was in her teens, and had never been heard of since.

She crept up to the window and tapped on the panes. In a moment Martha opened the door.

The hooded figure drew near.

"Bother," remarked Martha, "I am past fortunes."

"What!" said Violet. "With a lover gone to sea?"

"Lord save us!" cried Martha.

"And in one place twenty years," said Violet.

"You know more than is good," said Martha. "Stop a bit. Are you one of them clairvoyants?"

"Yes," said Violet.

"Could you see where people are, what's come of them and that?" asked Martha. "For instance, a gal that's been gone eight years, could you look for her in a dream, like as I have heard they can, and find her?"

"Yes, I think I could," said Violet.

"Sit here, then," said Martha, pointing to a chair in the hall, and hurried into the dining-room.

She came back in moment.

"Come and speak to missus," she said. And Violet, trembling so that she could scarcely stand, entered her mother's presence.

No love is like a mother's. Violet had known that since she cast it off. She knew it now, looking on the pale face where wrinkles had come so thickly—on the hair, all turned gray now—on the sad eyes, that were so bright when she last saw them.

She longed to kneel at her mother's feet and beg forgiveness, but she dared not yet; had not she sinned too deeply to hope for pardon? She stood silent with her head bowed down.

"They tell me you are a clairvoyant," said Mrs. Lorrimer. "I have not much faith in such things, and if the power prospers its possessors so little it cannot be worth much; but still I have something I should like to ask you. You search for lost things?"

Violet bowed.

"If you can find something I have lost I will repay you well," said Mrs. Lorrimer. "Here, sit down. Perhaps if you have the knowledge, you can tell me what I have lost."

Violet sat down.

"It should be darker," she said—"will you lower the lights?"

Martha lowered the light and stood by the lady's chair—and there was silence. Violet had cast back her veil, but the firelight was not bright enough to show her features.

"Lady," she said, in a low voice, "it is not gold or silver, that I see; it is nothing that can be bought for money. What I see is a girl."

"Good heavens!" cried the old lady.

"A girl of sixteen, with fair hair and blue eyes," said Violet. "That was what she was when you saw her last. Am I right?"

"Yes," said Mrs. Lorrimer.

"You loved her," said Violet; "she loved you. But she deceived you; she was wicked—wicked—wicked; but there was an excuse for her. She fell in love; she was mad for awhile. She is gone. You will never see her more."

"Hush! hush!" cried Mrs. Lorrimer. "She was not bad. I was wicked; I knew what it was to love, yet I forsook her because she knew it also. Look again. How does life use her?"

"She is a widow, and very poor," said Violet. "So wretchedly poor that she does not know where to get bread; but she will not come to you. You would curse her. You will never see her again."

The old lady started from her chair.

"What are you?—How do you know the secrets of my life, the words I most repent uttering? Look again! Tell me I shall see her once more. Tell me where to find the only babe I ever held against my breast! My little one—my Violet—where is she?" And the woman she addressed fell upon her knees and clasped her hands.

"She is here," she cried, "Mother, she is here!" and the two wept together in each other's arms; and all was forgiven.

The good mansion is no longer desolate. There are little children's voices there, and mother and daughter are together once more. And in that other world, where we cannot believe that wrath endures, doubtless the lover of her youth rejoices that Violet's mother's fortune was told so well.

NO CHANGE.

"Got cider here?" he asked of a farmer on the market.

"Yes."

"Fresh?"

"Just made yesterday."

"I used to make cider myself."

"Did you?"

"Thousands of barrels. Ten years ago the proportion used to be six gallons of water to every barrel of cider. I wanted to ask you if there had been any change since then?"

"Guess not; haven't heard of any," was the candid answer.

EDITORS AND PROPRIETORS.

A RIGHT DEPARTURE.

Reports from Cincinnati speak of the Democrats of that heretofore corruptly governed city having recently nominated for important local offices the very best class of citizens that could possibly be selected, not because they were active partisans, not in response to their personal application for office, but solely upon the ground of their individual good character and ability.

If that be true, and we sincerely hope it is, such political action certainly marks a departure in the right direction, and not a moment too soon.

The fact cannot be ignored that political parties, not only in Cincinnati, but almost everywhere else, have often disgraced the name of politics by stamping as "regular nominees" men totally unworthy of public confidence or respect. And in that particular, truth compels us to acknowledge, that the Democratic party has been about as deep in the mud as the Republican has been in the mire.

It is time to inaugurate a radical change.

Instead of following the sound Jeffersonian requisites for office—"Is he honest, is he capable, is he of good report," men have been over and again nominated for responsible public positions whose sole claims consisted in their being either money corruptionists, or trading, wire-pulling politicians.

The people are growing more and more particular for whom they vote.

It would be well for party leaders to appreciate that important fact.

It is truth positive.

The day is rapidly approaching when candidates of doubtful character, no matter under what political banner they march, will fail to secure popular approval, and the party that boldly resolves to put none but thoroughly good and reliable men up for office, and resolutely sends bad ones to the rear, will win the victory.

We trust that party will be the Democratic.

Allan L. McDermott, the new Clerk in Chancery, recently appointed by the Governor, and confirmed by the Senate, took possession of the office on Monday last, Mr. George S. Duryee retiring. Mr. McDermott furnished bonds in the sum of $50,000. His term is for five years. He comes from Jersey City, where he was a Judge of the City District Court.

Ogilby, who robbed the Dime Savings Bank at New Brunswick, has been adjudged insane, and he has been committed to the New Jersey State Lunatic Asylum. This is a charitable conclusion, but as the defaulter's friends have raised $88,000 toward making good the deficiency, and expect to raise the remaining $12,000, we suppose no very rigid inquiry into his mental state will be made.

A new post office has been established at Lake Hopatcong station, and Mr. Wm. E. King, Director of the Board of Freeholders of Morris county, has been appointed postmaster. The office will be in the store of Mr. King and will be a great convenience to the Forcite Powder Works and its employees. The name of the office will be Landing. Felix J. Hinchman has been appointed postmaster at Danville.

Another Rahwegian has "caught on" to an appointment. Mr. I. Tench Davis recently received notice that he had been appointed by the Postmaster-General as a Post Office Inspector. This is a very pleasant position, requiring traveling to different points, with a good salary, free transportation and ample allowance for expenses. The appointment is first for a six months term on probation, at the end of which time, if all is satisfactory, the appointment is regularly made. We congratulate Mr. Davis upon his success.—National Democrat.

Workmen have begun to pump out the water from the Hudson River tunnel, which has been full of water for two years. The work of pumping out is a preliminary step toward exhibiting the work next week to capitalists who are interested in this great scheme. Mr. DeWitt C. Haskins, the projector of the tunnel project, went 600 feet into the tunnel last week, and says that the water has not hurt it. Construction could be recommenced within a week's time. Mr. Haskins says that a report that the New Jersey railroads are going to put up $15,000,000 to carry the tunnel through, and make New York city the terminus of their roads, is untrue. The tunnel, if completed, will be completed by other than railroad capitalists. When completed, however, it will be rented out to the railroads.

In executive session on Monday the Senate confirmed a large number of Postmasters and collectors of internal revenue whose nominations had been reported favorably from the respective Committees on Post Offices and Finance. Among the Collectors confirmed was Samuel J. Tilden, Jr., of New York, and the list included all of the Collectors of New Jersey, Ohio, Kentucky, Illinois, Wisconsin and Iowa. All of the Pennsylvania Collectors were confirmed except Fred Gerker of the Philadelphia district, whose nomination is held upon some charges now under investigation by the Finance Committee. The nomination of Collector Spear of the Vermont district was also confirmed without objection. This is the nomination which was returned to the Senate by Senator Morrill, accompanied by a written report. The only nomination rejected was that of the Postmaster at St. Albans, Vt., whose unfitness was recognized by all of the members of the Post Office Committee regardless of party, and the motion to reject was adopted by a unanimous vote. Senator Ingalls moved that the nomination of J. C. Matthews, the Albany colored man, for Register of Deeds in the District of Columbia, be recommitted to the District Committee. Matthews was reported adversely the other day upon a tie vote, all of the Republicans favoring his confirmation and all of the Democrats opposing it, the death of Senator Miller of California having left the committee evenly divided on party lines. There was no explanation made by Mr. Ingalls and no objection offered to his motion to recommit. It is supposed that the committee has received more light on one side of the case or the other. The nomination of Gen. O. O. Howard to be Major General was confirmed by a viva voce vote.

THE GREAT RAILROAD STRIKE.

The great railroad strike in the Southwest came to a termination it was supposed on Monday last. The proposition of Master Workman Powderly, in behalf of the Knights of Labor, to Mr. Jay Gould, to submit all differences to arbitration was on that day accepted by the latter, with certain conditions, the chief of which was that all strikers who have been engaged in acts of violence or disorder should not be taken back, nor should any person be discharged who had taken service with the Companies during the strike. Mr. Powderly accepted these conditions and an order was immediately issued by him to resume all work at once. On Monday night, however, the crafty Gould denied that he had yielded anything, and that his telegrams to Powderly were misconstrued. This placed the condition of affairs in a worse state than ever. Another long conference was held on Tuesday, which resulted in Mr. Powderly being obliged to accept a proposition from Vice President Hoxsie, who stated he was willing "to meet a Committee of the railroads employees, without discrimination, who are actually at work in the service of the Company at the time such Committee is appointed to adjust with them any grievances that they may have."

A bill has been introduced into the House of Representatives to legalize the arbitrations made by the Knights of Labor and the various railroad corporations. As the latter are public carriers the validity of such legislation is obvious, and if it can be made equitable would go far toward a satisfactory solution of the greatest problem of the century.

THE LEGISLATURE.

In the Senate Monday evening last Mr. Large offered a resolution that the Finance Committee be relieved from further consideration of the Five Per Cent. bill. Senator Youngblood, as chairman of the committee, stated that they were only holding the measure to give the opponents a chance to be heard, the friends of the bill having had that courtesy. The resolution was laid over. Mr. Large introduced bill No. 207, which appropriates $30,000 for the proposed sewerage plan for the Morristown Asylum. (Lunatic Asylums). S. 160, relative to the study of physiology and hygiene in our public schools, passed by the following vote: Yeas—Messrs. Carter, Chase, Chattle, Cranmer, Gardner, Griggs, Haines, Herring, Large, Livingston, Miller, Nichols, Pancoast, Thompson and Vanderbilt—15. Nays—Messrs. Bogert, Brinkerhoff, Fish, Mulkins, Moon and Youngblood—6. The following bills were passed in the Senate: S. 102, enabling cities to obtain a supply of water from existing city water works, and validates certain contracts and obligations heretofore incurred by such cities for that purpose; S. 199, provides for a polling place in any township that may be separated by three miles of bay from the mainland; H. 366, an act providing for filling of vacancies in the boards of trustees of incorporate hospital; H. 340, providing that where the charter and general election occur on the same day, the clerk's compensation, shall be $3; H. 132, making it lawful for Common Councils of cities, boroughs, etc., to pass ordinances to license persons engaged in junk business; H. 168, validating publication of legal notices in newspapers; H. 294, provides penalty for any children who live in houses where there is a contagious or infectious disease to attend any school without a certificate from a reputable physician.

STATE CAPITOL REBUILDING.

H. 137, appropriating $225,000 for the rebuilding of the State Capitol, was attacked by Senator Youngblood, who again cried "another job." He wanted an appropriation of $75,000 only, and made his usual attack upon all the appropriation bills. He attacked the Commission for going ahead and enlarging the building without first asking the Legislature. His amendment received just two votes beside his own, there being 17 against him. Then he offered another amendment making it $100,000. This Senator Vanderbilt opposed, and taking the Commission's report and Governor's message, showed the absolute need of the amount asked for, $225,000. After this amendment was lost, the second section was stricken out, which prohibited the purchasing of materials out of the State, and the bill was ordered to a third reading.

In the House Monday evening Mr. Corbin offered a resolution that the House take a recess on next Friday, at 12 o'clock, until Tuesday, June 1st, at 12 o'clock noon. Mr. Seymour wanted to make the time a week from next Friday. The amendment was defeated and the resolution was laid over until Wednesday. A number of bills were introduced in the House the same evening.

The House managed to conduct some important business Tuesday morning, notwithstanding the absence of Speaker Armstrong, who is Chairman of the Board of Managers of the Laverty impeachment trial, in progress on the other side of the building. Mr. McDonald's bill for the construction of a bridge across the gap at Warren street, Jersey City, was taken out of the hands of the committee and placed on the calendar. There was a sharp debate among the members when Corbin's bill abolishing days of grace on commercial paper throughout the State, came up on final passage. It was finally killed by a vote of 35 to 11. Potter's bill limiting the fare on railroads within a radius of 20 miles from New York to 1 cent a mile was passed, 17 votes being cast against the measure.

The only business transacted in the Senate to-day was the examination of witnesses in the impeachment trial of State Prison Keeper Laverty. Minnie Schaffer was on the stand all the morning under cross-examination by Judge Hoffman. The testimony was monotonous in the extreme, but the counsel succeeded in catching her on several important denials of her testimony given in court several weeks since. Then her mother and brother were sworn concerning the writing and reading of the letter which Minnie claims she wrote to Mr. Laverty for money. Quite a sensation was created in the chamber when Mrs. M. M. Marsh, formerly a matron in the prison, was called to the stand by the prosecution. There was a long discussion between counsel as to the admissibility of the witness's testimony, which, though damaging to the keeper, was purely hearsay, evidence of what transpired in conversations between the witness and convicts under her charge. The court decided that the testimony was competent, and it was admitted—all the lawyers in the Senate voting against its admissibility.

In executive session the Senate confirmed the nominations made by the Governor some time ago for Riparian Commissioners, Visitors to Agricultural College, State Council of Charities and Correction, Prosecutor of Union county and Law Judges, except Charles L. Munson, of Morris, who was rejected. The following new nominations were received from the Governor and referred: Law Judge—Hunterdon county, Augustus E. Sanderson, (reappointed); Prosecutors—Warren county, Sylvester C. Smith, (reappointed); Hunterdon county, Octavius P. Chamberlain; Passaic, William B. Gourley. Commissioner to select site for insane asylum, Daniel H. Leek, of Morris county, in place of A. A. Cutler, resigned.

Bitter Bread.

Complaint is frequently made by those who use baking powders that they leave in bread, biscuit, or cake raised by them a disagreeable, bitter taste. This taste follows the use of all impure baking powders, and is caused either by their containing alum (introduced to make a cheap article), by the impure and adulterated character of other ingredients used, or from the ignorance of their manufacturers of the proper methods of combining them. These baking powders leave in the bread a residuum formed of lime, earth, alum, or other deleterious matters, not always, though frequently, tastable in the food, and by all physicians classed as injurious to health. The Royal Baking Powder is free from this serious defect. In its use no residuum is left, and the loaf raised by it is always sweet, light, and wholesome, and noticeably free from the peculiar taste complained of. The reason of this is because it is composed of nothing but absolutely pure materials, scientifically combined in exactly the proper proportions of acid and alkali to act upon and destroy each other, while producing the largest amount of raising power. We are justified in this assertion from the unqualified statements made by the Government chemists, who after thorough and exhaustive tests recommended the "Royal" for Governmental use because of its superiority over all others in purity, strength, and wholesomeness. There is no danger of bitter bread or biscuit where it alone is used.

Spring Flowers.

The flowers that bloom in the spring are all very well in their way but they are not more beautiful, nor half as durable, as the assortment of Spring Overcoats now placed upon our counters for inspection, you can't afford to run the risk of catching cold nor of being thought poor when you can secure a stylish, all-wool Oversack for $5. Even this small amount will cover a multitude of shabbiness and perhaps you are not yet prepared to buy a spring suit. The other extreme in price is $22 but these are silk lined throughout, worth at least $30 and a garment such as no Merchant Tailor would think of making for less than $40. Between an infinite variety of all new goods in every shade, style or price. Recollect when we say "all-wool", even for a $5 Oversack we mean it, we hardly blame you for not believing though, for after all the highest standard to which commercial honesty has risen is that "Honesty is the best policy". Now that's a pretty low standard. While we know from experience that it does pay to be honest, our success has proven this, we claim to be honest because its right. But come and look at the coats they will bear out our statement anyway.

SUNDAY is Mid-Lent, and a new moon makes its appearance.

NORTH PLAINFIELD'S property owners should pay their fire taxes.

REGULAR monthly meeting of the Common Council next Monday evening.

ITEMS of interest to our lady readers are mentioned in Edsall's new advertisement this week.

THOSE watersheds (?) under the railroad bridges don't leak a bit worse than the bridges themselves.

THE express charges on the horse we spoke of as having been shipped to Mr. J. Evarts Tracy of this city, were about $165.

WE have not heard of the successful result, as yet, of any of the periodical petitions for the 5:15 p. m. train from New York. Start another.

AT the coal and lumber yards of Don & Gaylord, on Madison avenue, near the railroad, a fine and full line of fertilizers for all crops is offered.

WE hear many complaints because a payment of ten cents is necessary for admission to the art department of the Job Male Public Library building.

THE propositions for the lighting of certain portions of the city by gas or electricity, are to be opened by the Council at its meeting of next Monday evening.

THERE will be an election for the members of the Board of Managers of the Fire Department, Monday the 12th inst., and a regular meeting of the Board the following evening.

UNDER the direction of Manager Mundy of the Plainfield District Messenger Co., Mr. F. T. Waterbury of Stamford, Conn., has been in this city for some days past, perfecting the fire alarm system.

THERE was a fence built around that bill proposing to place the fire department under the control of the Common Council, but the firemen plainly saw the darkey concealed in it and kicked down the bars.

IT is proposed to make the second evening of the Grace church fair at The Crescent, May 18th and 19th, a special occasion. Lehman's orchestra will be engaged for the purposes of a grand promenade concert.

AN alarm of fire was sounded last Monday afternoon, but upon the arrival of the apparatus at a small building in the vicinity of the Potter Press Works, it was found that the danger had been overcome by those on the spot.

THE afternoon and evening meetings during the present week at Reform Hall have been largely attended, and the addresses of Major Hilton have interested and encouraged the workers and converts of the cause of gospel temperance.

MONDAY evening just before the six o'clock whistle blew, a local band serenaded the Scott printing machine works in celebration of the closing of the late strike. Mr. Walter Scott replied with a few appropriate words of thanks for all concerned.

So far it seems probable that Messrs. William H. Brower and William K. McClure will be elected Fire Commissioners by a large majority. But before the day of election, strong opposition may develope, and popular candidates nominated against them.

DR. DUPREE, the painless curer of all feet troubles, met with good success on his recent visit to Plainfield, and by request, will make another visit soon, due notice of which will appear in this paper. His coming again would be proof of reliability and every sufferer would call.

THE "Banker's Daughter" to be given at Music Hall, the 12th inst., will be the only performance during the rest of Lent. On the evening of Easter Monday, however, and the following Thursday, two of the greatest attractions of the season will be presented—Templeton's "Mikado," and Modjeska.

THE striking employees of the Scott Printing Machine Works have returned according to a schedule advancing their wages from five to twenty-five cents a man, arranged by Mr. Scott before the men "went out." It is a matter of satisfaction all around, that this needless strike has been adjusted.

THE first of April and moving day is again upon us. How many years longer will the landlords of this city remain in the old rut that so interferes with those moving from other places where leases universally expire on the first of May? And, besides, so early in the season is generally a most uncomfortable time to change.

THE Bound Brook Chronicle plainly gets its Plainfield news from some fountain of ignorance. It published last week the wonderful tale of a gas explosion that blew a plumber up to the ceiling, and a powder explosion that startled the inhabitants of Dunellen into a belief that the Borough was visited by an earthquake.

FROM the active preparations that are being made and the enthusiasm of all concerned, we are forced to believe that the May fair of Grace church, in The Crescent, will dim with its greater brilliancy all fairs of the past. The efforts of the willing hearts and the willing hands of the fair ladies, will, we trust, receive a just reward.

A DESIRE for centralization of power in the hands of the Common Council, is the secret of the advocacy by certain Councilmen of the bill we published last week. If the Council properly attends to the poor, the streets, the lights, the police, the ordinances and the finances of the municipality, it will have its hands full, and all the trusts the community desires to repose in it.

THE Haines family of hotel beats are still circulating through the State seeking whose rations they may devour and what free board they can secure. The fact that although so well known they yet find some one to victimize, is only less strange than the fact of their freedom from the clutches of the law. The county jail is the only hostelry that has not as yet, furnished them with board and lodging.

A DISCHARGED workman, who had skipped the town leaving an unpaid board bill behind him in North Plainfield, was the authority for an article in the New York World of last Friday reflecting most wilfully and falsely upon the Rev. Edward Love, proprietor of the factory for making rolls for printing wall-paper, at the corner of Park and North avenues, this city. Every statement was a lie, and an emphatic denial by every one of Mr. Love's employees immediately followed.

ALL the tanks were full Wednesday morning.

IF last week's storm was the "equinoctial", what do you call that of this week?

ALREADY this question is being asked and agitated—who is to be our next Mayor?

THE Rev. J. H. Vincent will preach in the M. E. church next Sunday morning and evening.

THE Mayor and Council of the Borough of North Plainfield, hold their regular monthly meeting this evening.

THERE is any quantity of moving into the city, and lots of changing about, so the truckmen are happy, at least.

JACOB MORRALLER, the Front street jeweller, will shortly remove to No. 19 East Front street, in the store lately occupied by H. S. Barnes.

ONE of the most attractive stores in the city is that occupied by Demarest, the grocer, in the new building at the corner of Park avenue and Second street.

THROUGH insurance agent, Wm. A. Woodruff, the $225 damage by the explosion of gas in Sheriff Stiles' new building on Front street, was promptly adjusted and paid.

YESTERDAY was moving day. Subscribers of this paper who have or will change their address should notify us of the fact, giving at the same time their old address.

THE weather during the early part of the week has not been the most propitious for the quintette of Plainfield public school teachers that is spending its Midlent vacation at Ocean Grove.

THIS evening at No. 24 East Front street, there will be a raffle for a pair of seven dollar gaiters to aid Barney Tracy in procuring an artificial foot in place of the natural foot he lost by being run over by the cars".

THE sudden death from pneumonia is announced of Mrs. Lizzie Verdon Larkin, second daughter of the late Judge James Verdon of North Plainfield. The death occurred on Wednesday at her residence in New York.

THE property owners on Broadway owe a duty to the public as well as themselves. They should all chip in for the purpose of macadamizing that thoroughfare or expect the march of civilization to take another direction.

IN Y. M. C. A. Hall, Monday evening at eight o'clock, Dr. J. H. Vincent will lecture for men only on "Caring for one's self". Admittance is free to members, and those who procure tickets from the officers of the Association.

MANY of those who drive do not understand that the law gives the right of way to the pedestrian. A man or woman who is crossing the street is not obliged to look out for the man who is driving the team, but it is the contrary.

ALTHOUGH the Borough of North Plainfield cannot afford sidewalks of its own, it certainly has power sufficient invested in it to compel property owners to replace missing boards from such plank walks as may be built before their houses.

MESSRS. W. K. MCCLURE, E. B. Pope and E. D. Moffett of this city have been nominated by the Governor and confirmed by the Legislature as Commissioners of Deeds for Union county. Their terms of office begin April 1, and continue for five years.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Bennington Democrat wants to know if it is proper to urge a young lady to sing at an evening gathering after she has refused once. And Editor Runkle says: "It is proper to urge a little, but not too much, lest she should change her mind."

AN Evening Sociable was held at the residence of Miss Annie Mosher, on the corner of Peace and Fourth streets, last Wednesday evening. Fifteen couples were present and enjoyed themselves in dancing and other pleasures. The occasion was one of unusual enjoyment.

THE State Superintendent of Public Education says that the reason why the compulsory education law failed, was: because there is not school room enough; and because the constables who are to enforce the law have no provision in the law whereby they will be adequately paid for their services.

THE Society for the Prevention of Crime is sending circulars to all dealers notifying them to stop the sale of baking powders that contain tickets offering prizes to such purchasers as may secure them. The sale of anything of the sort is in violation of law, and the society proposes to prosecute those who deal therein.

DURING Wednesday night, the Boston Clothing Co., of No. 34 Park avenue, moved into its new quarters opposite, and Messrs. Lutkins & Hummer moved into the store vacated by the Clothing Co. Both have thereby secured much more commodious quarters, and are better able to accommodate the increased business that will come in the future.

THE Borough of Dunellen is a limited one with Commissioners instead of a Mayor and Council, but within its boundaries of a square mile reside some of the most philanthropic of the State's inhabitants. They propose to perfect it as a place of residence, and besides their individual tax will each donate a yearly sum towards the improvement of the Borough at large.

WITH an expenditure for new hose that is greatly needed, and the repairs that are necessary to No. 2 steamer, out of this year's funds at the disposal of the Fire Department, followed by a thorough overhauling of No. 1 steamer next year, we will be equipped in a manner that will afford all the service and protection that can be desired, and as well as any department in the State.

MISS MARY WALKER, a lady who has been acting as nurse in the family of Mr. Fred Knowland, of Seventh street, lost an envelope containing about $80, somewhere on either Park avenue or Seventh street between the house and the post office. This was all the lady possessed, and, in consequence, the loss is of much account to her. A liberal reward will be paid for the return of the money to Mr. Knowland's.

TUESDAY evening at Music Hall, Den Thompson gave his last impersonation of his original part of "Joshua Whitcomb," and will open in Boston, next week, with a new play and a new character. Tuesday evening's appearance was the second in this city, and although the rain came down in torrents about eight o'clock, the house was two-thirds full. Many old faces were recognized in the company, and as a whole the performance was as satisfactory as before.

THE newly constituted Boroughites of Dunellen are to hold an election on Tuesday of next week for the purpose of choosing Commissioners. Two tickets are in the field, one, "The Regular," consisting of Messrs. C. Schepflin, P. W. Brakeley, R. J. Swackhammer, J. W. Handren, R. Lowrie, John Runyon and John Hunt. The other, "The Independent," consisting of Messrs. B. Smith, S. T. Tallman, Samuel Luckey, Joseph Maier, G. W. Thomas, A. Gray and John Moynahan. Five hundred dollars is to be voted for use by the Commissioners on the roads.

A FULL attendance is desired at the Industrial school next Saturday, April 3. Special garments will then be distributed to those in the garment classes who wish to try for the prize offered for the best made garments. All will work on the same kind of article this year, thus making the competition more fair. Those in the lower classes will commence their prize "strips" on Saturday, May 1. Prizes will also be given for the best button-hole, best piece of darning and best set of fancy stitches. Prize work will be on exhibition at the closing day exercises.

A Year of Fridays.

Somebody points out that this year came in on Friday and will go out on Friday, and that it has fifty-three Fridays. Two months in the year came in on Friday, and two go out on Friday. There are five months in the year that have five Fridays. The phases of the moon change five times on Friday, and the sun was eclipsed on March 5, which fell on Friday. The longest day in the year and the shortest fall on a Friday. People who have a superstitious prejudice on Friday will be apt to see strange coincidences in all this.

The Post Office.

The new postmaster, Mr. W. L. Force, took formal possession of the Post Office in this city on April 1st. The location of the office will remain the same as now. Parties renting lock and call boxes are informed that they may retain the same numbers at the same rates. The retiring postmaster, Mr. Pope, has the congratulations of the public upon the efficient manner in which the patrons of the office have been served during his term and the superior facilities afforded. Under the administration of his successor the same state of affairs will exist.

A Big Victory For The Firemen.

The "Livingston Bill," which we again publish in full below, was urgently pressed by the firemen of this city, passed the Senate, unanimously, and during Tuesday's session was adopted by the House with only one dissenting vote:

An Act for the relief of incorporated fire departments in this State.

1. Be it enacted by the Senate and General Assembly of the State of New Jersey, That whenever any incorporated fire department of this State is limited to raising in any one year for the purposes of the department any definite sum, such sum may be increased by the governing body of such department, whenever in their judgment the public necessities shall require such increase, to a sum not exceeding the rate of twenty-five (25) cents of each and every one hundred dollars of the value of the real and personal property in the place where such department shall exercise its power, such valuation to be determined as the same appears on the assessor's books of such place for the last preceding year, and such increased sum shall be assessed and collected in the same manner as the original and limited amount.

2. And be it enacted, That all acts and parts of acts, general and special, inconsistent with this act, be and the same are hereby repealed.

3. And be it enacted, That this act shall take effect immediately.

In Memoriam.

Whereas, our Treasurer, Mrs. Burlingham, has been called upon to pass through the deep waters of affliction in losing her dear companion, and her heart is bowed down with grief in this trying hour of loneliness and sorrow. We would, as sisters, unite in bestowing our sympathy and love, and endeavor by presence and prayers to assist her in carrying her heavy cross, thus following the teachings of the Blessed Book, which says—"Bear ye one another's burdens," and "Weep with them that weep." We would also recognize the fact that the Hospital has lost one of its founders and skillful physicians, one who has stood by it nobly, and has given the best of his knowledge and skill to the patients under his care, and has faithfully endeavored to seek the Hospital's best interest in every particular. For the performance of this trust committed to him, he will be rewarded by the Great Physician according to the service rendered. We would direct our dear friend to lean hard upon the loving Christ who will uphold her with His everlasting arms, who will not forsake her in the time of trouble, for He knows the way, and will lead her, we trust, out of the darkness into the light, and to see the crown over every cross.

MRS. T. H. TOMLINSON, Sec'y.

To the Ladies Auxiliary Board, Muhlenberg Hospital.

An Enterprising Young Merchant.

Upon the ruins of the fire of May 24th, 1884, at the corner of Park avenue and Second street, has arisen a building that is one of the city's greatest ornaments—a credit to the generosity of the owner, Mr. William Moore—who erected the structure according to the taste of Mr. Frank C. Green, the popular young merchant who occupies the larger part of the premises—and to the architectural ability and judgment of Mr. Jesse Oakley. From the very beginning of the building's construction, enterprise has marked its progress and is plainly noticeable in its completion. Started at the commencement of Winter, by perseverance and energy, it has been pushed forward through sunshine and storm, until thus early in the Spring is announced the "opening" of the elegant and extensive furniture warerooms that occupy the corner store and the two upper stories of the entire building. The crowds that pass throughout the day and evening are attracted by the magnificent display that is spread out within the magnificent show windows, and inside visitors have been filled with admiration at the varied assortment of handsome and serviceable household furniture that Mr. Green is offering his extended trade in Plainfield and vicinity. Nowhere in the State is so great a stock or finer goods exhibited, nor an establishment better adapted for such purpose. Extensive room is available for the showing of parlor suits in embossed and gilded leather, silk plush and carved woods, chamber suits in polished ash, cedar, rosewood, mahogany and walnut, and everything in the line of furniture for interior, ornament, decoration or use, from a hand-carved mantel costing hundreds of dollars to a bamboo cradle costing as many cents. A visit to this establishment, where everyone is welcome, is necessary to appreciate the beauty and utility of the goods displayed. The columns of this paper are too short to hold therein even a slight reference to all that is exhibited; but suffice it to say that the largest art rooms of New York do not present a finer show. Mr. Green has secured the services of Mr. Samuel Dean of Boston, who will have charge of the department of upholstery and drapery. This gentleman's experience of many years, his marvellous taste and judgment of what is demanded by the fashions of the present day, specially fit him for the position, and will insure the satisfaction of the patronage this establishment aims to, and will succeed in, gaining. Elegant goods, reasonable prices and fair dealing, is bound to build up for Mr. Frank C. Green a business second to none in the country in the same line.

Board of Education.

The Board of Education last Monday evening elected Mr. Hurlbut President protem during the absence of President Murray in Europe, which will probably be until the middle of June. The Board is endeavoring to have the new building ready for occupancy by the first of May, as it is greatly needed.

The Audubon Society.

The Audubon Society (named after the great naturalist) founded last February, is rapidly increasing its membership in all parts of the country. The purpose of the society is to prevent—(1) The killing of any wild bird not used for food. (2) The taking or destroying of the eggs or nests of any wild birds. (3) The wearing of the feathers of wild birds. The office is at 40 Park Row, New York. The society wishes a local secretary in every town and village to secure signers of its pledge; and will, upon application, furnish circulars of information and pledge forms. Upon the return of the signed pledges certificates of membership will be issued. Beyond the promise contained in the pledge no obligation nor responsibility is incurred. There are no fees, no dues nor any expenses of any kind. There are no conditions as to age. The promoters of the movement are sanguine of effecting a great change of sentiment relative to the destruction of our songsters and insect destroying birds for hat decoration.

Maxson and has continued in his office since his admittance into the profession, succeeds to the deceased's business and has been appointed receiver of the Hotel Netherwood to fill the vacancy in that particular caused by Mr. Maxson's death.

The funeral took place at his late residence, Tuesday morning at eleven o'clock.

More About The Water Works Franchise.

MESSRS. EDITORS:—In your issue of February 18th you were good enough to publish a letter, written by me in explanation of the water works question, and my connection therewith. I now find that two remarks, which I made in that letter, have been entirely misunderstood and seem to have caused considerable ill feeling. The source from whence this information is derived is so reliable that I have no doubt the misunderstanding really exists, and I, therefore, beg of you to allow me the use of your columns to remove an impression which I never intended to convey. First—In writing about the water works and the proposed plan of action with regard to an application to Council, construction of works, etc., etc. I simply wrote on behalf of the firm of Sam'l. R. Bullock & Co., of 11 Wall street, New York, in whose employ I am. It appears, however, that people here have lost sight of this fact and have come to the conclusion that I individually intended to apply for a franchise and build the works. I may as well say right here, that I could not do so, even if I had wanted to accomplish it, for it requires a large amount of ready cash and a complete knowledge of the technical details to build a system of water works. All I have done has been to bring up the water works question in the interests of the firm in whose employ I am. This firm is now building several works in different parts of the Union, employing altogether over seven hundred men, and has completed three water works within the last six months. If the Council of Plainfield decide to take the water works question into serious consideration, and should call for bids from water works builders, the firm by whom I am employed would then hand in their proposition, stating exactly what they propose to do and what guarantee they will furnish for the due and faithful performance of their contract. I now come to the second point. In my letter, above referred to, I said that Messrs. S. R. Bullock & Co., made it a point "not to employ foreign labor," and this remark appears to have given great offence. People seem to have interpreted it this way: That Messrs. S. R. Bullock & Co., would refuse to give work to any "foreigner." Now, let me explain briefly what was meant and what I intended to convey. Messrs. Bullock & Co., make it a point to give work to the unemployed working men, irrespective of their nationality, who reside in or near the place where the works are to be located. My firm does not believe in getting gangs of immigrants from Castle Garden at low wages for the sake of saving a few dollars, while there are good men looking for employment right amongst us. So long as a man is willing to work it matters not whether he be American, Irish, German, Italian or anything else, and I would here remark that it would ill become me to object to "foreigners"—as it so happens that I am of foreign birth myself. If any of your readers would like further explanation concerning the water works question they will be most welcome at the office of the firm, No. 11 Wall street, Mortimer building, where all information relating to the matter will be cheerfully given. Messrs. S. R. Bullock & Co., believe, and rightly so, I think, that publicity in such matters, and a thorough discussion of the project, is only to their advantage and makes things more satisfactory to all concerned. I remain, gentlemen,

Yours respectfully,
E. WOLFMANN.

IN MEMORY OF WILLIAM B. MAXSON.

BY M. M. THORN.

A broken shaft, a fallen tower,
A light gone out, a mighty power,
A brother friend, a gen'rous heart,
Would lend a hand and act his part.

With counsel good, his acts have won,
To his credit, second to none,
Ever ready, early and late,
To save the fallen inebriate.

A kindly word, a willing hand,
A generous purse were at command.
This shining light, it set full soon,
His sun went down, while yet 'twas noon.

Yet all is well, 'tis God's behest
That we labor, and he take rest.
Rest, brother, rest, thy sheaves shall tell
Of thy labors, and just how well.

No tablet stone, or monument,
Shall ever be, to mortal lent,
Than this, which we, thy brothers rear
Within our hearts; it shall endear

Thee in our minds, nor be displaced
By vandal hand, or e'er defaced.
So fare thee well, we kiss the rod,
Are reconciled, 'twas will of God.

SPORTSMEN'S CORNER.

English snipe have made their appearance. A few have been killed on the meadows along the Passaic.

Woodcock begin to arrive. Now let every lover of law and decency look out for the detestable pot-hunters who will shoot this bird out of season. The penalty for killing a woodcock until July first is fifteen dollars.

The Middlesex Gun Club have received a friendly challenge from the Jersey City Heights Gun Club to shoot a team match, of twenty members a side, at seven live birds each, the event to take place Thursday, April 8th.

The following is the law of Pennsylvania regarding trout. The act of Assembly of June 11, 1885, Pamphlet Laws 109, provides: "That it shall be unlawful for any person to catch, kill, or expose for sale, or have in his or her possession, after the same has been caught or killed, any speckled trout, save only from the fifteenth day of April to the fifteenth day of July, under a penalty of ten dollars for each trout so killed or had in possession, but this act shall not prevent any person from catching trout with nets in waters owned by himself to stock other waters."

SCOTCH PLAINS SCRATCHINGS.

Sucker parties are now in order here.

Henry Cook has exchanged his house on Westfield avenue with Mr. Benns, for his brown stone house on Vernon avenue, Brooklyn. Mr. Benns takes immediate possession.

Those lovely little cottages built by the Land Improvement Co., at Fanwood station, are rapidly being rented. They are near the depot, with beautiful surroundings and reasonable rent.

We regret very much to chronicle the removal of three of our most genial and prominent citizens, namely, Mr. Burke, Mr. George Lyon and John T. Pattinson. The last named has been a resident here over forty years. He was a staunch Democrat, and a vigorous worker for the party. Their residence hereafter will be Bound Brook.

But for the timely warning of his son Lewis, the residence of Daniel Allen, on Front street, would have been burned to the ground. The son was awakened by a strong and suffocating smell of smoke that pervaded the entire house, and upon examination, it was found that the sitting room underneath was in flames. The mantle-piece, closet and floor were consumed. It was only by the most strenuous efforts of the family that the fire was subdued. Circumstances point to the stove as the cause.

The Township Committee of Fanwood Township met at Excelsior Hall, Saturday, March 17th inst., at 4.30 p. m. All the members were present. Minutes of last meeting were read and approved. Treasurer reported as follows: Balance as stated at last meeting, $640.26; received from John Flannery, license, $30; total, $670.26; paid out by order of Committee, $61.45; balance on hand, $608 81. The following bills were ordered paid: Jas. Ritchie, inspector of election, $6; Excelsior Hook & Ladder Company for rent of rooms to April 8, 1886, $25; W. W. Connolly, funeral expenses, D. M. Clark, $15; P. Traynor, groceries furnished J. Clark, $5; J. Waterson, overseer of poor, $2.75. Official oaths of Chas. H. French, assessor; Thos. R. Mead, J. B. Lambert and Thomas M. Paff, Sr., Commissioners of Appeals; Philip Radig and Thomas Lee, Surveyors of the Highways, and Alphonso Laine and Hezekiah Hand, Constables, were presented and placed on file. Official bonds in the sum of $500 each were offered by Constables Pangborn, Laine and Hand, and were approved and ordered on file. Applications for licenses were received from John L. Roulstone, Thomas M. Paff and Lambert D Camp, and were granted from April 2, 1886, to April 2, 1887. Certificates of road meeting, district No. 7, received, and the election of Thomas Lee as overseer confirmed. Whereas, the Collector elected at the annual town meeting held March 9, 1886, did not qualify within the time prescribed by law, it was resolved that Daniel H. Terry be appointed Collector for the township of Fanwood for ensuing year. Mr. D. H. Terry presented his official bond in the sum of $10,000, which was approved and ordered placed on file. Communication from Mr. John Lambert was received and placed on file. Mr. Wm. H. Terry was made a committee (on behalf of the Township Committee) to settle all disputes that may arise between overseer of road district No. 6, and the inhabitants thereof. Mr. Wm. Hetfield, ex Collector, presented statement showing full amount in his hands due Fanwood Township, including school money $1,763.51, for which amount he gave his check in settlement. The amount of money due the schools of $1,491 43, was paid to Mr. D H. Terry, the new Collector. Justice C. A. Smith was requested to issue warrant to Daniel H. Terry for collection of delinquent taxes. Adjourned to meet Saturday, April 3, 1886, at 7 p. m.

Some Early Shad.

The regular season for shad catching does not begin hereabouts till April 10th, but shad are already beginning to make their appearance. The first in this vicinity was a pair weighing nine pounds caught at Charles Holt's fishery near Yardleyville, on Friday last. Down at Penngrove the first catch occurred Saturday when 550 fish were netted. They were caught by gillers of Stow Creek, and were disposed of in the markets at good prices. It is expected that the seiners will begin at Gloucester in a few days, as it is anticipated the run of fish will begin earlier than usual. The shad have passed the Potomac River already and are moving northward along the coast. Chas. Britton and Chas. Bunting of the Sixth ward on Friday evening caught a six-pound shad.—Trenton True American.

A great many "beats" can always be found in the heart of a great city.

"Why are great men melancholy?" asks the Sweet Singer of Michigan. We feel sad because there are so few of us; so very few of us.

DUNELLEN DOINGS.

Chas. Boice is not able to be at his business on account of a long illness.

Mr. Fred Enander has commenced the erection of a new shop next to M. Finger's bakery.

S. Boice will soon open a confectionery store in Todd's block, lately occupied as P. W. Brakeley's drug store.

Last Friday night two young men undertook to drive down the mountain back of this place. When about half way down, the horses became frightened and started to run away, and were only checked by one of the young men jumping out and risking his life by catching the frightened animals by the head. The young men think they will not try it again without a brake on the wagon.

GRANT.

NEW MARKET NOTES.

Mr. Kelly, wagon maker, removes to Westfield this week.

Mr. Homer, butcher, is about to remove to Hightstown.

The Postmaster has removed into the Widow Nelson's house.

The Labb House, on the Westervelt place, is nearing completion. The family is expected to arrive early in April to take possession.

Mr. Charles Ward has taken possession of his new store, in which the new Post Office is now located. It is a handsome one-story building and is one of the most substantial structures yet erected.

And still another fire! The grocery store of Mr. Larrabee was discovered to be on fire before eleven o'clock on Friday night last, and the explosion of a few pounds of gunpowder awakened the inhabitants from their early slumbers and was heard as far away as Westfield. The brick dwelling adjoining was gutted, but all household effects were saved. Mr. Larrabee was reported to have sold out to Mr. Davis and the remainder of the stock was to have been removed to the store lately occupied by Charles Ward, on the first of April. The store was small and the loss sustained could not have been large under any circumstances. A rigid investigation is needed in this vicinity. We have within two years had more fires than have occurred within a quarter of a century. Beginning with the Mahlon Vail place barn and dwelling, destroyed within a few days of each other, then the Rogers grocery and Dunham's clothing factory, Ransom's printing office, followed by a small building containing an unmarketable lot of dyes, the Alberti barn, and now the only Seventh-day grocery. It has startled the community and in the absence of cause known for their occurrence, suggests a wise and searching investigation which I hope the insurance companies will formulate and try to discover whether we have located in our midst a very unfortunate lot or some parties that want watching.

BROAD BRIM.

WESTFIELD WISPS.

In old times barbers used to pull teeth and bleed people. Now they talk them to death.

Mr. Joseph G. Hemson, of Bayonne, N. J., was in our town on Monday last, looking after his business interest.

The health record of our town equals any town of its size in the State. Free from malarial fevers, pure water, and clear bracing air.

The sociable held at Temperance Hall on Monday evening last, under the auspices of the W. C. T. U., was largely attended, and a very pleasant evening spent.

Mr. James T. Pierson has began the erection of an addition to the store corner of Broad and Elm street, to accommodate his large increasing dry goods trade. It is to make more room, putting the grocery business in the rear.

The death of Peter J. Wahl, father of John J. Wahl, aged seventy-six years, occurred on Monday last. His funeral was held on Wednesday at Stony Hill church, where the deceased's family resided before coming to our town to live with his son.

Mr. James Roll has sold to Mr. Valentine O. Burtis thirty acres of his farm on Springfield road. Mr. Burtis expects to erect a residence on the same this Spring. Give us good crushed stone roads and there will be no trouble for our farmers to sell all or a portion of their farms, on which dwellings will be erected.

The death of Mrs. Jane Hall, aged 80 years, occurred on Monday last, at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. John S. Burhans, on Prospect street. Mrs. Hall has been an invalid for a number of years. The funeral services were held at the house on Tuesday afternoon. The Rev. G. Smith of the Methodist church officiated. The body was taken by the cars on Wednesday morning, to be interred in the family plot at Cedar Lawn Cemetery, near Passaic, N. J.

Ex-Postmaster Decker has thoroughly refitted his store, in papering and painting it, the ceiling covered with narrow cherry, making as fine a store of its size in the State. On the side where the post office fixtures were, he has a large counter on which is displayed a fine and choice lot of cloths of latest patterns. Mr. Decker gives his whole attention to the business, and is ready to meet any demand for custom-made clothing and guarantees a perfect fit. There is no need of our residents going out of town to be suited in style as well as price.

Crosby into his recently purchased house on Westfield avenue; Mr. James B. Carbery, from Broad street, to the McQuoid house on Westfield avenue; Justice Whittre, from Broad street, to his new residence on Hillside avenue; Mr. Ben Berry and family, from Westfield avenue, boarding at hotel; Prof. J. CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC RAILWAY
By reason of its central position and close relation to all principal lines East and West, at initial and terminal points, constitutes the most important mid-continental link in that system of through transportation which invites and facilitates travel and traffic between cities of the Atlantic and Pacific Coasts. It is also the favorite and best route to and from points East, Northeast and Southeast, and corresponding points West, Northwest and Southwest.
The Rock Island system includes in its main line and branches, Chicago, Joliet, Ottawa, La Salle, Peoria, Geneseo, Moline and Rock Island, in Illinois; Davenport, Muscatine, Washington, Fairfield, Ottumwa, Oskaloosa, West Liberty, Iowa City, Des Moines, Indianola, Winterset, Atlantic, Knoxville, Audubon, Harlan, Guthrie Centre and Council Bluffs, in Iowa; Gallatin, Trenton, Cameron and Kansas City, in Missouri; Leavenworth and Atchison, in Kansas; Albert Lea, Minneapolis and St. Paul, in Minnesota; Watertown in Dakota, and hundreds of intermediate cities, towns, villages and stations.
THE GREAT ROCK ISLAND ROUTE
Guarantees its patrons that sense of personal security afforded by a solid, thoroughly ballasted road-bed; smooth tracks of continuous steel rail; substantially built culverts and bridges; rolling stock as near perfection as human skill can make it; the safety appliances of patent buffers, platforms and air-brakes; and that exacting discipline which governs the practical operation of all its trains. Other specialties of this route are Transfers at all connecting points in Union Depots, and the unsurpassed comforts and luxuries of its Passenger Equipment.
The Fast Express Trains between Chicago and the Missouri River are composed of well ventilated, finely upholstered Day Coaches, Magnificent Pullman Palace Sleepers of the latest design, and sumptuous Dining Cars, in which elaborately cooked meals are leisurely eaten. "Good Digestion waiting on Appetite, and Health on both." Between Chicago and Kansas City and Atchison, are also run the Celebrated Reclining Chair Cars.
THE FAMOUS ALBERT LEA ROUTE
Is the direct and favorite line between Chicago and Minneapolis and St. Paul, where connections are made in Union Depots for all points in the Territories and British Provinces. Over this route, Fast Express Trains are run to the watering places, summer resorts, picturesque localities, and hunting and fishing grounds of Iowa and Minnesota. It is also the most desirable route to the rich wheat fields and pastoral lands of interior Dakota.
Still another DIRECT LINE, via Seneca and Kankakee, has been opened between Newport News, Richmond, Cincinnati, Indianapolis and Lafayette, and Council Bluffs, Kansas City, Minneapolis and St. Paul and intermediate points.

The "PERFECTION." All Porcelain.
WE take pleasure in calling attention of our customers and all interested in sanitary matters to the all porcelain "Perfection," the only square top Hopper, with trap, made.—For perfect cleanliness and simplicity of construction we invite comparison with any Closet ever manufactured, either home or foreign. It combines, with the utmost simplicity, all the points of a strictly first-class water-closet.
The square top will make itself apparent to all users, [illegible] doing away with a slop tray, the wash at all times thoroughly scouring all parts, whereas in the drip tray it cannot help but become foul underneath. It has a seal in Trap of 1½ inches, and the soil pipe vent of 2 inches diameter, as will be seen in the above cut, will prevent all syphoning of Trap. The two local or seat vents of 1½ inches diameter are intended for right or left ventilation, the one not being used to be closed. The large handhole in front gives free access to all parts of trap.

BILIOUSNESS.
Bilious symptoms invariably arise from indigestion, such as furred tongue, vomiting of bile, giddiness, sick headache, irregular bowels. The liver secretes the bile and acts like a filter or sieve, to cleanse impurities of the blood. By irregularity in its action or suspensions of its functions, the bile is liable to overflow into the blood, causing jaundice, sallow complexion, yellow eyes, bilious diarrhœa, a languid, weary feeling and many other distressing symptoms. Biliousness may be properly termed an affection of the liver, and can be thoroughly cured by the grand regulator of the liver and biliary organs, BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS. It acts upon the stomach, bowels and liver, making healthy bile and pure blood, and opens the culverts and sluiceways for the outlet of disease. Sold everywhere and guaranteed to cure.

PYÆMIA
Is the most virulent form of blood-poisoning. Less speedily fatal, but not less certainly so, is the vitiation of the blood of which the first symptoms are Pimples, Sties, Boils, and Cutaneous Eruptions. When the taint of Scrofula gives warning of its presence by such indications, no time should be lost in using AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, the only perfect and reliable medicine for the purification of the blood.
SCROFULA
Is a foul corruption in the blood that rots out all the machinery of life. Nothing will eradicate it from the system and prevent its transmission to offspring but AYER'S SARSAPARILLA. This preparation is also the only one that will cleanse the blood of Mercurial poison and the taint of Contagious Diseases. Impoverished blood is productive of
ANÆMIA,
A wretched condition indicated by Pallid Skin, Flaccid Muscles, Shattered Nerves, and Melancholy. Its first symptoms are Weakness, Languor, Loss of Nerve Force, and Mental Dejection. Its course, unchecked, leads inevitably to insanity or death. Women frequently suffer from it. The only medicine that, while purifying the blood, enriches it with new vitality, and invigorates the whole system, is

A KISS THROUGH THE TELEPHONE.

The Telephone,
In merry tone,
Rang "Tinkelty, tinkelty-tink!"
I put my ear
Close up to hear,
And what did I hear, do you think?

"Papa, hello!
'Tis me, you know!"
The voice of my own little Miss.
"You went away
From home to-day,
And you never gave me—a kiss!

"It was a mistake,
I was not awake,
Before you went out of the house;
I thought that a kiss
Would not be amiss
If I gave it as sly as a mouse!

"So here goes, papa,
And one from mamma,
And another when you come home;
Just answer me this,
Is it nice to kiss,
When you want through the dear telefome."

"Hello!" I replied,
With fatherly pride,
I've got them as snug as can be;
I'll give them all back,
With many a smack,
Whenever I come home to tea!"

Miscellaneous Reading

AN OPPORTUNE WITNESS.

"Well, I'm mighty glad to get home!" said Mr. Briscomb, emphatically.

And he climbed out of the buggy, with a beaming face, and hurried up the front walk; while the hired man, who had driven him home from the station, turned into the lane with a flourish and rattled down toward the barn.

Anybody might have been glad to get back to so cozy a home and to so unmistakable a welcome.

A big dog came bounding around the corner of the house to meet him, prancing around him excitedly and making frantic attempts to lick his face.

Mrs. Marks, the housekeeper—Mr. Briscomb was a hopeless bachelor—paused in her preparations for supper to smile and nod from the window; and two young persons, who were sitting on the front steps, jumped up hastily, took charge of Mr. Briscomb's satchel, and dragged a chair out on to the porch and pressed him into it.

These were Mr. Briscomb's boarders—Ruth Haines, who had come from the next county to teach the district school; and Horace Bennett, who was surveying for the new railroad and buying land therefor.

It was whispered that most of the surveying had been done in the neighborhood of the school-house, the children bearing witness to the fact that the young surveyor was a very frequent visitor, and that hardly a day passed that he was not on hand to walk home with the teacher.

"Well—" said Mr. Briscomb, removing his travel-stained hat and wiping his forehead.

And he stopped short, and appeared to fall into a reverie.

His companions were silent. They were not quite sure which would be the more appropriate—sympathy or congratulation.

Mr. Briscomb had been to a point several miles distant, to receive the money left him by a brother who had died six months ago—the six months having been consumed by a slow and sure system of probating.

"He was worth more than anybody thought," said Mr. Briscomb at last, abruptly. "He left Martha and the boys more than they can ever use up if they try; and he left me six thousand dollars."

The surveyor and the little school-teacher looked at each other breathlessly.

To them, working hard for their modest earnings, and more than appreciating the value of money, it seemed an overwhelming amount.

"I've got it right here," Mr. Briscomb continued, tapping his breast pocket, "and it's worried me all the way home. You see, I don't know what in the name of goodness to do with it."

"That's the last thing that would trouble me," said Horace, briskly; and Ruth laughed, as she always did at Horace's smiles.

"There's the bank," Mr. Briscomb went on, musingly, "but I'm afraid of banks. And there's the railroads; I suppose I might take stock in some of them. But I ain't partial to railroads, either. I guess I'd better keep it by me till I've looked around a little," he concluded, rubbing his chin disturbedly.

"Where will you keep it?" said Ruth, wonderingly.

"Well, I've been thinking about that," Mr. Briscomb responded, looking at the porch floor with contracted brows. "I thought of the back of the old settee, and the inside of the straw tick, and the clock case; but I've come to the conclusion that they be the first places anybody'd look. Finally I thought of the very thing. There's a loose board up in the floor of my room—the northwest corner—just room for a box under it. I can put my trunk over it, and there it is. Nobody'd think of going there."

"Nobody but me," said Horace cheerfully. "I should know exactly where to go."

At which Ruth laughed again, and Mr. Briscomb smiled absently.

He was very fond of his boarders, he often wondered how he could have thought the old house cheerful before they came, and what he should do when they were gone.

"I'd better get it off my mind," he said, rising, "I'll go and do it now."

And he went into the wide hall and up the stairs.

"He ought to invest it at once," said Horace, disapprovingly. "He'll always be uneasy while he has it on his hands."

"I am afraid so," said Ruth, looking after him regretfully.

And then the conversation drifted to less practical subjects than that of Mr. Briscomb's money, and was carried on in a rather lower tone.

It was of Mr. Briscomb's money that Ruth was thinking, however, as she sat in her window that night, looking down the sleeping road and listening to the chip of a belated cricket.

She had heard of a slight jarring sound from the next room—her host's; and her thoughts had flown immediately to the loose board and Mr. Briscomb's inheritance.

She sat motionless, with startled face, listening intently.

A soft step crept down the stairs—she heard it plainly; and the front door opened with a creak.

Ruth felt her heart beating fast and her hands trembling; but she arose to her feet and leaned far out of the window, straining her eyes.

A tall form stepped softly to the ground and made its way through the yard with a careful stealthy movement.

But at sight of it, Ruth gave a sigh of relief and laughed softly to herself.

She stood watching the proceedings of the ghostly figure until it turned and came toward the house—until the front door closed softly, and the stairs creaked under an ascending tread.

Curiosity, perplexity and amazement had filled her face in turn, to be followed by regretful pity.

"Poor man!" she said to herself compassionately. "It will worry him into his grave, at this rate."

* * * * * * *

School closed, a week or so later, for one of those untimely vacations which district school committees are fond of decreeing; and the surveyor drove Ruth to the station—she was to go home for the holidays.

These two had come to an understanding. Ruth wore a ring on the proper finger and all their conversation of late had been upon one subject—which was, upon how little a young couple of extremely modest wants could safely start out together.

They had not yet succeeded in bringing the probable amount within the narrow limits of Horace's salary, although their feats in this direction had been marvelous; but they had not dreamed of losing courage.

"I shall begin cutting rags for carpets as soon as I get home," said Ruth, cheerfully, as the train came rumbling in. 'Dear me! what will mother say?"

She shook her handkerchief from the window as the train moved off, and leaned forward to catch Horace's parting words:

"I'll be here to meet you, of course."

With that assurance still in her ears, it was no wonder that, when she stepped off the train, two weeks later, and looked around with an eager smile, the sight of the deserted little station should have filled her with something like dread.

Nobody was in sight except the station-master, and he was tipped back in a chair against the baggage-room door, half asleep.

Ruth walked to the edge of the platform, and looked anxiously up and down the road. There was a cloud of dust in the distance, and she watched it with a lightened heart.

But the wagon which lumbered up slowly and stopped before her was not Mr. Briscomb's nor was the tall young countryman who stepped out awkwardly, the person she had hoped to see. She recognized him as a neighbor of Mr. Briscomb, and her fears returned.

"Going down to Briscomb's, ain't you?" said the young man, hesitatingly. "Want to ride? I can take you down as well as not."

Ruth climbed into the wagon silently. Why had Horace not come? Something must be wrong.

"Heard about that surveyor fellow?" her companion observed, as they drove away, and he looked at her sympathetically.

"About what?" said Ruth, clutching the edge of her high seat, tremblingly.

"It was the day after school let out," said the young man, obviously divided between pity for her distress and his enjoyment of telling a startling story. "Briscomb went to mill that day, and the surveyor (Bennet) he went out to Crawford; he said he wanted to telegraph to the railroad company about something or other. Well, when Briscomb got back—you know he had a lot of money willed to him lately?—well, he got to thinking about that money, and he went to see if it was all right. He kept it up in his room, under the floor, with a trunk over it. Well, the money was gone?. The trunk was just as he left it, but the money wasn't there."

He paused to note the effect of this announcement, and stared at his companion in astonishment.

For there was something like amusement in her face.

"Well," she said calmly, "What did he do?"

"He told the neighbors about it. If you'll believe it, he hadn't thought of suspecting anybody of taking it; he always was good-natured. He thought it must have been rats that carried it off. But we thought right away of that surveyor, and when we found out that Briscomb had been simple enough to tell him where he kept it, we was pretty sure it was him that took it. So we went out to Crawford—two or three of us—and got out a warrant and arrested him. We didn't expect to find the money on him, of course; and it wasn't. But there ain't a doubt but what he's got it somewhere. Anyhow, he's having his trial now, out to Crawford, and the chances are all against him. We do things up quick out this way," he concluded, with an air of satisfaction.

Truly, this little school-teacher was a strange person. The amusement had died out of her face, and a profound indignation had filled it.

She grasped his arm eagerly.

"He did not take it!" she said, scornfully. "I know where it is this minute. You must drive me out to Crawford immediately!"

She snatched the whip from its socket as she spoke and touched the horses lightly.

* * * * * * *

The Crawford court-house was filled to overflowing. The trial, coming as it did into the midst of the sleepy summer days, when excitements were few, had proved a great attraction.

It was an exceptional trial, too. The plaintiff had been unwilling to prosecute, and had seemed troubled ever since at having been led into doing so. The prisoner was the most honest-looking of young men, and behaved remarkably, as an innocent person would have done, and the evidence against him was very slight, and purely circumstantial. But in spite of these confusing facts, the vast majority believed in his guilt, though rather against their wills—he was such a frank looking fellow.

Mr. Briscomb was sitting with downcast eyes and a troubled expression. Horace sat, with his head in his hand, looking weary and hopeless, and the plaintiff's counsel was demanding of the jury, for the twentieth time, why, if the prisoner had not taken the money, he had come to Crawford upon the day of the robbery upon an obviously trumped up errand? Clearly, he had come to place the money in safe hands; his accomplice was probably in their midst.

The door opened suddenly and forcibly, and a young girl, with a flushed and eager face, came hastily in. At the sight of her, Horace raised his head, and his face brightened.

She gave him a swift smile, unmindful of the astonished observers, and made her way to Mr. Briscomb's side.

"You buried it yourself, under the locust-tree!" she cried, grasping his coat front, and shaking him a little in her eagerness. "I saw you. You were walking in your sleep, of course; but I didn't know it then. You came down, the night you came home with it, and dug a place under the locust-tree and put it in!"

Poor Mr. Briscomb stared at her in bewilderment; the spectators looked at each other, and whistled softly; the plaintiff's counsel looked disgusted.

There was a solemn pause, which the plaintiff's counsel broke by demanding, testily, that the evidence of "this person" be taken in the proper way.

But nobody seemed to hear him.

"I used to," said Mr. Briscomb at last, slowly—"I used to walk in my sleep every night regular, and do queer enough things. But I did think I'd got over it."

Somebody in the corner of the room clapped a timid pair of hands, and the next instant the room resounded with the cheers of a delighted crowd.

How a committee of three was appointed by the judge to go and prove the young lady's remarkable statement: how that committee returned in triumph, and presented Mr. Briscomb with a small box of deceitfully-modest appearance, amid the enthusiastic cheers of the spectators; how, for a confused period, everybody appeared to be congratulating everybody else; and how Mr. Briscomb drove home in state, with the surveyor and little school-teacher on either side of him, and relief and happiness beaming from his good-humored face—these were the chief topics in Crawford for a week, after which Mr. Briscomb's money was forgotten.

But Horace and Ruth had substantial reasons for remembering it.

It was Mr. Briscomb's money that smoothed the way to their marriage, a few months later, and that built the snug little house they called home.

THAT CIRCULAR.

Grand Master Workman Powderly's address, recently read before the Knights of Labor, is very conservative and judicious in its terms. He thinks that the Order is growing too rapidly for its own good. He says that the Order does not advocate strikes until every other method of peaceable adjustment has failed, and yet the wires are bearing from a thousand cities the news of as many strikes by Knights of Labor, in which arbitration and conciliation were never hinted at. Indeed, in many cases they have been rejected by members of the Order.

He argues strongly against this and adds: "In some cases these strikes were entered upon against the advice of the General Executive Board. It is claimed by our members that arbitration is one-sided. That may be true of the past, but the voluntary concessions made to us within the last three months prove most conclusively that the just claims of labor will be listened to if we go forward in the way we started. It is claimed that this is a year for concessions and advances. Be that as it may, we cannot force them by striking."

He refers to the fact that 500 assemblies were added to the roll in February, as many as were organized in the first eight years of the Order's existence and he adds that it is not possible that all these recruits can be properly trained before the assemblies are founded.

He objects to useless strikes and says that the Order must have patience. He wholly opposes striking for the eight hour system on May 1st, and says that out of 60,000,000 people in the United States, the Order has enlisted about 300,000. How then can it be expected that public opinion can be moulded by the Order in so short a time?

As to the selection of officers, Mr. Powderly says that nobody should be elected on account of "fine speech or impetuosity." Only the coolest men should be put in position, and they should be upheld in their work

The Order, he says, is composed of law-abiding, intelligent men, and yet these petty boycotts and strikes continue. He adds that he will not maintain a false position before the world any longer; either the local assemblies must obey the law, or else he must resign the place. He adds: "I must have the assistance of the Order, or my most earnest efforts will fail. Will I have it? If so, strikes must be avoided. Those who boast must be checked by their assemblies. No move must be made until the court of last resort has been appealed to. Threats of violence must not be made. Politicians must be hushed up or driven out. Obedience to the laws of Knighthood must have preference over those of any other Order." He concludes by saying that if his views do not represent the Order, then it should select a man better qualified to carry out his will.

5. The court has decided that refusing to take periodicals from the office, or removing and leaving them uncalled for is prima facie evidence of intentional fraud.

6. Any person who receives a newspaper and makes use of it whether he has ordered it or not is held in law to be a subscriber.

7. If subscribers pay in advance they are bound to give notice to the publisher at the end of their time if they do not wish to continue taking it, otherwise the publisher is authorized to send it on, and the subscriber will be responsible until an express notice, with payment of all arrears is sent to the publisher.

TEA TABLE TALK.

A dangerous fashion for small waists is now being carried to extremes and a good many lacing strings must be made of leather!

It is regarded by many as a singular freak of fashion that makes ladies in the lightest and gayest of evening costumes wear black kid gloves.

Monkey's heads now ornament the handles of the newest umbrellas for men. Fashion once in a while manages to have something appropriate!

The newest black velvet dog collars for ladies have small gold beads sewed on the lower edge, and in front should be suspended a handsome locket.

Lace table-covers over colored silk at dinner parties are declared to be only suitable in families where the accumulation of wealth has been rapid.

Paper flowers are now made in such perfection that some ladies are induced to wear them instead of the natural ones. They are as pretty and cheaper.

With the fresh coat day-reception costume, the white silk or satin yacht scarf is now almost universally worn, instead of the long-retained Stanley scarf.

It is given out as important information that with trained dresses ladies do not wear long white skirts any more, simply because it is common, you know.

Single initial note paper is coming in again, and the single capital letter is quite a pleasant puzzle to find out what it really is, so curious is the formation.

THE WAY OF THE WORLD.

A TALE TOLD BY A POSTAGE-STAMP.

Primarily I am a postage stamp; just a common everyday two-cent stamp, possessing only such attributes as are peculiar to my class. Indeed, if I were placed among a thousand of my brethren I doubt if the keenest observer would be able to point me out as being in any way distinguished. A vague gloom enshrouds that portion of my life preceding its development into one of the government agents (if I may so call myself); and I indistinctly remember of having been connected in some way with a copy of an English comic paper which drifted as an exchange into an American newspaper office, and thence quickly into a huge waste-basket. From that time until arriving at my present state I passed through the hands of paper dealers, paper manufacturers, and divers clerks and careless people, my last distinct impression being received from an engraver's press.

I can scarcely be called a conceited person; still I am led to believe that my mission in the world is an important one. I am kind-hearted, of agreeable disposition, and well satisfied with my lot. I frequently congratulate myself upon the good fortune which made me what I am. How much better to be, perchance, the bearer of some kind letter, a perfumed billet-doux, if you please, than a vulgar revenue stamp, fit only to adorn a box of ill-smelling cigars or grace a barrel of inferior liquor.

A man hurriedly places a postage-stamp upon a letter, which he drops into a convenient letter-box, and entirely forgets the circumstance. It humbly serves his purpose; beyond that he does not care. But think for a moment of the travels of that same stamp, of the person it meets, of the message it bears, and say it is not a sentient being!

After my birth I was carefully accounted for to various commonplace officials, and, after some delay, sent to the post-office at a certain Eastern city. I was purchased soon afterward by Mr. Archibald Warrack, who tore me rudely from my friends, and, after carrying me about in his pocketbook for a day or two, cast me into a certain dark drawer of his desk.

This Mr. Warrack was about twenty-five, tall, graceful, and altogether a very gentlemanly appearing person. He dressed neatly and tastefully, but with no suggestion of foppishness. To be frank, I admired him from the beginning of our acquaintance. Regarding his social and financial status, he was a gentleman of artistic tastes—one of the grand army of dilettanti—possessing an ample bank account and a pedigree which was never questioned.

The desk, into a drawer of which I was so ignominiously thrust, stood in a sunny alcove separated from Mr. Warrack's studio by a heavy portiere. This little apartment was a very pleasant place, and Mr. Warrack spent considerably more time in lounging there than he did in working in the great, bare room adjoining. Art was a hobby of mine, and it was with much satisfaction that I found myself placed in such a congenial atmosphere.

Soon after being transferred to the drawer I have before alluded to I discovered that my quarters were shared by a number of other persons of my own kind who were reposing on dainty perfumed envelopes. They wore, however, black stains upon their escutcheons, which showed them to be forever ruined. I made bold to introduce myself to one of these scarred veterans, and, after a few preliminary remarks concerning the weather, politics, and so on, said:

"From your looks (date of canceling) I infer that you have been dwelling with this Mr. Warrack for some time, and being a stranger, I shall esteem it a favor if you will tell me such things as you feel at liberty to speak of concerning his private history."

"It's a sad case," said my friend, with a deep sigh. He looked haggard and worn, and was apparently in great distress.

"How sad?" I inquired, sympathetically.

"A sad case," he continued without heeding my interruption. "Less than six months ago I was the carrier of a letter written by a young lady named Rariden—Miss Helen Rariden—to Mr. Warrack, the gentleman whose acquaintance you have recently made. This letter was written in reply to one from him in which he exhausted all the available adjectives of the English language in the sincerest avowals of love, closing with an offer of his heart and hand."

"And the letter of which you were the bearer contained———"

"Her acceptance," he said, completing my sentence. "Helen Rariden is a beautiful woman, gifted, wealthy, and of excellent family. At the time I parted from her, or rather at the time she parted with me, she loved this—fellow with all her pure soul—loved him as man was never loved before, and he doubtless cared for her—then."

The emphasis of this last word was destroyed by a pitiful sob, and for a few moments my friend was so moved that he could not speak. I waited patiently until he again began:

"Shortly after the engagement, which naturally followed, Helen (I take the liberty of so calling her) was compelled to accompany her mother to Europe on a trip undertaken in the hope of benefiting that lady's health. The parting of this Mr. Warrack with his promised bride was tender and touching; I was present at the time in the gentleman's left-hand coat pocket, and felt the beating of Helen's heart with distinctness for a few moments. I admit that it was an embarrassing position for me to occupy, but I could not well withdraw, as I was then very much attached to this letter, as I am now."

I smiled at this bit of pleasantry, but my neighbor pressed a convenient pen-wiper to his misty eyes and resumed his narrative.

"After Helen went abroad Warrack was morose and melancholy for a while; he began several pictures with which to occupy his mind—gloomy conceptions to correspond with his state of feelings. He first began what he called 'Arthur and Guinevere'—the parting scene, you know. He sketched and daubed at it for a week or so, but kicked it off the easel one day in a fit of impatience. When Helen's first letters came to him (they are in the next drawer below, embellished with cold, haughty, foreign stamps), he replied promptly and at great length—tender, loving messages. Oh, how true he was!"

The stamp smiled bitterly.

"But he soon became neglectful! and would toss Helen's notes into a corner of the desk and not even open them. Of course, under these circumstances, Helen did not write so often, and I soon began to notice a change in Warrack's manner. He became cheerful and planned some joyous pictures; one of them, a 'Spring' landscape, is on his easel now, and he has ordered the canvas and primed for a contemplated work to be called 'The Lifting of the Clouds.'"

"And what is the cause of this sudden change?" I asked.

"He is interested in another direction," was the reply.

"And what of Helen?" I inquired.

"She is still true," answered my friend in a tone of conviction.

This ended our conversation for the time being. My fellow-lodger drew back into a dark corner and remained silent for several days.

In the meantime Mr. Warrack seemed happy;—he spent much time in singing and whistling snatches of tunes, chiefly from light operas. He painted a little when in the right mood, and I observed very often, through the keyhole of the drawer that the "Lifting of the Clouds" was progressing finely. It was with pain that I thought there might be some connection between the title of the picture and the growing coldness in the manner of the young people toward one another, judging from the dwindling of their correspondence.

A few days after my conversation with the elderly stamp Mr. Warrack opened our drawer and threw in an unopened letter which he had just received. As soon as he went out my friend examined it carefully. The envelope bore the card of a Venetian hotel and a cancelled postage-stamp whose language we did not know.

"From Helen?" I said, interrogatively.

"Yes," was the mournful reply.

Time wore on. It is a tedious time has, even in the life of lowly postage-stamps. Spring came tripping down her bright, flower-malled path, and the darkness of our habitation we felt the stirring of reawakened life. Mr. Warrack did not enter his studio for days at a time. When I spoke of these long absences to my chum he only answered in the language of Tennyson:

In the Spring a livelier iris changes on the burnished dove;
In the Spring a young man's fancy lightly turns to thoughts of love

"Turns to thoughts of his new love while he forgets the old," I suggested.

"Poor Helen!" he said. "Oh, woman, you alone are long suffering and true."

Spring, summer, and fall.

One bright autumn day, as my friend and I were conversing in our quarters, Mr. Warrack, who was sitting in the alcove reading a newspaper, cut from its society columns two items which had through the instrumentality of Fate and the typographical "make-up," been printed in this order:

"Cards have been issued for the wedding of Mr. Archibald Warrack, the rising young artist, and Miss Florence Springer, daughter of Jay Winter Springer, the poet."

"Oh, the perfidy of man," said my poor stamp friend when I had finished reading.

The other item read:

"A cablegram from Venice announces the marriage at that place of Miss Helen Rariden, who has been sojourning abroad for some time past, to Sir Arthur Lombard, of London."

"The deuce!" gasped my friend through the dust which covered him.

"Not the deuce, but the way of the world," said I.

NOT WHAT HE SEEMED.

He was the greenest old man you ever saw. He looked around the passenger coach in a way to prove that he had never entered one before, and he sat down so softly, and seemed to be so afraid of damaging something, that all the passengers smiled.

By and by a young man went over and sat down beside him. This young man might have been directed by filial affection, and he might not. "Which way, uncle?" he softly asked.

"Me? Oh, I'm goin to see my darter in Connecticut."

"Ever travel much?"

"This is the first time I was ever on the keers. I've driv off seventeen miles with the oxen to see my other darter, but oxen ain't no comparison to these keers."

"I should say not. It takes a lot of money to go to Connecticut and back."

"Dreful lot, but I just sold the farm, you know."

"I presume you could change a hundred dollar bill for me?"

"Oh, jist as well as not."

"I may want you to by and by. This is good weather, eh?"

"'Strodinary weather for fall. James has been worried about his corn, but I guess it's all safe."

Nothing further was said for some time, the old man looking out of the window and the young man reading a paper. The train made few stops and the car was so warm that after a while the old man began to yawn and nod. He fought it off for ten minutes, but at last his head fell back, and his gentle snores mingled with the roar of the wheels.

A slim, white hand, with tapering fingers, rested on his leg; then it was elevated to his breast. Its touch was that of a feather. Its movement was that of serpent creeping forward to strike. The fingers touched an old fashioned wallet. The young man continued to read, and the old man slept on. Inch by inch the wallet was lifted from its snug resting place, and the hand was almost ready to remove it entirely, when something happened. With a sudden movement of his right hand the old man pinned the interloper fast, and his voice was heard calling:

"You blamed thief! But I knowed all the time what you were after! Where's the conductor!"

There was a rush of passengers, and they found a helpless, confused pickpocket, and an indignant, but yet elated old man.

"Consarn his pictur', but he took me fur an ole haystack from a back medder! Work roots on me, will ye! Set a trap fur me and fell into it yerself, eh?"

Even a professional pickpocket hadn't cheek enough to urge a single excuse. The fellow hadn't one blessed word to say, and was walked off to the baggage car to be kicked to the platform at the next station.

"Ye see," said the old man, as he turned to the inquiring passengers, "I hadn't orter done it. When a man has bin constable, sheriff, or drover all his days, travelin' over and meetin' with all sorts of folks, he hadn't orter play at greenhorn and break a young man's heart like this, but I felt sort o' reckless this mornin'. I must put a curb on my sperits; I'm gettin' too old to be playin' jokes on confidin' young men!"

Girl—"I will look at your hammocks, please."

Dealer—"Yes, miss. Now there is something nice—not expensive, but at the same time very pretty and strong."

Girl—"It does not look so very strong."

Dealer—"I will guarantee it to sustain a weight of over 300 pounds, miss."

Girl—"Let me see; 120 and 165 would be just 285—very well, I will take that one."

The Constitutionalist.

W. L. FORCE & A. L. FORCE,
EDITORS AND PROPRIETORS.

SOUND DOCTRINE.

Recorder Smyth, in his charge to the Grand Jury of New York last Monday, emphatically sustained our expressed sentiments regarding bribe receivers and bribe givers. Touching the last named class of criminals, the Judge used the following clear and pointed language:—

"Any person who approaches another for the purpose of inducing him to violate a public trust is much worse and should be much more severely dealt with than the person he leads into crime."

"A person who gives bribes is like a receiver of stolen goods, and one who takes from thieves is in my judgment the greatest of thieves, and if such men were not to be found, there would be fewer thieves than there are now."

"A person who induces a public officer to commit such an offence as bribery should certainly be dealt with much more severely than the one who receives the bribe."

That is sound doctrine.

Put all thieves in jail.

PUBLIC THIEVES.

No impartial observer of disclosed events can do other than believe that bribery and corruption of the vilest character has disgraced the New York Board of Aldermen.

There may have been honest men among them, but evidence is amply sufficient to brand some as public thieves. It is time to call things by right names and to stop whitewashing official villainy.

The reputation of representative government, as well as the security of the people, alike demand that the sharpened knife of Reform be put in cutting motion.

We would not condemn any individual, be he Alderman or pickpocket, without conclusive evidence of guilt, but, if found guilty at the bar of Justice, then, as we have before declared, the utmost penalty of the law ought to be inflicted upon each and every culprit, no matter whether rich or poor, high or low, Democrat or Republican.

The man in official or legislative position who acts or votes for a venal consideration is certainly a fit candidate for the State Prison, but equal to him in crime, if not more criminal, is the moneyed principal or lobby broker who offers the infamy of a bribe.

The whole gang of them should be railroaded, without unnecessary delay, to a stone mansion where they can be made to work for a long term of years, and thereafter be forever disfranchised.

Our fight against political corruption is uncompromising and will be kept up.

It is a public curse.

DEMOCRATIC PRINCIPLES.

Political measures may from time to time properly undergo change, but, come what may, truth founded principles stand immovable.

Men may shift allegiance to party organizations, but they cannot thrust principles aside.

When the Government of the United States first took shape, or, more correctly speaking, after the termination of the administration of President Washington, whose lofty patriotism silenced political clamor, there were two parties striving for ascendency, the Federal, led by Hamilton, and the Democratic, championed by Jefferson.

Between those parties a radical difference existed—a gulf wide and deep.

The Federal, imbued with the aristocratic idea of the mother country, looked upon government as the prerogative of the favored few to rule with stern authority the prescribed many.

The Democratic boldly denounced such a system of sovereignty as treason to the spirit and intent of American Independence, and without reservation declared that Freedom meant—

A government of the whole people, regardless of birth, class, or worldly condition;

To be administered honestly and for the general public benefit;

Clear of ostentatious display, and thoroughly plain and practical in all its workings.

And furthermore, the Democratic party then proclaimed as cardinal political truths—

Personal worth ever superior to wealth or boasted blood;

Character and ability of far more importance than any other consideration;

The equality of all citizens before the law an inherited right;

Specially granted privileges a positive wrong.

Such were the openly avowed principles of the Democratic party four score years ago.

Such are its cherished principles to-day. Precisely the same now as then.

Under that banner, the rights of the people, Jefferson demolished Federalism.

Beneath the same glorious banner the followers of Jefferson have manfully met and successfully driven back varied named opposers.

Principles never die.

The Knights of Labor declare that Jay Gould must be overthrown.

General Master Workman Powderly sustains the executive Board of the Knights of Labor, but opposes acts of violence.

President Cleveland denies the alleged rupture between himself and Secretary Manning. He is much annoyed by the reports.

Dr. J. E. Walker, a young physician of Baltimore, was bitten on the hand by a small lap dog on last Christmas day. On Tuesday last he is said to have died from hydrophobia.

The storm of Monday and Tuesday last, was severe in many parts of the country and considerable damage was done to bridges. More than four inches of rain fell during the prevalence of the storm.

The Senate, in executive session, to-day confirmed the nominations of John D. Oberly, of Illinois, and Charles Lyman, of Connecticut, to be Civil-Service Commissioners, and S. M. Stockslager, of Indiana, to be Assistant Commissioner of the General Land-Office.

Chancellor Runyon has appointed the former managers of the Dime Savings Bank of New Brunswick as a committee to settle up the affairs of the bank. The appointment was made after a sworn statement of the Directors was received, declaring the bank insolvent.

The Middlesex Courts opened Monday last.

The only proper place for a boycott is at the polls.

Hoboken Democrats have nominated Edwin J. Kerr for Mayor.

One hundred painters of Newark went on a strike in that city Monday last. They demand $3 per day.

Although New York had more than fifty regiments at Gettysburg, but one has raised a monument on the field.

Hon. Orestes Cleveland has been nominated by the Democrats for Mayor of Jersey City, and Gilbert Collins by the Republicans. Mr. Cleveland ought to, and we believe will be, elected.

The Treasury Department has prepared a new design for ten-dollar silver certificates, which includes an excellent vignette portrait of the late Vice-President Hendricks. New designs for certificates of other denominations will be adopted from time to time.

Job H. Lippincott, recently appointed by President Cleveland as District Attorney in place of Mr. Keasbey, is a lawyer of ability and standing. He has been counsel of the Freeholders of Hudson county for several years, and has acted with marked discretion and vigor.

New Brunswick Knights of Labor have denounced Hugh Boyd and his paper, the Home News, because he refused to publish a communication from them endorsing Senator Chase's bill, which provides that newspapers using stereotype plates shall not be selected to publish the laws. The Home News uses such plates.

The members of the Robert S. Green club of Elizabeth have engaged Weber's grove, corner of Spring street and Elizabeth avenue, that city, for their second annual picnic, which will be held Thursday evening, June 18. Notwithstanding rumors to the contrary the club is now in a flourishing condition, and applications for membership are received at every meeting.

Princeton opens the Mercer county spring campaign in no uncertain way. For the first time in twenty years, the Democrats elected their entire ticket, and that on a fair, square fight between two parties. As the seat of learning and conservatism, Princeton's election is indicative of the acceptability of Democratic control to the better elements of society.

A young woman of Dakota moved a few months ago from the Black Hills, and, while debating whether or not to move her old cook stove also, was offered 1,000 shares of Iron Hill stock for it. The stock was then thought to be worth just about as much as the paper on which it was printed. She took the offer, has already been offered $2,000 for stock, is holding on for more money, and the shares are still rising.

The reduction of the public debt for March was $14,087,884. Last March the reduction was less than $900,000. For the nine months of the current fiscal year ended, the reduction of the debt was $67,000,000. For the corresponding period of last year the reduction was $45,000,000. These comparisons show what a Democratic administration is doing to reduce the great national burden as compared with the preceding Republican regime.

Terrence V. Powderly, who is being talked about now as much as any other man in the country, came from the same range of mountains as Jay Gould did. Mr. Powderly, who is of Irish stock, was born at Carbondale, January 24, 1849. He is a machinist by trade, and has belonged to the Machinists' Union, of Scranton, since he was nineteen. He was chosen Mayor of Scranton in 1877, and was re-elected twice. He has been re-elected six times as the head of the Knights of Labor.

At the firemen's election in New Brunswick on Monday last, 411 votes were cast. Following is the official vote: Chief Engineer—Wm. C. Jacques, 393; no opposition. First Assistant—John Donnelly, 285; James Fisher, 124. Second Assistant—Frank Acker, 245; Frank W. Kiessling, 161. The result was impatiently awaited, and when announced friends of the winning candidates rushed out hose carriages and a band paraded the streets through the mud and rain until a late hour, cheering all the while.

Union County's Senator.

The illustrations given in supplement form by the Elizabeth Herald, of prominent county officials, in its last issue, are somewhat better than former efforts. The likeness of State Senator R. L. Livingston, is very good. Following the picture is the following short sketch of the life of the Senator:

"There is a journeyman printer in the New Jersey Senate who is an honor to his craft and the honest men who elected him. We refer to Hon. Robert Lord Livingston, of Plainfield, whose likeness we print in this issue. Printers are men of mark in Union county, and when they do enter the political arena, clad in Democratic steel, they invariably give a flattering account of themselves. Judge Hyer is a journeyman printer and he came very near seizing the senatorial toga, but it remained for the Plainfield type-setter to 'lock up' Ben Vail's 'form' in a very strong 'chase.' But we digress. Senator Livingston, as he is now known, was born in Elizabethtown (not our old burg), N. Y., in the heart of the famed Adirondacks, March 1, 1838, and was the oldest of five children, and his father, Robert W. Livingston, is now hale and hearty, though he has braved the storms of three-quarters of a century and escaped the death-dealing bullet of the late war, through which he served with distinction. The Senator's father was a printer and started the Elizabethtown Post before the birth of the subject of our picture. In his father's office the present Senator learned the art of setting type, and it is said acquired a speed of 1800 ems an hour, printers' measurement, which is excellent work among the best compositors of to-day. The Senator's brother now owns the paper which the father started. At the age of eighteen Robert L. Livingston gave up the 'case' and went to measuring calico and tape in a dry goods store in Troy, N. Y. Becoming proficient as a salesman, he sought the Empire city and went into an excellent birth in the then well-known house of C. W. and J. T. Moore & Co., where he remained from 1859 to 1868. At the outbreak of the rebellion the Moores collapsed, but Livingston found employment with their successors. Shortly afterwards Mr. Livingston embarked in Wall street ventures and, being judicious, amassed a respectable fortune only to lose it all in the panic of 1873. He then turned his attention to the insurance business in New York, in which he is still engaged. Mr. L. has been a resident of Plainfield since the centennial year (1876), having resided a brief time in Westfield before his removal. He is a Democrat of the old school and Plainfield is one of the strongest Republican citadels in the State, but such was the esteem in which Livingston was held by the people of his adopted city that he was three times elected to the Council, and was once honored with the Presidency. His record is a spotless one, both in public and private affairs, and his thorough business habits and knowledge of the world, added to a comprehensive mind well cultured, make him a safe and able custodian of the interest of his party and those of the people who have honored him with a seat in the Senate of the State of New Jersey."

THE LEGISLATURE.

Speaker Armstrong made a temperance speech to nearly empty seats last Monday when the Local Option bill came up. Part of the time there was not a quorum present. Mr. Scheele moved to strike out the enacting clause. Mr. Corbin followed on the side of temperance, but denied the statement that he is the sorrowful apostle of temperance from Plainfield. Mr. Bolton thought prohibition a very good thing in principle but not in practice. There are more drunkards, he said, in Prohibition Maine than any other State of the Union. Mr. Harrigan declared that the State Prohibition Convention was against local option as proposed here. Cicero Wolverton, Hunterdon's fiery orator, got off a humorous speech in which he ridiculed the notion that any one expected the passage of this bill. He said he never saw a village with a drug store in it that wouldn't supply him with all the rum he wanted. Last summer he went to Ocean Grove camp meeting to pray, and the very first morning he got acquainted with a trustworthy druggist and smiled with him regularly till he came home again. Assemblyman William B. Gourley, of Paterson, who has just been appointed Prosecutor of Passaic county by Gov. Abbett, sent in his resignation as a member of the Assembly Monday night and it was accepted. Mr. Scridboler introduced a bill to repeal the act for the better protection of manufacturers and bottlers of and dealers in mineral water, beer, ale, porter and other beverages, approved March 11, 1881. Mr. Wells introduced a bill providing that railroad companies whose roads are not more than five miles in length and terminate at a summer resort may charge fares not exceeding eight cents per mile, but no charge of less than ten cents need be accepted by the company.

The Jersey City Tunnel Bill came up on second reading in the Senate on Monday evening. As an amendment Senator Youngblood offered a substitute providing for a tunnel or a bridge as the people of Jersey City may elect. The Senator proceeded with an argument in favor of the substitute, and there being fear that the subject would take up the whole time this evening a motion to defer its further consideration until Tuesday prevailed. It is believed that the substitute will be killed by the anti-bridge votes.

Assemblyman Vetterlein has introduced a bill into the House permitting the Mayor and Council of Boroughs to appoint a Corporation Counsel, Street Commissioner and Borough Physician.

In joint caucus the Republicans Wednesday evening decided that the Assembly shall take a recess on Friday of next week till June 1. The Senate will follow on completion of the Laverty trial. The session in June will be for the purpose of considering the railroad tax question.

A Spring Storm.

"It never rained but it poured," Tuesday, and many cellars were flooded, tanks overflowed and the street gutters were knee deep with mud and water. Just before noon the side wall of Hand's blacksmith shop on Somerset street, fell outward into the alley leading to the Farmer's Hotel stable, but neither the workmen inside nor any one on the exterior of the building was injured. The structure is directly over the brook that separates the counties of Union and Somerset, and the accident was caused by the undermining of the foundation by the rising waters. A number of casualties more or less damaging, are reported throughout the State as a result of the "April shower." About a mile west of Bound Brook, the Delaware & Raritan canal broke over its banks and carried away fences, outhouses, barns and other buildings. A landslide occurred on the Lehigh Valley road near Towanda, when about 400 feet of track was buried, and in some places the rails were eight feet under the earth.

Action of Muhlenberg Board.

The following minute of the Board of Governors of Muhlenberg Hospital concerning the late Dr. Burlingham has been handed to us for publication:

Less than a year ago Muhlenberg Hospital sustained a severe loss by the death of Dr. Charles A. Hart, one of its founders and long a faithful and efficient member of its medical staff; and now the Board of Governors notes with sorrow the loss of another valued member, Dr. Harvey D. Burlingham, who, after a long and painful illness, died at his residence in Plainfield, March 17, 1886, while still at the height of his activity and usefulness, aged fifty-five years. Dr. Burlingham was intimately associated with Dr. Hart in the founding of the Hospital and contributed largely to that end. From the first organization of the Hospital a valued member of the medical staff, he was ever conscientious and faithful in the performance of the duties of that position—at times extremely arduous and exacting—freely giving of his time, and using his large experience and professional skill for the benefits of the patients, and to promote the general welfare of the Hospital. This Board records its grateful appreciation of the value of Dr. Burlingham's services and counsel during his long connection with the Hospital, and its deep sense of the great loss sustained by his death; and offers to his widow its sincere sympathy in the heavy bereavement which has befallen her.

The Art Gallery.

MESSRS. EDITORS:—The criticisms which have been made by some upon the management of the Art Gallery have, doubtless been made under a misapprehension of the facts. Up to the present time it has not been a public gallery, and cannot be until it has been properly turned over to the public, which cannot be done until the terms of the subscriptions and donations which have made it a possibility, have been fully complied with. It is, and has been from the first, property held in trust by a committee named in the subscription paper, for the donors, subject to the conditions named by them. This committee, pending the completion of those conditions, and with the consent of the owner of the building, Hon. Job Male, decided to open the gallery to the public, at the small charge of ten cents admission, to pay in part the expenses of attendance. They were under no obligations to open it at all until it was formally given to the public, and in doing so they have assumed all the risk of damage, which, if any, would have to be made up by the committee. The fund is now nearly all collected, and it is hoped that the balance will be collected this week, and the title to all the property, including the building, will then be vested in the Trustees of the Public Library, who will become responsible to the public for its management. It is expected that after that it will be free under necessary rules and restrictions.

Very truly,
GEO. H. BABCOCK,
Chairman Committee to raise Funds.

Husband (jokingly)—"Oh, I'm the mainstay of the family." Wife—"Yes, and the jib-boom, and the—and the—" Small Boy (from experience)—"And the spanker, too, mamma."

SINCE that admired comedian, Mr. Tony Hart, first shot off his "Toy Pistol" in this city, he has been meeting with great success wherever he has appeared. His latest song, "Twill all come out in the wash," has made a great hit and all the stars are singing it. Messrs. Chas. D. Blake & Co. of Boston, publishers of most of the popular ballads of the day, have issued it for the benefit of the public.

"The Banker's Daughter."

From the N. Y. World of Tuesday we copy the following criticism of Crossen's Company, which is to appear at Music Hall, next Monday evening, at the close of its New York engagement. This is the only theatrical entertainment to be given during Lent:

"'The Banker's Daughter' was produced last evening at the Third Avenue Theatre by the Crossen's Company, which comes direct from the Union Square. Mr. Harry Linson played in the leading part, with Mr. Charles Drake as Lawrence Westbrook. The French nobleman was admirably represented by Mr. C. W. Kidder, while Mr. J. F. Crossen, as G. Washington, a little overdid the American tourist. Miss Edna Courtney, as Lilian, the banker's daughter, attracted considerable favorable attention, dividing the applause with Miss Marion A. Earle. The tableau in the fourth act—the ruins of a chateau near Paris seen by moonlight—was very effective."

Death of Ex-Senator Eugene S. Doughty.

The death of ex-Senator Eugene Solomon Doughty, which occurred at half past three Sunday morning, was a sudden shock to the people of this community, among whom the years of his manhood have been spent. Mr. Doughty only last Friday expressed himself to a friend in town as feeling in rather better health than he had enjoyed for some years. Saturday noon Mr. W. S. Potter met him in New York and directed him to Fromerfelt's jewelry establishment, where he wished to call. While there he was seized with a severe oppression in his chest and was taken to the Astor House, and two physicians were called to attend him, Mr. James Fromerfelt meanwhile telegraphing to the family here of his condition. His son at once started for the city and brought his father home on the train arriving here at 6:35. At his home all efforts of his devoted family and the attending physician (Dr. Matthewson) proved unavailing, and, retaining full consciousness to the last, and complaining of compression of the heart, he suddenly expired. His age was 74 years, 10 months and 22 days. Deceased was a native of Morris county, a son of the late Maj. Gen. Solomon Doughty. He followed farming and milling in that county, and in 1838 removed to this place and became a partner with his brother, the late Senator Joshua Doty, in the general merchandise trade. Later he established a large lumber business here and became interested in valuable Pennsylvania lumber tracts. He was an active and influential Democrat and served two terms in the State Assembly, being first elected in 1850, when the county had a Whig majority. In 1881 he was elected State Senator for three years, completing the term with credit to himself, his county and his constituents. Mr. Doughty also filled other important positions, among them that of Director of the State Bank of Elizabeth and President of the Somerville Mutual Fire Insurance Co. At the time of his death he was a Commissioner of the State Sinking Fund. A visit to Rahway connected with this business on Saturday morning, without being properly prepared for an unexpected ride of six miles out into the country, probably brought on the attack which caused his death. He was a man of great force of character, honorable and upright in all his dealings and noted for his goodness to the poor. In public and private life he lived respected, and in death he will be reverenced. The funeral took place at 12:30, Wednesday, at the house, Rev. W. E. Wright officiating.—Somerset Messenger.

The "PERFECTION," All Porcelain.

WE TAKE pleasure in calling attention of our customers and all interested in sanitary matters to the all porcelain "Perfection," the only square top Hopper, with trap, made.—For perfect cleanliness and simplicity of construction we invite comparison with any Closet ever manufactured, either home or foreign. It combines, with the utmost simplicity, all the points of a strictly first-class water-closet. The square top will make itself apparent to all users, in doing away with a drip tray, the seat at all times thoroughly covering all parts, whereas in the drip tray it cannot help it, becoming foul underneath. It has a seal in Trap of [illegible] inches, and the soil pipe vent of [illegible] inches diameter, as will be seen in the above cut, will prevent all syphoning of Trap. The two local or seat vents of [illegible] inches diameter are intended for [illegible] ventilation, the one not being used to be closed. The large handhole in front gives free access to all parts of trap.

AYER'S SARSAPARILLA has demonstrated its power of cure for all diseases of the blood.
The Harpooner's Story.
New Bedford, June 1, 1882.
DR. J. C. AYER & CO.—Twenty years ago I was a harpooner in the North Pacific, when five others of the crew and myself were laid up with scurvy. Our bodies were bloated, gums swollen and bleeding, teeth loose, purple blotches all over us, and our breath seemed rotten. Take it by and large we were pretty badly off. All our lime-juice was accidentally destroyed, but the captain had a couple dozen bottles of AYER'S SARSAPARILLA and gave us that. We recovered on it quicker than I have ever seen men brought about by any other treatment for Scurvy, and I've seen a good deal of it. Seeing no mention in your Almanac of your Sarsaparilla being good for scurvy, I thought you ought to know of this, and so send you the facts.
Respectfully yours, RALPH Y. WINGATE.
The Trooper's Experience.
Masern, Basutoland (S. Africa,) March 7, 1883.
DR. J. C. AYER & CO.—Gentlemen: I have much pleasure to testify to the great value of your Sarsaparilla. We have been stationed here for over two years, during which time we had to live in tents. Being under canvas for such a time brought on what is called in this country "veldt-sores." I had those sores for some time. I was advised to take your Sarsaparilla, two bottles of which made my sores disappear rapidly, and I am now quite well.
Yours truly, T. E. BODEN,
Trooper, Cape Mounted Riflemen.
Ayer's Sarsaparilla
Is the only thoroughly effective blood-purifier, the only medicine that eradicates the poisons of Scrofula, Mercury, and Contagious Disease from the system.

REGULAR monthly meeting of the Board of Managers of the Fire Department, next Tuesday evening.

A SPECIALLY designated "regular" meeting of the Common Council will be held next Monday evening.

EASTER services of song at the Warren Mission will occur this year on the evening of Easter Sunday, April 25th.

ONE of the most impressive sermons ever preached was that delivered by the Rev. C. L. Goodrich in Reform Hall, last Sunday evening.

THE Rev. Dr. J. H. Vincent preached on the relations of capital and labor, in the pulpit of the Methodist church, last Sunday evening.

DOBBINS, the tobacconist, returns to the old stand he occupied during so many years of the past, at the corner of Park avenue and Second street.

THE Bicycle Club is talking of another entertainment in The Crescent during the first week in May—of which the public will be very glad to hear.

WHAT a grand and effective advertisement that will result in a big "boom" for the property and the census of the city, will be the adoption of electric street lighting.

AN election for two members of the Board of Managers of the Fire Department will take place next Monday between the hours of 2 and 7 p. m., at Laing's Hall.

THE Plainfield Vocal Society is hard at work on the music for the next concert and is making most satisfactory progress although the universal weather of rehearsal nights has not been conducive of large attendances.

IT seems hardly probable that a majority of our Council will refuse the opportunity offered by the bid of the Plainfield Electric Light Co., to illuminate the city by means of its thoroughly tested and entirely satisfactory system.

THERE is every probability that at last the efforts that have been made to secure the presence of the great Evangelist Moody in Plainfield, will be successful to the extent of one evening. The date has not yet been fixed by Mr. Moody, but he is "almost persuaded."

IF it is a convenience and a benefit to the Councilmen and the city to add another to the list of official papers, then the city should pay therefor. We don't propose to. Its no object to us. We get enough of the "proceedings" during the meeting, and don't care to read them.

THAT popular hotel manager, Mr. S. V. Woodruff, has secured a renewal of his lease on the Hotel Netherwood, and will continue to conduct that attractive resort with the same liberal method as in the past. Already applications from old and new patrons assure a crowded house and a successful season to come.

To illustrate just what a "Kitchen Garden" is, an entertainment of that nature has been arranged for presentation to the public at Music Hall, next Tuesday evening. Tickets of admission at twenty-five cents can be exchanged for reserved seats by the payment of twenty-five cents additional at Reynold's pharmacy.

THE general rule in relation to the erection of small buildings in cities of this size is to lay the foundation one week and the roof the next. But the Plainfield Bicycle Club's house is not built that way. If better weather or more rapid progress doesn't soon develope, June will be the date of the "opening."

IF the Council gave a contract for the lighting of the city by electricity, the lamps will burn from a half-hour after sun-set till a half-hour before sun-rise during the moonless nights of the month; and, besides, during such nights when the moon is obscured by clouds, the light is to be turned on at the order of the Mayor or some one else in authority.

THE Crescent avenue church is willing to lose its old organ but not its new minister; yet others have their eyes on each. The Presbyterians of Basking Ridge have sent a committee to "look at" the former, and a delegation was present from N. Y. at a service recently, in the pastor's absence, with the intention of judging Dr. Richard's ability and acting accordingly.

THE flower tables of the Grace Church Fair at The Crescent will be under the charge of Mrs. ex-Councilman Waring who will be assisted by a number of the flowers that bloom in society. Changing the date to a week earlier in May, would insure the possibility of a much more extensive display of plants and blossoms, and would enable the patrons of the fair to purchase thereat everything desired for setting out their own gardens.

FROM the bid made by the Plainfield Electric Light Co., at the last meeting of the Council, the cost of each arc lamp as now used by some of our merchants and adopted by the Council of the Borough of North Plainfield, will be but seven dollars per month. As the Gas Light Co's price is $2.07 for each of the little yellow lights that flicker on our curb-stones, an electric lamp even if it replaces but four of these will be a saving to the city in money whilst the same time a gain in brilliancy.

CAPTAIN DODD noticed a pair of rather fat tramps leaving a passing coal train at this city, last Saurday evening. He speedily took them into custody, and a search discovered them clothed in numerous articles of apparel still bearing the tickets of the manufacturer. They were sent to the County Jail for thirty days each, and meanwhile, the Brown Bros., of Somerville, whose clothing factory was robbed last week, and whose workmen have recognized the clothes captured as part of the missing stock, will make out a case that will send Dodd's captives to State Prison.

IF there is anything that will give to the general public unlimited confidence, it is the fact that Dr. Dupree, the well-known chiropodist, is not afraid to be judged by the result of his previous labors, and therefore gives notice of his second visit to this town, in compliance with numerous requests, asking all his old patients to call and see him free of charge, if they wish to, at the same time enabling others who may be afflicted with corns, bunions, etc., to call and have them cured, and that too without the slightest pain or inconvenience. No one can doubt the doctor's ability now; his success is a matter of record. All over New Jersey, in almost every town, live those whom he has relieved from the torture occasioned by sore feet. The old, the young, and even little children, gladly give expression to their feelings of satisfaction and admiration of his skill. Dr. Dupree will be at the City Hotel, this city, five days of coming week, commencing April 12. See "Want" column, second page of this paper.

THERE will be a special meeting of the Council of the Borough of North Plainfield, this evening.

THE Job Male Public Library and the Plainfield Ten-Cent Art Gallery should not be under the same roof.

THE first and second of April were perfect days for those who were so unfortunate as to be compelled to move.

THE regular monthly meeting for April will be held by the Union Club at its house on Broadway, Monday evening, the 19th inst.

THE Council will be "flush" from the extra amount of tax to draw upon, besides the great saving they will make in their bills for official advertising.

"MARSHAL" UTZINGER, who was so appointed at the last meeting of the Council of North Plainfield, cannot, it seems, legally qualify for the office. He is a "non-resident."

THE annual financial statement for the year ending March 31st, of Commissioner Cutter, Treasurer of the Board of Managers of the Fire Department, is published by us on the opposite page.

THE "Banker's Daughter" at Music Hall next Monday evening will be the only theatrical entertainment during Lent. Don't fail to see this exciting play by Manager Crossen's company.

BEFORE you begin to pack up to go away for the Summer, drop in at Pope's, No. 5 West Front street, and buy one of those trunks of which he has such an elegant assortment at such low prices.

THE police are most commendably active in protecting the city from the presence of unlicensed pedlars. The Clerk reports the receipt of many dollars from those that have been compelled to pay the city the requisite fee.

THE Elliott family, that gives one of the best rink entertainments of bicycle and unicycle riding and roller skating in the country, will again appear at the Casino rink, this evening and to-morrow afternoon and evening.

THE latest donation to the Bicycle Club's new rooms by a member, is a piano which will be of great use at least upon "reception evenings," when the lady guests will want to trip the "light fantastic" with the giddy wheelmen.

THE hackmen are not unanimously complying with the direction of the Council to the effect that they should display a card of legal rates where their patrons can use it for their own protection and the driver's government.

A PERIPATETIC soap vender with a big wagon and a fine team of horses, was brought before the City Clerk, recently, and made to pay the necessary fee and present the needful application for a license to carry on his business here.

THE ladies of the Plainfield Relief Association, finding their supply of second-hand clothing very small, appeal for contributions. All donations may be left at the rooms, 45 West Second street, and the ladies will thank you sincerely.

THE Borough election at Dunellen, Tuesday, resulted in the almost unanimous victory of the "regular" ticket published by us last week. The other ticket was, we are told, only put forth as a "flyer," but it doesn't seem to have soared very high.

THE public wants a free Public Art Gallery as well as a free Public Library. Mr. Job Male has generously given to Plainfield a building for the purpose, and a charge of ten cents for admission to the Picture Gallery is a shadow on his bounty.

IF the Council wants to centralize all the power of governing the different departments of the municipality in its own hands, why not commence with the absorbtion of the Board of Education? Maybe the President of the Board will assist in drawing up the bill for that purpose.

T-T-TOM sent Officer Lynch in a great hurry and excitement to the corner of Front and Somerset streets, last Thursday, to suppress a "f-f-fearful w-w-wow." Pat found out the day and date as soon as he arrived at the scene of quiet and good order. He doesn't like to hear any reference to the first of April.

THE reopening of the Casino rink for the appearance of the wonderful Elliott family, will not include general roller skating for the people. In order to so open, a license as a rink must first be obtained from the Borough, and the authorities over the brook have made the price high enough to absorb all the profit.

MR. PHILIP YEAGER at No. 32 East Front street, is prepared to do all kinds of varnishing, polishing and gilding. Furniture varnished, pictures and other frames regilded, and hard woods of every description and construction polished. The moving of pianos and organs to any part of the country, he makes a specialty.

THE newspapers "make" the Councilmen, puff them up when they are nominated and introduce them to the community that has never heard of them before, oftentimes elect them, devote hundreds of dollars worth of space to the publication of their proceedings, and then are asked to accept a "cut" of ten cents and five cents on the official advertising so as to impress (or impose) upon the public a sense of their great economy of public funds.

THE Borough of North Plainfield has beaten this city in enterprise by granting the Plainfield Electric Light Co., permission to erect poles and string wires for the purposes of the illumination of portions of the Borough by electricity. Certain citizens of the Borough are to pay for the lights out of their own pockets because the Borough really cannot afford to, but in the case of the city of Plainfield there is no such need. The city can afford it and popular sentiment demands it.

AGENT EDWIN H. HOLMES, of Adams Express Company at this city, was notified by the messenger on the two o'clock express at the station, Thursday afternoon of last week, that an aquarium containing a live alligator weighing altogether about a thousand pounds, would be up on the evening train consigned to some resident of Plainfield. The agent was on hand expecting the novel package and prepared for its transportation, but not even a way-bill dated April first was visible. Mr. Holmes now scorns the allegation and denies the alligator."

THE family of Dennis Sullivan of this city is in very straitened circumstances. Although faithful and hard workers, the many mouths to feed and bodies to clothe and warm, and the impossibility to collect pay for last Summer's toil, has made them suffer from great want. Now the death of one of the sons killed by the cars at this station last Wednesday evening, calls forth another expense they cannot meet. We feel sure there are many that read this who are willing and able to contribute towards so worthy a purpose. All contributions sent to this office will be duly acknowledged and placed in the hands of these people. We have already received three subscriptions of ten cents each and one of fifteen.

THE old Grove Street Rink will reopen once more this Friday evening as well as Saturday afternoon and evening. The attraction offered to its patrons by the management will be the well known famous Elliott Family. Citizens of Plainfield and vicinity will remember the performances of the Elliotts here last Fall, when they crowded the rink as it was never crowded before. Little Tom's bicycle performance on the revolving table and their unicycle skating are exhibited by no other artist in the world, while the demon unicycle dance among the blazing torches will be well remembered for its weird, uncanny aspect. We understand there will be no skating these two evenings, as the performance will occupy most of the time and all the space.

COUNCILMAN MARSH'S resolution increasing the pay of the regular policemen, and its adoption by the Council, was the proper thing, but it was not right to leave our faithful City Treasurer without any salary provided for his services.

THE petit jurors from this city for the next term of court, as drawn by Sheriff Stiles during Tuesday last, are Frederick Moffett, Mulford Cole, Charles Montfort, J. Oakley Nodyne, Orlando E. Chamberlin, Levi Hetfield, Patrick J. Flanigan, Parker B. Miller.

THE mother of Assessor Hubbard and Freeholder Hubbard has been lying at the point of death for some time, but Tuesday she lost all consciousness and news of her decease is expected at any hour. Her home is in New York State a few miles above Saratoga.

WEDNESDAY was the last day of the annual conference of the Methodists at Newark of the District of which Plainfield is a part. The Rev. J. B. VanMeter was admitted from the Baltimore conference and appointed to the Methodist church here as its pastor.

THE Dunham Choristers, which now number twenty-two selected voices, will give an entertainment about the 20th of the present month that will be most enjoyable. There will be orchestral and vocal music—the latter including a number of "jubilee" songs of the sweetest character.

THE new boilers with increased steam power which we are putting in for driving the presses of THE CONSTITUTIONALIST, and to heat throughout the Chautauqua building, have attracted curious visitors by the score. All our friends are welcome to call and examine the work which is so complete and admirable as to demand a lengthy description later.

SAU-AH-BRAH, an educated Burmese from farther India, will give an entertainment at Reform Hall, Tuesday evening of next week, including impersonations of the people of his native land, dressed in the hundreds of pinless, hookless and buttonless costumes he will bring with him. The affair is for the benefit of the Washington Valley Sunday School.

GEORGE H. BABCOCK, Chairman of the Committee to raise the fund for furnishing the Job Male Public Library and Art Gallery, explains in a communication published elsewhere, the reason of the present charge for admission to view the works of art which the building now contains. But Mr. Babcock's just and proper reasons amount to so much more than the financial result of the device adopted, the policy of charging any admission at all is obscure.

IF the noble economists that compose our Common Council of '85 could only carry out their philanthropic scheme of cutting down the printers against the laws of the State, they would save the city as much as forty-five cents a week during some of the weeks of the year. Stop up the spigot but don't say a word about the bung-hole, gentlemen. The citizens will be so impressed with your care for their interests that you will all be re-elected—everyone of you.

Killed By The Shock.

Martha Sullivan, aged twelve years, son of Dennis Sullivan of Cottage Place, was riding on a mixed train that was drawn up on the side track near Richmond street bridge, last Wednesday evening, about six o'clock. After the 5.53 train for New York had passed, the train on the switch started and the lad jumped off. The side bar on the car was slippery from the rain and the unfortunate boy fell with one leg under the wheels that rolled over it and terribly crushed it below the knee. Dr. Boone, City Physician, was summoned at once, and did all that was possible to stop the loss of blood. By his orders the victim was removed to Muhlenberg Hospital, but he there died from the shock almost immediately after his arrival. The remains will be interred to-day from St. Mary's church at 2 o'clock.

Councilman D. R. Weaver of the Borough of North Plainfield, is quite sick.

Manager Charles Schermerhorn of the W. U. T. Co., has taken one of the fine flats at 18 North avenue.

The Rev's. W. R. Richards' and A. H. Tuttle's faces reproduced by photography, are very much in demand at present by their hundreds of admirers.

The approaching marriage is announced of Mr. Charles Van Winkle, the eldest son of our City Treasurer, and the daughter of ex-Fire Commissioner, Rufus K. Case.

Councilman Gallup has been confined to the house by an uncomfortable though not dangerous ailment that we all are expected to experience during some time of our life.

Mr. and Mrs. L. B. Woolston celebrated the tenth anniversary of their wedding, at their residence on Duer street, North Plainfield, Saturday evening last.

Mrs. S. R. Hope, who has been lying very ill for the past month at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. E. R. Harris, at Long Island City, is expected to return to her home here in a few days.

Mr. Harry Woodruff, the popular and talented young artist of "The Black Flag" company, is taking a short rest with a visit to his father at the Hotel Netherwood, previous to leaving again for San Francisco.

Assemblyman John Vetterlein of North Plainfield, was presented with an elegant gold-headed cane at Trenton, Tuesday evening, by his fellow members of the Legislature whom he escorted to the capitol at Washington, recently.

Counsellor G. P. Suydam and Messrs. Gilbert and Drake of this city and Mr. Thomas Loyd of North Plainfield, are the four chess players who defeated a picked quartette of New Brunswick experts, Monday evening. The game was played by telephone between the two cities.

Miss Laflin, Fire Commissioner Knowland's eldest daughter, who has been very ill in Chicago, is at her parents' residence on Seventh street and slowly recovering her good health. It is not probable, however, that she will ever become a permanent resident of so severe a climate as the West.

Miss Josephine Sarver, one of the most able teachers of our public schools during past years, has somewhat recovered from the illness that forced her retirement from active duty a year ago, and she will, in all probability, assume the leadership of the new primary school on East Sixth street.

COUNCIL PROCEEDINGS.

MONDAY EVENING, April 5th, 1886.

The Council met in regular meeting.

Present—President Beguelin, Messrs. Bowers, Cox, Dunham, Dumont, Goddard, Marsh, Simpson, Voorhees—9.

Minutes of previous meeting read.

Mr. Marsh thought the Clerk should note in the minutes that the members who retired from the Council at the past meeting, did so after protesting against the abolishing of the rules. So ordered.

On the adoption of the minutes, Messrs. Dunham, Dumont, Goddard and Marsh voted in the negative.

In reply to Mr. Marsh, the President stated that he held that the license of Mr. Bock was granted by the proceedings of the last meeting.

Mr. Cox offered as an amendment, that the minutes be changed to show that it was understood by the members present, that a motion was made and carried to reconsider the vote rejecting Mr. Bock's license, before it was finally granted. Seconded by Mr. Voorhees and carried.

Regular policemen $60 per month in addition to such articles of uniform clothing as the Council may see fit to provide.

Such policeman as shall act as Captain of Police, $75 per month.

Health Inspector, $25 per month until May, 1886. From May 1st, 1886 to Oct. 1st, 1886, $40 per month. Balance of year at $25 per month.

Janitor, $50 and $2 for each extra or adjourned meeting.

Special policemen, 25 cents per hour while on duty.

Mr. Marsh explained that the salaries were the same as last year with the exception of an increase in the pay of the regular police.

Resolution adopted—all aye.

Mr. Cox offered a resolution making the present "rules of order" of the Council, the "by-laws" of the Council. Laid over as required, and the mover gave notice that he should call it up for action at the next regular meeting.

Mr. Goddard offered a resolution designating the official papers for the year.

Mr. Marsh moved as an amendment that the rate for official advertising be fixed at fifty cents per folio (first insertion) and twenty-five cents for each subsequent insertion.

There was considerable discussion on the subject, the keynote of which was an economy that should be consistent with giving the printing to three papers. By cutting down the price it was thought it would cost only a little more for three papers than for two.

Mr. Marsh's amendment was adopted. He then made a second amendment that the appointment of the newspapers be conditioned on the acceptance of the rates offered and the motion as amended was then adopted.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Mr. Voorhees offered a resolution that the street committee be instructed to purchase 2500 tons of crushed stone at $1.25 a ton and such finer stone at $1.25 as was needed and also block stone for gutters in the business part of Park-ave and Front-st. Adopted.

Mr. Marsh made a motion that crushed stone be spread on Second-st as was provided for under an ordinance of last year.

Mr. Voorhees said the street committee was intending to do the work as soon as Mr. Moore had got through his improvements at Park-ave and 2d-st. The motion was then carried.

Mr. Goddard offered a resolution in behalf of the alms committee authorizing the committee in connection with the mayor and overseer of the poor to secure a place to which the city poor can be removed. Such a place Mr. Goddard said was already in view where a saving could be made. The resolution was adopted.

Mr. Dumont moved that when the council adjourned it be to meet one week from to-night. Mr. Marsh proposed that it be made a regular meeting which was done.

Mr. Marsh presented a dog ordinance in view of abating the nuisance of the running of dogs at large at certain times of the year.

The ordinance was read twice and adopted and was ordered duly advertised and to its third reading.

Mr. Bowers presented an ordinance amending the poor ordinance by striking out the list of articles to which the overseer is restricted in making up his orders.

There was some discussion as to the propriety of making the proposed change and it was agreed on motion of Mr. Marsh to lay it on the table until the next meeting.

The rules were suspended to hear some reports.

Mr. Bowers, of the alms committee, reported correct a large number of poor bills. They were referred to the auditing committee.

Mr. Dunham, of the license committee, reported favorably on a number of applications for peddlers and other licenses. They were granted.

Mr. Dunham, from police committee, reported correct bills of Mr. Bird and Mr. Mundy. Referred.

Mr. Marsh, from salary committee, reported back to be referred to the alms committee a bill of V. W. Nash which bore on a poor matter. So ordered.

President Beguelin called Mr. Dumont to the chair and took the floor to call from the table the report of the street committee on the proposed draining of surface water on East Front-st from Cole's hill.

Mr. Beguelin moved that the report be adopted.

Mr. Marsh moved that the matter be referred to the street committee with power provided the cost of piping be not more than $180. So ordered.

Mr. Beguelin resumed the chair and Mr. Dumont reported back the report of the clerk and moved it be placed on file.

Mr. Simpson, of the auditing committee, reported correct a large number of bills amounting to some $1,800 which were ordered paid.

President Beguelin announced that he was about to make a visit to Europe and would not be present at the May meeting.

Mr. Marsh in behalf of the council wished him a prosperous voyage and a happy return.

The council then adjourned to meet next Monday evening.

NORTH PLAINFIELD BOROUGH MEETING.

The Mayor and Council of the Borough of North Plainfield met in regular meeting, last Friday evening.

Present—Mayor VanWinkle and Councilmen Slater, Arnold, Weaver, Thickstun, McCutchen and Riker.

The minutes of the previous meeting approved as read.

A petition was received from the Plainfield Electric Light Co., for permission to erect the necessary poles for the placing of 25 electric lights within the Borough limits as designated in the petition. The lights to be of the Thomson-Houston system, to be paid for by private subscription and to burn during 18 nights of each month. The poles to be erected under the supervision of the Committee on Streets, and the privilege to be granted for one year. Tabled.

Ex-Township Collector, William H. Shotwell, stated in a communication that he had in hand $219.97 of the taxes of 1885, and asked for instruction as to whom he should pay it. Tabled, and subsequently ordered to be transferred to the Borough Treasurer.

A communication was read from property owners on Manning avenue requesting the Council to accept the eastern part of such highway. Tabled on motion of Councilman Slater, pending the opinion of the Corporation Counsel as to the construction of the law in such relation.

The following bills were presented, referred to the proper committees, reported correct and warrants ordered drawn in payment:

Naar, Day & Naar, printing brief, $6 55; John Whitlock, work on Duer street, $5.25; E. Scribner, coal and wood, $1.71; John Vosselman, rent of polling place, $10; D. R. Weaver, inspector of election, $9; John Jackson, judge of election, $9; D. S. Campbell, inspector of election, $9.

The bill of Borough Clerk, W. E. Mattison, for sundry services, amounting to $12.67, was held for correction; and his report as Borough Treasurer was received.

Councilman Slater read the following message from His Honor, the Mayor:

GENTLEMEN OF THE COUNCIL:—A year has not yet elapsed, since by a vote of the electors of that portion of the township of North Plainfield, now embraced within the borough limits, we began our corporate existence. As you will remember, the expediency of such action was honestly doubted by a large portion of our citizens, who feared that injury, and not benefit, would result therefrom, and the measure after much controversy and one failure, was finally adopted by a small majority. The system of borough government was then placed upon trial, and it is for others to decide, whether or not, the good anticipated has been realized. In all departures from old ways and systems certain difficulties must necessarily be encountered and prejudices removed before the people become accustomed to the new order of things. It is pleasing to reflect that those who opposed incorporation have cheerfully acquiesced in the expressed views of the majority and have contributed largely in making the movement a success. We have reason to believe that the objects sought for in incorporation have in the main been attained. And just here it is proper to observe that too much should not be expected of any system of local government while yet in its infancy. And as in the world of nature the time of preparation and seed sowing must necessarily precede the time of harvesting; so in this matter of government, too early a fruitage must not be expected, time must be allowed in this preparatory period. And as he would be considered an unwise builder who did not lay securely the foundation of a building before he placed thereon the superstructure, so would those to whom the management and well being of this borough is intrusted be deserving of censure if they neglected the all-important matter of strength and solidity in the foundation of our borough government. This, I believe has been the aim of the Council. Nor have your efforts been barren of results, particularly in the matter of sidewalks, in which there has been great improvement. Order has been maintained under our police system so far as the limited means at your disposal would permit; and many nuisances detrimental to the health of the community have been abated. And now, glancing forward at our work for the coming year, permit me to give expression to the hope that the same painstaking care, economical expenditure of the public funds, and fidelity to public interests be observed which have characterized the Council during these first few months of its existence, and that while we make as rapid progress as is consistent with safety, we may studiously avoid all such legislation as would be in its nature oppressive, and which would lay burdens upon those who may be least able to bear them. I would suggest that in the matter of street improvements, sidewalks, etc., great care be exercised in observing a strict compliance with all the requirements of the statute and ordinance, so that assessments when laid may be valid, and the expense of any improvement which is intended to be a lien on the lands benefitted, be not eventually laid as a burden on the borough at large, as a public debt. Let us avoid the beginnings of trouble. I would recommend that in the matter of maintaining the health of the community (so far as legislation will effect that result) that, if in your opinion, the existing ordinances do not afford us that full protection, which it is important we should have, that the same be amended, and that we neglect nothing which will conduce to that end. I also recommend that the ordinance which has for its object the suppression of vice, immorality and lawlessness, be carefully considered and that whatever is needed be done in order to give our citizens that which it is the object of all government to confer, viz: protection from the vicious classes. It is to be regretted that the Legislature at its present session has refused to confer upon borough authorities the power to control the licensing of inns and taverns, but while our power is thus limited we may do much towards the maintaining of order and the exemption of all classes, and particularly the youth of the borough from the temptations which surround them. And let us not forget that legislation is in vain except compliance with the requirements of the ordinances be demanded, and to this end I would urge that the same be strictly and impartially enforced, as it is not the severity but the certainty of punishment which is the great incentive to right conduct.

JOHN E. VAN WINKLE, Mayor.

April 5, 1886.

The Mayor appointed the following Standing Committees for the year:

Auditing and Finance—Weaver, Riker and Thickstun.

Fire, Water and Lamps—Riker, Arnold and Weaver.

Law, Ordinance and Election—McCutchen, Thickstun and Slater.

License and Marshal—Arnold, McCutchen and Riker.

Street and Public Health—Slater, Weaver and McCutchen.

Printing, Stationary and Supplies—Thickstun, Slater and Arnold.

Councilman McCutchen offered a resolution granting the petition of the Plainfield Electric Light Co., for permission to erect poles for its purpose in the Borough. The resolution provided that the poles be erected and maintained under the supervision of the Committee on Streets, that the consent of the owner of the property on which the poles are to be erected, be first filed, and that the company shall comply with all the requirements of any ordinances that may be adopted in the future governing the erection of poles and the stringing of wires within the Borough limits. Seconded by Councilman Arnold and adopted—all aye.

Councilman Slater offered a resolution that the Street Commissioner be paid $100 a year and two dollars a day for every day's work in addition. Resolution tabled on motion of Councilman McCutchen, who stated that the power of the Council to appoint such officer was not clear, and an opinion of the Corporation Counsel on the point should first be obtained.

Resolutions were then adopted fixing the following yearly compensations and fees for the several Borough officers: Marshal with appointment to serve the Borough notices, $200; other Marshal, $100 and fees allowed by law and the dog ordinance; Clerk, $100; Corporation Counsel, $150 in full except as provided by ordinances.

The following officers were appointed by resolution: Corporation Counsel, John H. Jackson; Clerk, William E. Mattison; Marshals, Peter V. Weaver and Adam Utzinger; Justice of the Peace to try all violations of the ordinances, W. E. Mattison. Such officers to continue in office at the pleasure of the Mayor and Council.

The question of the Council's right to appoint a Street Commissioner was decided in the affirmative by the Corporation Counsel, and Mr. John V. Whitlock was reappointed to the office, and the resolution introduced early in the evening fixing the compensation, was adopted.

Councilman Thickstun offered a resolution which was adopted, that the Street Committee advertise for bids for establishing a uniform grade within the boundaries designated in the resolution, and the procuring of maps thereof.

Councilman Slater moved, which was carried, that the Committee on Marshals recommend a suitable place as a lock-up.

The bond of the Borough Treasurer was fixed at $500, and the Corporation Counsel's opinion was requested on the laws governing the acceptance of streets, for the instruction of the Street Committee.

The ordinance to regulate the mode of constructing and maintaining telegraph, telephone and other electric wires, was adopted with some amendments, and an ordinance defining the duties of the Street Commissioner was read the second time and laid over.

Sundry motions were carried providing for the fitting of the Council room, the securing of access to it whenever desired, the putting of locks on the desks, and the procuring of suitable accommodations for reporters.

On motion of Councilman Slater, it was ordered that the scraper now in possession of the Borough authorities be returned to the Township to whom it belonged, and that the Street Commissioner make arrangements for the use of it when necessary.

The Clerk was instructed to post the notices of ordinances just adopted, and the meeting adjourned.

NAMING OF COUNTY TOWNS.

Origin of the History and Titles of the Various County Seats.

Directly in the centre of that elongated peninsula of Southern Jersey, Cape May county, there is a neat little town, bordered on one side by the great meadows near the sea, and on the other by fragrant pine woods. This pleasant village is Cape May Court House. Most advantageously situated, from its position in the county, for the transaction of public business, the residents of that section of the State soon appreciated the fact, and the town was early made the seat of justice. The place was first called Middletown, but this was soon afterward changed to its present appellation. Cape May was named for Cornelius Jacobus Mey, the Dutch navigator.

Bridgeton, in Cumberland county, is a corruption of Bridge Town. This place was so called on account of its being situated by the bridge over the old fording place on the Cohansey river. The date of the settlement of this city is uncertain; but it is known that persons lived in the locality before the Revolution. George May, when he came into South Jersey in 1710, settled amid the verdant groves of what is now Atlantic county. May's Landing, the capital of this county, is named in honor of him. The year 1675 saw a body of English Friends, under the command of Fenwicke, set sail from their native land in search of a home wherein liberty of conscience could be exercised. From the peaceful aspect of what afterward proved the abiding place they desired, Fenwicke and his friends called a section of Jersey, Salem. This name was afterward applied to the county town.

Woodbury, the seat of justice of Gloucester, was settled as early as 1684. Richard Wood Gent, of Perry, England, held land in this section. It is said that the words "Wood" and "Perry" were combined and used as the name of the town. It is, however, more probable that "bury" is a corruption of "borough." This contraction is quite common, and may be observed in several cases in New York State and in New England.

Camden City, erected as such in the year 1828, was named in honor of Lord Camden, who favored the cause of America during the Revolution.

Burlington county's seat of justice is at Mount Holly, so called from an eminence once covered with holly trees near the town. The settlers of the town came there about the year 1700.

The pretty little county town of Ocean, Toms River, was founded before the Revolution, and in early days was known by the name of Dover.

Freehold, in Monmouth county, dates from 1735, when courts were first held in this place. The name is English in its origin and denotes a possession that is held in freedom. Evidence proves that New Brunswick, incorporated in 1784, was settled in 1730. At this early period, and for many years later, Middlesex county people knew of this place as "The River." The town was so called in honor of the reigning family of England—the house of Brunswick. Somerville, or the "ville" or city of Somerset, was called Raritan until the year 1810.

Morris county has its Morristown, the former named in honor of Governor Morris, executive of this State from 1731-32. This town was settled about the year 1710. The first permanent English settlement in East Jersey was at Elizabeth, formerly Elizabethtown, in the year 1664. This city was named in honor of Elizabeth, wife of Sir George Carteret.

Mr. Fleming settled in Hunterdon county previous to the Revolution and from him the name Flemington is derived.

Belvidere is certainly one of the prettiest towns, not only in Warren, but in New Jersey, and so thought Maj. Robert Hoops when he named the town, as early as 1750.

William Paterson took great interest in manufacturing industries, and so in 1791, when a philanthropical association desired to erect a town by the Passaic river they named their future city in his honor.

To the Dutch credit must be given for settling Bergen, or the "county of bergs or hills." Though they left their mark on the nomenclature of the county it remained for the Indians to name the county town—Hackensack. The literal translation of this name Hackensack is "the stream which unites with another in low level ground almost imperceptibly."

1666 is the date of Newark's settlement. This city of Essex was named in 1667 by Abraham Pierson, the first minister from England.

The old Dutch family of Van Vorst owned the site of Jersey City in 1638, and the place was then called Paulus Hoeck. In remained in the family for many years, until 1820, when the few houses on the "Hook" were incorporated as a city.

Newton, the county town of Sussex, was settled about the time of the Revolutionary War.

Our city of Trenton is the outgrowth of a little settlement by the "Falles of the De La Ware," in 1679. About 1710 Mahlon Stacy sold 800 acres of land to Judge William Trent, of Philadelphia, whose push and energy did much for his village of "Trent's Town," which from a thorpe has grown into a city of 40,000 people.—Trenton Times.

GLADSTONE'S CABINET CHANGED.

The Queen having accepted the resignation of Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, President of the Local Government Board, and Mr. G. O. Trevelyan, Secretary for Scotland, Mr. Gladstone's Cabinet, the Right Hon. James Stansfeld, Radical member of Parliament for Halifax, has been appointed in place of Mr. Chamberlain, and the Earl of Dalhousie has been appointed to succeed Mr. Trevelyan. Lord Dalhousie will not, however, have a seat in the Cabinet as Mr. Trevelyan had.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR NEW JERSEY.

The River and Harbor bill is about completed, and will doubtless be reported to the House this week. The following are the appropriations affecting New Jersey: Raritan Bay (to complete improvements), $30,000; Maurice River, $5,000; Passaic River, $35,000; Raritan River, $35,000; Shrewsbury River, $10,000; South River, $5,000; Delaware, below Trenton, $240,000.

ENEMIES AS VALUABLE FRIENDS.

I consider that my enemies are equally as valuable to me as my friends, since they aid as much in making a man of me. It is my enemies who keep me on my guard; it is my friends who throw me off my guard. My friends accept me without due examination of my personal merits, but my enemies force me to rise by the sheer force of my intellect and manhood. A man who has no enemies lacks character and strength, and a man who has enemies and is afraid of them, lacks courage and manhood.—A. H. Isler, in Arkansaw Traveler.

REMOVAL OF POSTMASTERS.

In response to the Senate resolution, Postmaster-General W. F. Vilas recently informed that body that the total number of removals of fourth-class Postmasters from March 4, 1885, to March 3, 1886, was 8,645, divided among the several States and Territories as follows:

AN ALARMED HUMORIST.

I take occasion at this time to ask the American people as one man, what are we to do to prevent the spread of the most insidious and disagreeable disease known as hydrophobia? When a fellow-being has to be smothered, as was the case the other day right here in our fair land, a land where tyrant foot hath never trod nor bigot forced a chain, we look anxiously into each other's faces and inquire, what shall we do?

Shall we go to France at a great expense and fill our systems full of dog virus and then return to our glorious land, where we may fork over that virus to posterity and thus mix up French hydrophobia with the navy-blue blood of free-born American citizens?

I wot not.

If I knew that would be my last wot I would not change. That is just wot it would be.

But again.

What shall we do to avoid getting impregnated with the American dog and then saturating our system with the alien dog of Paris.

It is a serious matter, and if we do not want to play the "Desdemona" act we must take some timely precautions. What must those precautions be?

Did it ever occur to the average thinking mind that we might squeeze along for weeks without a dog? Whole families have existed for years after being deprived of dogs. Look at the wealthy of our land. They go on comfortably through life and die at last with the unanimous consent of their heirs dogless.

Then why can not the poor gradually taper off on dogs? They ought not to stop all of a sudden, but they could leave off a dog at a time until at last they overcame the pernicious habit.

I saw a man in St. Paul last week who was once poor and so owned seven variegated dogs. He was confirmed in that habit. But he summoned all his will power at last and said he would shake off these dogs and become a man. He did so, and to-day he owns a city lot in St. Paul, and seems to be the picture of health.

The trouble about maintaining a dog is that he may go on for years in a quiet, gentlemanly way, winning the regard of all who know him, and then all of a sudden he may hydrophobe in the most violent manner. Not only that, but he may do so while we have company. He may also bite our twins or the twins of our warmest friends. He may bite us now and we may laugh at it, but in five years from now, while we are delivering a humorous lecture, we may burst forth into the audience and bite a beautiful young lady in the parquet or on the ear.

It is a solemn thing to think of, fellow-citizens, and I appeal to those who may read this, as a man who may not live to see a satisfactory political reform—I appeal to you to refrain from the dog. He is purely ornamental. We may love a good dog, but we ought to love our children more. It would be a very, very noble and expensive dog that I would agree to feed with my only son.

I know that we gradually become attached to a good dog, but some day he may become attached to us, and what can be sadder than the sight of a leading citizen drawing a reluctant mad dog down the street by main strength and a portion of his pantaloons? (I mean his own, not the dog's pants. This joke will appear in book form. The book will be very readable, and there will be another joke in it also. oed tl.)

I have said a good deal about the dog, pro and con, and am not a rabid dog abolitionist, for no one loves to have his clear-cut features licked by the warm, wet tongue of a noble dog any more than I do, but rather than see hydrophobia become a national characteristic or a leading industry here, I would forego the dog.

Perhaps all men are that way, however. When they get a little forehanded they forget that they were once poor, and owned dogs. If so, I do not wish to be unfair. I want to be just, and I believe I am. Let us yield up our dogs and take the affection that we would otherwise bestow on them on some human being. I have tried it, and it works well. There are thousands of people in the world of both sexes who are pining and starving for the love and money that we daily shower on the dog.

If the dog would be kind enough to refrain from introducing his justly celebrated virus into the person of those only who kiss him on the cold, moist nose, it would be all right; but when a dog goes mad he is very impulsive, and he may bestow himself on an obscure man. So I feel a little nervous myself.—Bill Nye, in Boston Globe.

MOVING DAY.

A woman's idea of moving is to wear a pair of odd shoes, her husband's linen duster, a damaged hoopskirt and a last year's jockey turned hind-side before. Thus formidably attired, with a pocket full of nails, screws and picture cords, and a limber-bladed case knife in one hand and a broom in the other, she is prepared to believe that something is about to be done. The first move that she makes is at the parlor carpet. She takes up two tacks in about fifteen minutes, puts them in a pint saucer and sets the saucer in the middle of the floor, where it will not be in the way. Then she goes into the hall to tell the carman to be careful in bringing down the large rocking chair, as her mother gave it to her. After that she darts into the kitchen, stops suddenly in the middle of the room and says, "Now, what is it I was going to do?" and then races up stairs with a great bustle, on suddenly remembering that a pair of vases were not packed away with the bedding. But they were packed away; and, when she discovers the fact, she comes back saying she has so much to do she don't really know what she's about. Afterward she draws out the glass-ware to put it in a barrel; and, after packing away a couple of tumblers and a salt cellar, takes down her dresses and examines them with as much care as if she was going to a ball and the carriage was already at the door. In the midst of this survey she suddenly thinks of something else and rushes off to attend to it—the case knife in one hand, the broom in the other. When the stove is taken down she is there; when the bureau is being lifted, she is in the exact way of the man going backward; when the carman gets up on a best chair to take down a frame, she is there to rebuke him. She attends to everything. She makes her husband go out-doors and clean his feet. She gets in the way when they are moving the ice-chest. She leaves the dust-pan just where the carman's assistant can step on the handle and have it turn with him at a most unfortunate time. She gets the broom stick entangled with her husband's legs and makes him swear. She tries to lift a two-bushel basket of crockery and finding she can't do it, tells the carman she is not so strong as she used to be; and then contents herself with carrying down an old wooden chair, which has just been brought up-stairs to be used in removing things from the walls and which has to be found and brought up again by some one else. But it is in loading where she makes herself conspicuous. She brings out a ten-inch looking-glass and wants it laid at the bottom of the cart; and she don't want anything else to go on until she can get her work basket. She thinks the stove and bedroom set should ride together; and is quite confident that if the bureau is permitted to stand on the cart as it does, it will never again be fit to be seen. The carman steps on her and walks over her and is swearing all the while down in his throat; but she don't mind him. She knows that the load isn't put on as it ought to be, and that there is room for lots of things left. She brings on a clock and a length of damaged stove pipe, a pair of old boots covered with mildew, a small basket of empty spice boxes, an old gaiter, a back of a worn-out vest, and wants them all put on the cart. She says there is plenty of room anyway, and just as the cart is moving away she rushes after it with a second-hand peach can stuffed with débris, which she successfully introduces into the load and then comes back in triumph. And while the carman is gone she is just as busy as she can be telling the woman next door that she can put just three times as much stuff on that cart as is on it, and if she has got to move again she believes she'll give right up and die.

Spring Flowers.

The flowers that bloom in the spring are all very well in their way but they are not more beautiful, nor half as durable, as the assortment of Spring Overcoats now placed upon our counters for inspection, you can't afford to run the risk of catching cold nor of being thought poor when you can secure a stylish, all-wool Oversack for $5. Even this small amount will cover a multitude of shabbiness and perhaps you are not yet prepared to buy a spring suit. The other extreme in price is $22 but these are silk lined throughout, worth at least $30 and a garment such as no Merchant Tailor would think of making for less than $40. Between an infinite variety of all new goods in every shade, style or price. Recollect when we say "all-wool", even for a $5 Oversack we mean it, we hardly blame you for not believing though, for after all the highest standard to which commercial honesty has risen is that "Honesty is the best policy". Now that's a pretty low standard. While we know from experience that it does pay to be honest, our success has proven this, we claim to be honest because its right. But come and look at the coats they will bear out our statement anyway.

Poetry.

YESTERDAY.

What makes the king unhappy?
His queen is young and fair,
His children climb around him,
With waving yellow hair.

His realm is broad and peaceful,
He fears no foreign foe;
And health to his veins comes leaping
In all the winds that blow.

What makes the king unhappy?
Alas! a little thing.
That money cannot purchase,
Or fleets and armies bring.

And yesterday he had it,
With yesterday it went,
And yesterday it perished,
With all the king's content.

For this he sits lamenting,
And sighs, "Alack! alack!
I'd give one half my kingdom,
Could yesterday come back!"

THE VILLAGE CHOIR.

(SOME DISTANCE AFTER TENNYSON.)

Half a bar, half a bar,
Half a bar onward!
Into an awful ditch,
Choir and Precentor hitch,
Into a mess of pitch,
They led the Old Hundred.
Trebles to right of them,
Tenors to left of them,
Basses in front of them,
Bellowed and thundered.
Oh! that Precentor's look,
When the sopranos took
Their own time and hook,
From the Old Hundred.

Screeched all the trebles here,
Boggled the tenors there,
Raising the parson's hair,
While his mind wandered;
Theirs not to reason why—
This psalm was pitched too high;
Theirs but to gasp and cry—
Out the Old Hundred.
Trebles to right of them,
Tenors to left of them,
Basses in front of them,
Bellowed and thundered.
Stormed they with shout and yell,
Not wise they sang, nor well,
Drowning the sexton's bell,
While all the church wondered.

Dire the Precentor's glare,
Flash'd his pitchfork in air,
Sounding fresh keys to bear
Out the Old Hundred.
Swiftly he turn'd his back,
Reach'd he his hat from rack,
Then from the screaming pack
Himself he sundered.
Tenors to right of him,
Trebles to left of him,
Discords behind him
Bellowed and thundered.
Oh, the wild howls they wrought;
Right to the end they fought!
Some tune they sang, but not,
Not the Old Hundred.

MISCELLANEOUS READING

HER FAIR, FALSE FACE.

It all comes back to me now, the utter misery and despair that came to me, when I knew my darling was false to me—false to every vow.

When I think even now of that one great sorrow of my life, and of the woe most bitter the woman I loved brought to me—the woman whose false love made me what I am to-day, master of the stateliest home, owner of countless wealth, but alas! wifeless and childless—a lonely, gloomy man.

I tell you my story, and the story of others as well; but I must tell you it in my own way, so I will begin at the beginning:—

I was only twenty-five when I first met Arelie Cameron, and she was then a beautiful girl of eighteen—a simple, gentle girl, I believed, who knew nothing of vanity or ambition, or anything that women of the world hold dear.

I was naturally romantic, and, like the "Lord of Roses," my greatest ambition was to be loved for myself alone; not that I had very much to tempt a woman with, but I was the youngest son of a wealthy family, and my mother's fortune—a considerable sum—became mine at her death.

I never told Arelie Cameron this; I let her think me a struggling lawyer, and as such I wooed and won her. I made her my wife, and took her to a rose embowered cottage, and our honeymoon was to me a dream of delight; and if any dissatisfaction was felt by Arelie she never gave the slightest sign of it to me; but I know now that a tempest of passion and bitterness was rising within her toward me, and why? Because another had fallen in love with her beautiful face—another to whom she never mentioned me nor her own marriage. This I learned afterward, and more than this—for I learned of stolen meetings by moonlight, of kisses and caresses between my wife and her lover.

I believed I had tested her love enough, and I went away for a few days; my intention being to tell my people of my marriage. I did so, and received their assurance of a welcome for my beautiful wife; and then, with high-beating heart, and pulses thrilling as I pictured how the glad light would leap to Arelie's eyes when we met, pictured her delight at the costly dresses and jewels I had ordered, her child-like astonishment at the beauty and elegance of the new home to which I would bring her.

It was June; the red roses bloomed fragrant as they twined around the columns of the rustic veranda and mixed their rich perfume with the faint odor of hyacinth and mignonette. I almost ran up the garden path in my eagerness to clasp my darling to my heart. No thought came to me then, as I stood at the door with sunshine around me, of the horror that awaited me when it would open.

Almost impatiently I rang the bell for the second time, and glanced at the windows to see if my darling's face was smiling down upon me. Perhaps she had seen me and was coming to the door herself. But no; the footstep was slow and heavy—slow and heavy even for Jane, I thought. Jane was an old servant in my father's family, whom I brought to the cottage, bidding her keep my secret for a while. As she opened the door something in her face which was very pale, I noticed, struck a chill to my heart.

"What is it, Jane?" I inquired anxiously. "Is your mistress ill? What is the matter, Jane? For God's sake, speak!"

I went to pass her, but she caught my arm, and burst into tears.

"O Master Guy! Master Guy!" she cried. "She has gone—gone without a word to me; but she left this for you."

Her hand trembled as she drew out the note bearing my name. Poor old soul! she more than suspected the fatal truth.

Mechanically I opened the letter; but not even at the first reading did I realize what had befallen me. The woman I worshipped, the wife I adored, had fled from her home to another! The words of the note almost stunned me. A woman I believed pure as a lily had penned them, and the thought that I could have loved a woman capable of writing them, made my soul sick. She wrote:—

"I made a fool of myself when I became your wife. I would never have done so, only I thought you were making believe poverty, for I had heard a hint of things you had done before you met me that did not speak for lack of gold; but I find now, too late, however, for my satisfaction, that you really are no more nor less than what I believed you was only pretending, and so I have left you. I cannot say much more than that I never loved you, and that I worship the lover with whom I have fled, and he can give me wealth and position, for he does not dream I am a wife. It is not likely that you will seek me. I know you too well for that. So—au revoir, I was going to say, but remembering that means till we meet again, which I hope from the bottom of my soul we never shall, I say instead, good-by."

I rushed up the stairs, but there was very little sign of confusion or disorder there. It must have been well meditated on, and no sudden decision come to. Ah, Heaven! she had gone calmly, almost systematically about her elopement.

I sat down stunned for the time being. I had loved her, and my love died hard. One moment I felt I must seek her—I could not live without her—the next I scorned the thought, angry at myself for its entering my mind. One instant I would follow her and reclaim her—bring her back to the path from which she had strayed—the next I loathed the thought of her.

The night passed on, and still I wrestled with my agony; the midnight bells rang out, and still I sat gazing into darkness. Later still, Jane brought me a cup of chocolate which I drank mechanically without a word.

When morning dawned I still sat in the one chair where all night I had reviewed my dishonor. I rang the bell and Jane came in.

"O, Master Guy, do not take it so hard!"

In that moment her humble sympathy was more bearable than that of an equal would have been, for as she spoke the tears filled her kindly eyes.

"I will survive it, Jane."

"Yes, yes, my boy. Along with your mother's name you have her strength."

"She has dishonored a proud name, Jane. I feel worse than had I borne my father's."

When I had inherited my mother's money I had to take her family name as mine, and it was a prouder name even than my father's. So, while my brother was Vernon Fleming, I was Guy Howard.

"I am going away, Jane," I said; "but you are to keep this place, and if my—if your mistress comes back, remember she is your mistress still, and that this place is hers. I will send you money to keep everything as it is, and if I ever return I will come here. Keep silent concerning everything, and—good-by."

The next day I sailed for the new world, intending to remain for some time. I had only been out one short month when a letter came from home—an imperative summons to return. It contained the news of Vernon's marriage to a beautiful dark-eyed woman whom none of them had known of ever heard of before—an absolute stranger in fact; and along with this were the tidings that my father lay at the point of death—the doctors had given him up.

At my father's death my brother would inherit all the vast estate of the Flemings. For they were strictly entailed.

I went back again, perfectly ambitionless, for every hope of my life had fled with Arelie's falseness—went back to what?

It seems foolish, after all, to open old sores, but the memory of that home coming is back with me now, even stronger than the memory of the horrors that followed. Therefore I must tell it.

I went first to see my father. He was propped up with pillows in the bed, his face ghastly. Ah, yes; death had most surely placed his hand upon him. He looked at me with eyes in which a strange lustre gleamed. A cry broke from my lips. That glare, that strange twitching of the muscles, I had seen once before in India. My father had been poisoned by one of the most subtle drugs known to science—its effect, indeed, almost unknown, save by some one who had seen another die with it.

My heart grew cold with horror—horror unspeakable! But why was it my thoughts reverted to the beautiful wife of my brother?

"My God!" I cried. "Am I too late to save him?"

I knew the antidote; but was it too late to use it? Scarcely heeding the questions asked, I went and got the antidote, which, if he were not too far gone, would save him.

As I came up the avenue again, my thoughts full of my father, a lady came along the shady path below; a tall graceful woman, I saw at a glance, with something strangely familiar about her carriage. She came out from the dense shadow, and as she did so my brother overtook me, and his eyes fell on the lady as well, who at that moment stepped into the sunshine.

"That is my wife, Guy," he said. "Is she not beautiful enough to make pardonable my mesalliance, as they call it?"

Beautiful enough! Ah, heavens! Yes, for that moment I saw the perfect features, the crown of wavy hair, the crimson curving lips of the woman I had loved. The dark eyes of my false wife were looking into mine.

A sharp cry left my lips. My eyes did not deceive me. Clad in silken robes and costly lace, Arelie stood before me. Stood before me only for a moment, and then I saw her lips grow white, her face grow pallid, heard the low, frightened cry, saw the passionate, pleading look; the next moment she had fallen at our feet.

My brother looked at me.

"You have frightened her, Guy, by the way you looked at her. I think you must be crazy. You did not seem to know what you were doing."

He lifted Arelie in his arms and carried her to the house, while I followed, almost doubting the whole occurrence. First I went to my father's room and gave him the drops I had gone for, then I went down to the library to seek Vernon and tell him Arelie's story; and I entered by the side door, and came face to face with Arelie, who held an open letter in her hand.

"What do you intend to do?" she said, the paper dropping from her fingers, which I saw at a glance was my father's will, for he owned other wealth besides the entailed estate.

At this instant a servant entered, and Arelie stole out without hearing my answer. I left the library then as well, and went out into the grounds, walking up and down in deep thought, when the sweep of a dress told me some one was near, and I turned to meet her again.

"You will spare me, Guy? You will not betray me?" she cried, clasping my arm.

I shook her off.

"Do you think I would be a party to your crime?" I asked. But still I shrank from telling Vernon, for he was a perfect devil when his temper was roused. "Meet me here to-morrow night," I said, "and I will give you my decision; but Arelie, dare to attempt my father's life again, and as sure as there is a God above me, I will hand you over to the law! O, woman! could you not wait for wealth and position a few short years?"

I did not dream that at this moment a pair of eyes—Vernon's eyes, dark with sudden-born jealous rage—were fixed upon us; but Arelie must have seen them. She pushed me back.

"You must not tempt me to leave my husband, Guy Howard!" she cried. "Vernon, where are you, to save me from this man?"

"You would steal my wife from me, you scoundrel!" I heard Vernon's voice cry, as he leaped forward beside us. "But I will send a bullet through your cowardly heart."

I saw a pistol gleam in the air. I felt a sharp, sudden pain in my side, then as I fell I thought I heard a woman's scream, and the second report of a pistol, and I remembered no more.

When I awoke to consciousness I was what I am now—the lonely master of this vast estate, for I had been too late to save my father's life, and as Vernon had raised the revolver the trigger had caught in an overhanging bough, and the other bullet had entered his own heart.

I never married again. People call me a misanthrope, but never, thank God, a cynic, and wonder why it is so; but none ever dream of what Vernon's wife had been to me.

I never married, though I was at liberty to do so, for after my recovery Arelie went away, and four years afterward I looked upon her dead face, all its beauty marred, all its delicate perfection gone, by the life she had led.

This is the story of Fleming Hall, and the reason why I, its master, have never been charmed again by the light of woman's eyes, nor won by a smile on her lips.

TO THE WORKINGMEN OF THE WORLD.

The executive committees of the Knights of Labor organizations at St. Louis, recently issued the following.

To the Workingmen of the World.

FRIENDS AND BROTHERS: Hear us, for we plead for our right. Men of equity, look upon us, for we struggle against giants of wrong.

Mad with the frenzy of pride and self-adulation, begotten as it is of the success of outrage and infamy, there stands before us a giant of aggregated and incorporated wealth, every dollar of which is built upon blood, injustice and outrage. That giant of corporate wealth has centralized its power and is impersonated in the eager fiend who gloats as he grinds the life out of his fellow men and grimaces and dances as they writhe upon his instruments of torture.

O ye workingmen of America, who love your liberty and your native land; ye great creators of wealth who stand as the foundation of all national good, look upon your brothers to-day!

Gould, the giant fiend; Gould, the money monarch, is dancing, as he claims, over the grave of our order, over the ruin of our homes and the blight of our lives. Before him the world has smiled in beauty, but his wake is a graveyard of hopes, a cyclone's path of devastation and death. Our strong arms have grown weary in building the tower of strength, and yet he bids us build on or die. Our young lives have grown gray too soon beneath the strain of unrequited, constant toil. Our loved ones at home are hollow-cheeked and pale with long and weary waiting for better days to come. Nay, more than this, the graveyards are hiding his victims from our longing eyes.

Brother workmen, this monster fiend has compelled us to toil in cold and rain for five and fifty cents a day. Others have been compelled to yield their time to him for seventeen and thirty-six weary hours for the pittance of nine hours' pay. Others, who have dared to assert their manhood and rebel against his tyranny, are blacklisted and boycotted all over the land.

He has made solemn compacts with the highest authority in our order and then has basely refused to fulfil his pledge.

He lives under and enjoys all the benefits of a republican form of government, and yet advocates and perpetuates the most debasing form of white slavery. He robs the rich and poor, the high and low, with ruthless hand, and then appeals to corrupt and purchased courts to help him take our little homes away. He breaks our limbs and maims our bodies and then demands that we shall release him from every claim for damage or be blacklisted forever.

He goes to our grocers and persuades *them not to give us credit because we re*fuse to be ground in his human mill. He turns upon us a horde of lawless thugs, who shoot among our wives and children with deadly intent, and then he howls for Government help when he gets his pay in coin alike.

Fellow workmen, Gould must be over*thrown*. His giant power must be broken or you and I must be slaves forever. The Knights of Labor alone have dared to be a David to this Goliath. The battle is not for to-day—the battle is not for to-morrow—but for the trooping generation in the coming ages of the world, for our children and our children's children. 'Tis the great question of the age—shall we in the coming ages be a nation of freemen or a nation of slaves?

The question must be decided now. The chains are already forged that are to bind us. Shall we wait until they are riveted upon our limbs? Nay. God forbid! Workmen of the world, marshal yourselves upon the battle field! Workmen of every trade and clime, into the fray! Gould and his monopolies must go down or your children must be slaves. Think of the little olive plants around your hearthstones that will be blighted by his curse. Think of the little home he is seeking to rob you of. Think of the wife from whose eyes he has wrung floods of tears and from whose heart he has tortured drops of blood.

Who can look calmly upon his perfidy, his outrage and his crime? He has sought to incite felony among our rank and file; he has bought the perfidy of vile men to entrap the unwary, that he might stain our fair name and gloat over our misfortunes. Once for all, fellow workmen, arouse! Let the hand that toils be lifted to heaven and swear by him that liveth forever that these outrages must cease! Let every heart and brow be turned towards our common foe, and let no man grow weary until, like Goliath, our giant is dead at our feet.

EXECUTIVE BOARDS D. A. 101, 93, 17.

"And how old are you, my little man?" said the school trustee, addressing a little five-year-old. "I'm not old at all. I'm nearly new!" was the response.

Nurse (to young husband)—"I am glad to announce, sir, that you have a beautiful bouncing son." Young husband (excited)—"Er—boy or—er—girl?"

She—"So you are writing a novel?" He—"Yes." She—"And what will it contain?" He—"Four divorced women and a society scandal." She—"Won't that be lovely!"

A RED MOUNTAIN ROMANCE.

BY NINA H. CLARK.

One April morning, while the sun was shining down in Silver City, Seleni and her father came slowly into town. There was snow still in the mountains—many feet of snow—but it had melted in the valley, and the wooden pavements of the little mining camp was as though it were July. Over in Hallelujah Gulch a great strike had been made, and numbers of prospectors thronged the streets, and stood in groups at every corner. One rough miner turned and looked after Seleni and her father and the old hand organ.

"This 'ere's a city now boys?" he cried. "Look at the organ grinder come to town."

"Give us a tune, old man!" called out a second miner.

"Let him alone, boys," said a third. "Don't you see he's blind?"

Seleni led her father down the narrow street and piloted him safely through the noisy crowd. As she turned a corner she spied an unpretending restaurant. "Dinner fifty cents," the sign read, and she paused before the open door.

"We'll go in and git some dinner, dad. I'm fearful hungry."

She led her father to one of the small tables, and he slipped the organ from his back. Then she drew up an old bandana handkerchief from her pocket and untied one corner. A few ten cent pieces and a little roll of nickles dropped out on the table.

"Got enough, Seleni?" asked her father, anxiously. His quick ear had caught the click of the coins.

"Lots," said Seleni, shortly.

She hastily tied up the money, and going to the counter, ordered dinner for her father, and for herself—a bowl of mush and milk.

"I'm pretty near starved," said the old organ-grinder, as he ate his roast beef with a relish. "H'aint the meat good, Seleni?"

"Bet your life!" answered Seleni calmly, taking a sip of milk.

"And the tomata and rice pudding?"

"Yes, dad. Don't stop to talk."

Seleni soon finished her own simple dinner, and leaned back in the stiff wooden chair. Two miners near looked up admiringly. Seleni's eyes were large and black—as had been those of her Italian mother—who had died when she was born. Heavy braids of blue black hair were wound around her head, and her cheeks and her lips were crimson. Her old straw hat was tied down with a faded ribbon; her dark blue dress was stained and shabby. She wore a blanket shawl around her slender shoulders.

"We've had a splendid dinner, hain't we?" said her father, rising and taking the organ on his back.

Seleni paid the restaurant keeper and tied up the few nickels that remained. Then she took her father's arm and led him to the corner of the street.

"We'll stop and play here, dad."

Her father patiently began to turn the crank of the old organ. Seleni stood beside him and eagerly scanned the faces of the passers by. No few seemed to think the music worth paying for. A lady gave Seleni a ten cent piece, and a miner carelessly tossed a quarter toward them. But their supper and a night's lodging were to be paid for, and so few nickels were left in the bandana handkerchief.

It grew late at last. The organ-grinder had played through all his tunes.

"You're tired, dad," said Seleni, as her father paused. "We'll go and find some place to sleep."

"We don't want no supper, do we, Seleni? We had such a hearty dinner."

"Yes, dad," said Seleni, faintly.

"And it was late, too," added the old man. "It must ha' been most 1 o'clock."

"Be you hungry again, dad?" asked Seleni, looking anxiously into his face.

"Not a mite," answered her father cheerfully. "S'pose I play a little longer. 'Tain't dark yet, is it? Let's walk along."

They turned a corner and found themselves on a side street in a quiet neighborhood. There were lace curtains at the windows of some of the small cabins.

An open door gave a glimpse of a bright Brussels carpet. Suddenly a young girl appeared at a window, and raising the sash, carelessly tossed into the street a half-withered bouquet of hot-house flowers.

Seleni quickly glanced up at the lady, who was young and had fair hair. This much she remembered always.

The bouquet rolled to the young girl's feet, then stopped. She stooped and picked up the flowers. They were only a little faded; some of the roses were quite fresh and fragrant. It must have been a beautiful bouquet once. Why did the young lady throw it away so soon?

It grew toward seven o'clock. Seleni and her father had paused before a large hotel. The piazza in front was crowded with men. Some of them gazed at the girl who stood so patiently beside the old organ. Her hat slipped back and her black hair lay in rings on her smooth white forehead. Seleni did not know how pretty she was and why the men stared at her so. She knew she was tired and hungry. She wished some one would toss them some money.

A young man came down the hotel steps. He wore a blue flannel shirt, and his coat was quite as shabby as the one Seleni's father wore. He stood in front of the organ, with his hands in his pockets. For a few moments he did not speak, but seemed to be listening to the music. Then his eyes fell on the flowers.

"Where'd you git 'em?" he said, suddenly.

"Found 'em," answered Seleni, quite as shortly.

He came a step nearer and held out his hand.

"Let me see 'em."

But Seleni drew back hastily.

"Pay for 'em first. I'll sell 'em cheap."

He thrust his hand still deeper into his pocket, then tossed a silver dollar on top of the organ. Then he took the flowers, and studied them intently as he turned the bouquet around.

"Tell me where you git 'em?" he asked pleadingly.

"Found 'em," Seleni said again. "A lady throwed 'em out the winder."

The young man said something under his breath, then turned and walked away. Seleni had seen the color come to his face and a hurt look to his eyes. As she looked after him he gave the bouquet a toss, and it fell in the muddy street, only to be crushed the next instant by the wheels of a passing wagon.

"Hain't there enough money, yet?" asked her father, touching her arm.

"Yes, dad," she answered. "We'll go and git some supper and then we'll find a place to sleep."

The little parlor of Mrs. Murphy's lodging house was crowded with miners that evening. Seleni left her father sitting contentedly into a corner, and stole out of the front door, that she felt suffocated in a small, close room.

Some one sat on the lower step, with his head in his hands. He looked up and saw Seleni, as she stood hesitatingly in the doorway.

"Don't be afraid," he said kindly.

It was the young man who had bought the flowers.

Seleni looked down on the steps, and drew her old blanket shawl still closer around her.

"It's cold out here," said the young man. "Mebbie you had better go in."

"I hain't cold," answered Seleni. "I'm most always outdoors."

"Where'd you say you found the posies?" he asked, suddenly raising his head.

"A young lady throwed 'em out. She had yeller hair. It was a house with white curtains at the winders. I didn't set no price on the flowers," she added, hastily. "You needn't have paid so much for 'em."

"I hain't complainin' of the price," said the young fellow. "They cost me a pile to begin with."

"Did you give 'em to her?" asked Seleni, curiously.

"Yes," he answered, shortly; "more fool, to!"

"They were faded," remarked Seleni, consolingly.

"Yes," he said, bitterly. "She'd had 'em twelve hours."

His head dropped on his hands again.

"I wouldn't care," said Seleni, softly. The young man glanced at her. Seleni's eyes were soft with sympathy; she looked so fair in the moonlight.

"How old be you," he asked abruptly.

"Seventeen," she replied, wonderingly.

"And you travel around with your father?"

"Yes," said Seleni. "Dad likes to travel. He won't let me do nothin'," she replied, promptly. "He say he reckons he can support me."

"Can you write?" looking eagerly into her pretty face.

"Considerable," answered Seleni. "I was to public school once."

"I hain't got no edication," said the young man, sadly; "and I want to get a letter writ."

"I'll do it," answered Seleni, eagerly.

"Will you, now!" and the young fellow sprang up. "Come on into the kitchen; there's never nobody there."

In a few minutes he had brought Seleni a piece of paper and pen and ink. They were alone in the little kitchen that was scarcely more than a shed, and the girl seated herself at the pine table.

"Begin 'Darlin' Lizzi,'" said the young man, leaning anxiously over her shoulder.

In a cramped hand, and very slowly, Seleni wrote: "Darling Lezzie."

"Tell her I love her," he burst out. "Tell her I'm goin' over to Red Moun*tain to-morrow, but she can write to me.* Jim Conroy'll read me her letter. She needn't say nothin' but Yes or No. Got it all down?"

"Pretty near," said Seleni. "You told me an awful lot." She was handling the pen awkwardly.

A bright color had come to the young man's cheeks. His hair was light, almost golden, just the color of the young lady's, Seleni thought. She glanced down at the letter. Would Darling Lizzie say yes or no?

"Got done?" asked her new friend. "I'll take it over to the post office." He sealed the envelope carefully and put it tenderly in his pocket. Then he held out his bronzed hand.

"Good bye, I'm much obliged to you. If I don't never see you again I wish you good luck."

As he passed Seleni's chair a silver dollar dropped into her lap.

* * * * * * *

The next April Seleni and her father found themselves once more crossing Red Mountain on their way to Silver City. Selini had grown a little taller, but she looked much the same. Her dress was still shabby, and a forlorn felt hat replaced the old black straw. But her lips and cheeks were like crimson with exercise and health. As they came into view of the town they passed a group of miners who were out prospecting. One of them shaded his eyes with his hands, and looked long at Seleni.

"Give us a tune!" he called out to the organ-grinder, and the old man obediently set down his organ and began to turn the crank.

Then the young miner came slowly toward Seleni and held out his hand. The girl knew him at a glance, and her black eyes grew bright with pleasure.

"I didn't get no answer," he whispered.

Seleni looked sorry; then a curious gladness came to her eyes.

"Hain't you seen her?" she asked.

"No," answered the young man; "she don't live here no more."

"I'm sorry," said the girl; "I writ it plain."

"Twasn't your fault."

Then he looked admiringly at her.

"S'pose I come to see you to-night?"

The old organ grinder took up his burden again, and as they moved away Seleni smiled over her shoulders at the young man with fair hair who looked after her as he leaned lightly on his pick.

A month later a priest at Silver City married them.

Seleni was very happy in her new home. There were no lace curtains at the cabin windows, for her husband was but a poor prospector, with only his youth and hope. Her father still played the old organ, but he kept near home that Seleni might see him as she glanced up from her work.

One evening, during the winter, Seleni's husband came home, and as he seated himself by the stove, drew a yellow envelope from his pocket. It was old and worn by much handling, and bore numerous postmarks.

"What is it?" asked Seleni, quickly.

"An old letter fur me," answered her husband. "They said it had bin follerin' me 'round everywhere. I hain't been in one place long the last year. I guess it ain't much good now. S'pose you read it."

Seleni took the letter and tore open the envelope. There was only a few lines.

It began "Darlin' Jim," and was signed, "Your own Lizzie." It stated that the writer would marry him any time.

"Don't look so!" cried her husband, as Seleni grew deadly white. She did not speak, but stood perfectly still with the letter clutched in her hand.

But her husband threw his strong arms around her.

"I'm glad I didn't get it!" he cried. "Don't you know I love you best? Nobody can take your place now!"

DON'T BE A SPONGE.

The meanest man in Rondout is known as "The Sponge." He never buys a newspaper or advertises in one, but he knows the value of advertising, for he said to a Freeman reporter the other day: "If you want an item you might say that ——, the enterprising dealer, has gone to the city on a visit to friends, but will combine business with pleasure by bringing back a Spring stock of desirable goods."

"2. And be it resolved, That this resolution take effect immediately."

Now, therefore, pursuant to the foregoing resolution, I do hereby set apart FRIDAY, April twenty-third, eighteen hundred and eighty-six, for the planting of forest trees, and recommend that the day be devoted by the people to that purpose.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand, and caused the great seal of the State to be hereunto affixed, at Trenton, this thirtieth day of March, eighteen hundred and eighty-six.

[L. S.] LEON ABBETT.

By the Governor,
HENRY C. KELSEY,
Secretary of State.

HONOR AND DISGRACE.

Government in the United States was established by wise and patriotic men for the purpose of securing the blessings of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness for all coming time, and to make manifest that a free people were capable of exercising, with judgment and integrity, the inherent right of representative rule. The founders of the Republic were statesmen of unsullied repute. Their work was honorable and beneficent.

To be an American Citizen strictly loyal to the principles of free government the fathers proclaimed as organic law, is to wear the brightest badge of Honor.

To prostitute governing authority to the base end of promoting mercenary greed, and to convert official place into shambles for corrupt bargain and sale, is to bear the blackest stigma of Disgrace.

Political disgrace has attached and still attaches to the American name.

The charge cannot be truthfully denied.

Proof of it is as clear as sunshine.

From Boards of Aldermen up through State Legislatures to the National Congress the hideous monster of bribery and corruption has plied his nefarious trade and often with brazen audacity.

Aldermen of the great City of New York, the proud Metropolis of America, sell themselves without compunction to do the bidding of heartless monopolists and manipulating rascals who possess not a throb of regard for honesty, morality, or the public weal.

Scores of State Legislators have pursued the same course of infamy, pocketed bribes, and committed crime by robbing the public whom they had sworn to protect.

And so we might go on and trace through various avenues the slimy marks of legislative and official corruption.

It exists a blighting disgrace.

To destroy it is the duty of every citizen who values the honor of country and his own honor and personal welfare.

We know and gladly declare that there are now as good and reliable men in public position as ever lived, men who would rather die than steal or accept a bribe.

But they are only a part of the whole.

That fact brings into the foreground what we desire to see accomplished.

Which is—

None but honest men in office, placed there by honest and honorable means,

AND EVERY POLITICAL THIEF IN PRISON.

According to the Elizabeth Herald, a Washington correspondent claims that Hon. Robert S. Green would accept the Democratic nomination for Governor of this State, if it were tendered him. While we should feel proud to announce this statement as correct, we doubt if Judge Green desires or would accept the nomination for Governor. That he would command the entire strength of his party in the event of his nomination, is beyond doubt.

A great deal of excitement was caused in New Brunswick on Monday last over the arrest of Theresa Mayor for the murder of her new born babe. The girl is a domestic, and gave birth to the child in the morning. As soon as the fact became known, she was arrested, and upon being arraigned, was held to answer the charge of murder. The girl emphatically declares that she did not kill the babe, but says that it was born dead. The body of the infant was found in a cesspool.

CONGRESSMAN GREEN.

The Washington correspondent of the Newark Evening News, gives the following pleasing sketch of Congressman Robert S. Green, who, it says, is mentioned among his colleagues in Congress as the probable Democratic candidate for Governor:

"He is a man of very pleasing manners and appearance. He is fifty-five years old, and to use a favorite expression of Roscoe Conkling, he is a man of 'some corporeal rotundity.' That is to say the judge is short and stout in proportion, and consequently jolly. His hair is mixed with gray, while a heavy moustache of the same hue graces his round and pleasant face. In conversation he is quiet and deliberate. As a public speaker he is convincing and rhetorical. Judge Green is a native Jerseyman, having been born at Princeton in 1831. He graduated at the College of New Jersey in 1850, and was admitted to the bar of his State as an attorney three years later. In 1856 he was admitted as a counsellor. From 1857 to 1868 he was city attorney of Elizabeth, and was Surrogate of Union county from 1862 to 1867. The following year he went to the bench as presiding judge of the Union Court of Common Pleas, which position he filled for five years. He was a member of the Commission to suggest amendments to the Constitution of New Jersey in 1873, became a member of the New York bar in 1874, and was a delegate to the Democratic Convention in 1860 and 1880. Judge Green was elected to the Forty-ninth Congress on the straight out Democratic ticket, receiving a majority of 1,848 over Kean, his Republican opponent."

Shortly after noon of Monday last a fire broke out in the third story of the Boston Block in Minneapolis, Minn., in which the Post Office is located. The building was quickly enveloped in flames and will be a total loss. The mails were all saved.

The election in Rahway Tuesday was warmly contested and a large vote polled. The Republicans made no nomination for Mayor, leaving the field open to the two Democratic candidates. James H. Durand was the regular Democratic nominee, and Dr. John Daily the Independent Democratic candidate. There was a general mixing up of Democratic and Republican votes. The Independent candidate, Dr. John Daily, was elected by about seventy majority. The Common Council will stand the same as last year, eight Democrats to four Republicans. The two Republican candidates for Chosen Freeholders are elected, defeating B. Frank Crowell and Wm. R. Conway. The first and fourth wards elected the solid Democratic ticket. The second and third wards elect a majority of the Republican candidates. The Democrats have perfect control of the city government; in a word, the Republicans have gained nothing more than the election of one Chosen Freeholder—last year one Democrat and one Republican being elected.

The Laborer and the Shirt.

A lockout exists at the extensive coal mines of Messrs. Doe & Roe. About ten thousand men are idle. One of the workmen having learned that their employers changed their shirts three and four times a week, the miners held a mass meeting, and passed resolutions denouncing the aristocratic tendency on the part of the proprietors, and resolved that unless they came down to the common everyday level of their workmen by making one shirt last at least four days, mining should be suspended. The fight is for the recognition of a principle, and the miners have the sympathy of all true friends of labor.—Puck.

THE LEGISLATURE.

There is no certainty yet that the Assembly will adjourn sine die on Friday. The Senate has not yet concurred in the resolution to that effect. The Senate hopes to get through with the impeachment trial next week, and so be in a position to adjourn then without day, and the Senators would like both Houses to dissolve together. The Governor has sent in vetoes of Assembly bill 92, allowing Common Councils in cities to fix terms of City Clerks for not more than three years, and Assembly 294, relative to children who live in houses having contagious diseases attending school. On Monday Mr. McDonald offered a concurrent resolution extending the sympathies of the Legislature to the people of Ireland in their struggle for Home Rule, and expressing satisfaction with the proposition made by Hon W. E. Gladstone, whose towering intellect and far seeing statesmanship have thus pointed the way for Ireland's relief. Also, that a copy of this resolution, signed by the Governor, President of the Senate, and Speaker, be cabled to Mr. Gladstone. Mr. Corbin said Mr. Gladstone's course met with his approval, but he was opposed to cabling the resolution, although he had no objection to its passage. He offered a substitute simply congratulating the people of Ireland on the bright outlook for Home Rule. Mr. Pelouhet, in favoring the original resolution, paid a high tribute to the bravery of the Irish people. Mr. Harrigan advocated the resolution. Finally, on motion of Mr. Besson, the resolutions were laid over. Mr. Corbin moved to reconsider the vote by which was lost House 250, which appropriates $50,000 for publishing the laws in the newspapers. Mr. Baird opposed. Lost, 28 to 28. In Executive Session the nomination of John Carpenter, Jr., as Commissioner of the Sinking Fund in place of Eugene Doughty, deceased, was received.

The amendments to the constitution were the special order in the House Wednesday afternoon. The reorganization of the Court of Errors and Appeals provoked considerable debate. Messrs. Corbin and Seymour were in favor of the bill. During the afternoon Mr. Throckmorton introduced a bill to repeal an act to prevent usury in Monmouth county. Mr. Mills introduced a bill extending to all corporated towns having a Mayor and Common Council the City Excise Department act. The bill to annex Harrison, in Hudson county, to Essex county, was reported adversely and the report sustained. The joint resolution relative to the boundary line between this State and New York, which had been lost, was reconsidered and passed. The proposed amendment to constitution, introduced by Mr. Noonan, increasing the salaries of the members of the House to $1,000 a year was lost, 6 to 35, those voting in the affirmative being McDonald, Norriman, Pintard, Roe, Shule and TenBroeck. The report of the Joint Committee on Printing was submitted Wednesday morning. They have investigated the whole subject and concluded that it would be well to have the public printing law repealed, not now, but when the condition of the State Treasurer is better, then for the State to fix a standard price for doing the printing. The only bill introduced the same morning was by Mr. Corbin. It provides that no person shall sell, give or dispose of the flesh of any animal for food or for the use in the manufacture of oleomargarine, butterine or other food which animal was not at least four weeks old when it was killed, under penalty of $200. The bill was at once reported favorably, and ordered to a third reading. Bills passed are: An act providing for the appointment of county auditors; an act enabling Island Heights to become a borough. On motion of Mr. Wolverton the enacting clause was stricken from the bill, which provided for a State Reformatory in Burlington township. After a lively debate, in which Mr. Seymour was on the defense, the enacting clause was stricken from the bill, which secured to inmates of asylums certain postal rights. Mr. Hughes' bill preventing the appointment of non-residents as deputy sheriffs was lost, 27 to 20. The bill providing for the opening of the polls on election day from 6 a. m. to 6 p. m. was killed by a vote of 16 to 27. Mr. Edward Goeller was chosen as trustee of the State Normal School from the Sixth Congressional District at a joint meeting held Wednesday morning, which then adjourned sine die. The bills lost Wednesday afternoon were: Senate 160, known as Temperance Hygiene; an act increasing the fine for selling liquor without license to $50; an act enabling Hudson county to create a sinking fund to create bonds for arrears of taxes. The bill prohibiting the use of barbed-wire fences in cities was withdrawn by Mr. Seymour, its introducer. The following bills passed the House the same afternoon; providing a penalty for giving short weight and measure; relative to fishing in the Delaware above Trenton falls; to procure the performance of city contracts within the stipulated time; enabling cities having water-works to supply neighboring cities and towns; relative to recognizances in criminal cases; amending the insane act so as to give County Clerks ten cents a folio for copies of reports under the act. The act amending the game act and the act relative to fishing in the south branch of the Raritan River were adversely reported and the reports concurred in. The vote by which was lost Mr. Harrigan's bill, which provides that only mortgaged property shall be liable to debt, whether by foreclosure or otherwise, was reconsidered and the bill was laid over until Thursday.

Notice To Fishermen.

The Commissioners of Fisheries in charge of the counties of Sussex, Passaic, Morris and Warren desire to give notice that it is illegal to catch in any manner, or have in possession, after the same had been caught, any pickerel in any of the waters of this State, during the months of March and April. (See laws of 1874.) The Commissioner has determined to use every legal means in his power to have this very wise and proper law enforced. It is well known that the taking of pickerel, by means of fikes and other illegal devices, during the months named, when the fish are seeking their spawning grounds, is most destructive of this valuable fish in the ponds and lakes of this State, and all good citizens should aid in seeing that the law in this regard is faithfully enforced. Information is in the possession of the Commissioner that fish are being illegally taken, in several places in this section, by some persons perhaps who are ignorant of the law, and by others who do it knowingly. Any information that will assist those charged with the enforcement of the law will receive prompt attention.

Extending Special Delivery.

The report of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads to accompany the bill providing for the extension of the special delivery system, says: "The objects of this bill are to broaden the application and improve the methods of the system. Under the act of March 3, 1885, the privilege of immediate delivery is restricted to letters or, as construed, to mail matter of the first class. There would appear to be no good reason in principle or policy for this limitation. If it is right to transmit by mail at all a newspaper or book or packet of merchandise, it is difficult to see why such articles should be denied any of the special facilities afforded by the mails, the more particularly when the fee charged for the special service is in excess of the cost of doing the work. No practical difficulties exist in the way of extending the special delivery system to all articles of mail matter. Indeed, the delivery of parcels by special messenger is not open to the objection that might be urged against their delivery by regular carriers at the free delivery offices, that a liability to hinder the delivery of letters and to overload the carrier on the trip. Your committee, therefore, unhesitatingly recommends that the privilege of immediate delivery be extended to embrace all classes of mail matter."

WESTFIELD WISPS.

Mr. James T. Pierson is out with new grocery wagon.

Mr. Austin Brown has rented "Chestnut Lawn" to Mr. Harry Wilbur, who expects to occupy the same the coming week.

Mr. John C. Swan of Elizabeth, is located in his recently purchased residence corner Central avenue and Pinion street.

Aaron B. Clark has the contract for erecting the addition to the brick store corner Broad and Elm street and has commenced work on same.

Hook and Ladder Co. No. 1 held their regular monthly meeting on Monday evening last. A good attendance was present and business transacted.

The question of calling commissioners to re-assess the damage in the matter of laying North avenue from Central avenue to Elmer street was before the court of Common Pleas on Wednesday. Postponement of the case was made for one week.

Mr. Charles R. Clark, the newly appointed overseer of road district No. 14, has scraped all the roads in his district, improving them considerably. Why do not more of the overseers do likewise? It would make our country roads good and hard for the present season. With the patent road scraper that is used it will leave the roads in a fine condition for the placing of crushed stone thereon.

The overseers of our several road districts are looking about for the purchase of crushed stone. A number of our neighboring towns last year used the refuse of iron foundries or slag as it is called, claiming that with a top dressing of fine crushed stone it makes as good roads, if not better than fine crushed stone. Anything but the earth from the gutter makes a road good and good roads enhances the value of real estate in any community.

It was certainly disgraceful the way some of our young men made the night hideous last Saturday by their cursing and swearing and the using of obscene remarks upon our main street. Their names are known and ought to be published. There is a law against using loud and offensive remarks upon the streets or public places in our town, punishable by a fine not exceeding twenty dollars or confinement in the county jail for not over thirty days. A ten day's confinement in castle Cahill would no doubt be a good lesson for some of them.

The body of Daniel H. Staples a former resident of our town was brought here from New York on Wednesday last for burial in Fairview cemetery. It was accompanied by a detail of twenty-five men from U. S. Grant Post, No. 327, of Brooklyn, of which deceased was a member. Mr. Staples was drowned in East River Friday evening last while attempting to cross with three other persons in a small row boat. His body was recovered the next morning by means of a large seine which was dragged through the water at or near the place of the capsizing of the boat. Some fifteen years ago deceased resided in our town and married a Mrs. Sarah Mooney, whose death occurred about five years ago. She left two sons aged ten and twelve years. His brother Horace J. Staples, was a prominent contractor and builder in our town a number of years ago, but removed to Brooklyn where he is now engaged in business.

SAVE THE CHILDREN.

Detrimental food which, by reason of their superior strength, may not seriously affect the health of adults, as is well known, frequently acts upon the more delicate organs of the child to produce disorders of the most serious character. The amount of laudanum or other poison that would be harmless to an adult will cause the death of an infant. This great difference between the vitality of adults and children is too generally overlooked in the preparation of food. Because no harm immediately perceptible comes to the adult by the use of an article of food, no thought is given to the effect it may have upon the more delicate organs of inferior age.

Children diet largely upon cake and bread, and these articles, if light, sweet and composed of material that are free from injurious substances, are easily digested, nutritious and wholesome. There is a danger to our children, however, lurking in their bread and cake which is too often lost sight of. These articles are now leavened largely by baking powders, and when pure and wholesome baking powders are used they make not only the most palatable food, but one much more wholesome and nutritive than if leavened with yeast or cream of tartar and soda. The trouble arises from the fact as shown by recent scientific tests by the Government chemists and by official boards of health, that all these baking powders, with the single exception of the Royal, contain either lime, alum, phosphates, or acids of an injurious character. Therefore when bread or cake is made with the use of these cheap baking powders, these ingredients (which are present through the efforts of the manufacturers to produce a cheaper article) pass into the food and are taken into the delicate organs of childhood where they are the source of very much of the disease with which our children are afflicted.

Persons who have not strong constitutions, growing girls, young children and nursing mothers are particularly liable to the evil effects produced by the introduction of the adulterants named as found in the cheap baking powders. Heartburn and the prevalent forms of indigestion are often solely traceable to the action of alum on the delicate coats of the stomach. Prof. Willard Parker, U. S. Surgeon-General Hammond, Prof. Alonzo Clark, most eminent physicians of New York, with scores of others, have written and spoken most earnestly of the evils arising from partaking of such food. There should be as much care in the choice of a baking powder as in obtaining pure milk or in having a prescription compounded from pure drugs and not from poisons.

The matter is one of the greatest importance, particularly to the rising generation, and while our conservative law makers are making up their minds as to the proper legislation to stop the sale of the poisonous compounds, mothers will do well to study it carefully. The housekeeper will experience no inconvenience in discarding the use of the adulterated baking powder, if she has been using it, as the Royal Baking Powder upon the purity and wholesomeness of which all the Government chemists agree, is equally accessible; but she will need to exercise a close watch upon her packages from the grocer in order to prevent the inferior brands from creeping into her kitchen unawares.

In what we have felt it our duty to say in reference to the subject of baking powder there is no intention to disparage the work or the products of those many manufacturers in other lines of food products who, with conscientiousness and liberality, are serving the public with pure and wholesome articles of diet.

Surface Indications
What a miner would very properly term "surface indications" of what is beneath, are the Pimples, Sties, Sore Eyes, Boils, and Cutaneous Eruptions with which people are annoyed in spring and early summer. The effete matter accumulated during the winter months, now makes its presence felt, through Nature's endeavors to expel it from the system. While it remains, it is a poison that festers in the blood and may develop into Scrofula. This condition causes derangement of the digestive and assimilatory organs, with a feeling of enervation, languor, and weariness—often lightly spoken of as "only spring fever." These are evidences that Nature is not able, unaided, to throw off the corrupt atoms which weaken the vital forces. To regain health, Nature must be aided by a thorough blood-purifying medicine; and nothing else is so effective as
Ayer's Sarsaparilla,
which is sufficiently powerful to expel from the system even the taint of Hereditary Scrofula.
The medical profession indorse AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, and many attestations of the cures effected by it come from all parts of the world. It is, in the language of the Hon. Francis Jewett, ex-State Senator of Massachusetts and ex-Mayor of Lowell, "the only preparation that does real, lasting good."

WE TAKE pleasure in calling attention of our customers and all interested in sanitary matters to the all porcelain "Perfection," the only square top Hopper, with trap, made.—For perfect cleanliness and simplicity of construction, we invite comparison with any Closet ever manufactured, either home or foreign. It combines, with the utmost simplicity, all the points of a strictly first-class water-closet. The square top will make itself apparent to all users, in doing away with drip tray, the wash at all times thoroughly scouring all parts, whereas in the drip tray it cannot help but become foul underneath. It has a seal in Trap of 1½ inches, and the soil pipe vent of 2 inches diameter, as will be seen in the above cut, will prevent all syphoning of Trap. The two local or end vents of 1½ inches diameter are intended for right or left ventilation, the one not being used to be closed. The large handhole in front gives free access to all parts of trap.

SPRING!
Now that Nature is beginning to clothe herself in forms of beauty you will naturally be looking 'round for wearing apparel suitable for the season. A glance at our Spring offerings will save you a good deal of time and money too, for we were never better prepared to serve you than at present. For months past, long before you ever thought of the matter, we have been engaged in selecting, with the care and judgment born of a long experience, a diversity of fabrics that will not only please the eye, but render genuine service in the wear. We set the ball rolling with a Union Cass. Suit, in two shades, at $8. It is a marvel of cheapness and, if you don't give it away, the price you paid for it will never be guessed. In all wool goods we commence at $10. Nobby, stylish, durable and, remember, all wool. We guarantee this, and are not afraid to have them compared with anything offered near this price. The celebrated goods manufactured by the Sawyer Woollen Co. are too well known to need praise. The demand for and ready sale of these goods have been such as to lead to their imitation, and, so far as looks go, they have been successfully copied. But the wearing qualities of the Sawyer goods have not been, and cannot be, imitated. To protect themselves and those who have learned the value of their goods, the Sawyer Co. have issued tags to those who purchase the goods direct for manufacture, to be attached to every suit made up. We offer this Spring genuine Sawyer Suits, with the "tag guarantee" attached, for $13 and upward. We have them in Plaids, Checks and Mixtures, and in patterns both grave and gay. For real value, combined with elegance of style and good workmanship, they take—the cake, we we were about to say; no, the whole bakery would be more appropriate. Our general stock is full, large, varied, all manufactured this season, and at prices beyond comparison. We invite inspection. The stock itself is our best advertisement. It is more eloquent than any description we can write.

According to all the "signs" of the old settlers, this will be a good year for corn. If, as many believe, a thunder storm in March and the wind in the south for three days previous to the sun's "crossing the line" have any effect on that crop, farmers' barns in this vicinity will be filled to overflowing next fall.

In the Park avenue Baptist church during last Sunday afternoon, seven more colored converts were baptized as an additional result of the great work for the cause of christianity that of late has been so earnestly and successfully conducted in this city among the members of the Mt. Olive flock.

The commodious stables in connection with Laing's Hotel have been leased by Mr. Charles E. During Wednesday afternoon of next week, the fair of the little ones of the neighborhood in aid of the "Fresh Air Fund," will take place at No. 3 First Place. Admission is only five cents, but as the young folks have been preparing for the event for many weeks past, there will be found inside lots of useful and ornamental articles to coax the pennies from their pockets. Everybody should encourage the young folks in deeds of charity.

Way out in the far west, at Fargo, North Dakota, they are of course still behind the age and not up to the progressiveness of us of the east. Consequently, they are still electing Republican office holders, and no doubt still cheering for Blaine. We should feel more sorry for our friends in Fargo, however, if they had not elected for a second term that faithful Republican City Treasurer, Mr. A. T. Shotwell, who is a credit to the city where he resides and to Plainfield that bred him.

The Kitchen-Garden entertainment at Music Hall, Tuesday evening, drew forth a big attendance and proved a most interesting and novel affair of great credit to the ladies in charge. The little ones who took part were under the direction of Miss Tomlinson, Mrs. Bennett, Miss Butler, Miss Smillie, Miss Yates, Miss McGee and others. They (the little ones) clad in white aprons and caps, marched and sang while they set the table, washed dishes, hung up clothes, swept, made beds and went through other household duties.

The substitute for the original bill introduced in the House of Assembly concerning fire departments in cities, which substitute we published in full recently, has been reported by the Committee on Municipal Corporations. It is known as "Assembly No. 380," and is to repeal the charter of our present department and throw the control of another and the disposition of its funds into the hands of the Common Council. Watch it.

Mr. Rockfellow has ordered two gallons of cream to be delivered daily, and will provide chairs, tables, cups and every other facility for the purpose intended and the convenience of those who attend.

To the Satisfaction of "Nine-Tenths."

By the unanimous consent of the nine Councilmen present at the Monday evening meeting, the Plainfield Electric Light Co., is to receive the contract for lighting the streets and avenues of the city by electricity. As both Mr. Bowers and Mr. Goddard of the committee represented, this action is in accordance with the wishes of nine-tenths of the people, and the Council has for once met the community's desires and they are theirs. We devote much space in our account of the proceedings to a full publication of the specifications under which the bid was made and accepted, the proposition of the company, and the resolutions of the Council granting the contract.

Amateur Private Theatricals.

Arrangements are being perfected that may result in the production by a number of the talented amateurs of this city, of a theatrical programme that apart from its local interest will be undoubtedly a success artistically. The affair will probably be given in Music Hall and for the benefit of the Church of the Heavenly Rest at Evona. Among those who take part will be the charming ladies who appeared in the play of "Kerry" at the residence of one of their number, a few months ago, assisted by other talented amateurs including—we are told—an Elizabeth gentleman of the most charming presence and wonderful ability. Further particulars will be awaited with interest by Plainfield society in general.

A Narrow Escape.

A young lady of this city, residing in Denver, Col., since her marriage, is the possessor of a fine boy from whose finger she recently missed a ring that had just been presented it. With a wonderful control of her fears, and a presence of mind that is usually absent in her sex, she immediately telephoned for her husband, her doctor and all the intimate friends she could remember in the hour of danger. After she had shaken the baby in all positions excepting an upright one, and thrown it all around the room, the doctor arrived and administered every emetic known to his profession. The friends and relatives had assembled to await death or some other result, when the suffering mother went out into the hall to hide her grief and found the ring on the floor.

A Young Forger Caught.

Mr. Sering F. Craig of this city, recently sent a New York firm, of which he is the traveling representative, a certificate of deposit on a Plainfield bank. This certificate, however, was stolen from the firm's mail by an ex-employee, who some way had secured access to the post office box, and the young thief added forgery to his first crime by endorsing the draft and obtaining its value on presentation at the bank here. But his enjoyment of the proceeds was shortened by the vigilance of Captain Dodd and the sentence of Justice Nash who railroaded the lad to the County jail to await the action of the Grand Jury.

The Dunellen Borough Commission.

The Borough Commissioners of Dunellen met Tuesday evening and elected the following officers: President, John W. Handren; Secretary, Dr. P. W. Brakeley; Treasurer, Christian Schepflin; Counselor, H. Handren is a member of the firm of Handren & Robbins, of 126 Washington street, New York, extensive ship builders. Mr. Schepflin is head of the celebrated clothing manufacturing establishment of Plainfield, owned by Schepflin, Baldwin, Tweedy & Co. P. W. Brakeley is a prominent druggist and physician in Dunellen. Robert Lowrie is a real estate broker and John Runyon is an undertaker.

A Clergyman's Rational Views.

From the pulpit of one of the city's largest churches last Sunday, one of Plainfield's most prominent clergymen expressed his belief in the fact that high license was the best protection in the matter of liquor selling. Knowing, as be did, that such a view, publicly expressed from a pulpit, would not suit many, yet he had the courage of his convictions to support the stand he took. Prohibition does not prohibit, and as high license will best restrict the sale and insure the right conduct of the business, there is not a man or woman free from bias and fanaticism that will not agree with this preacher. He also touched on the question of endorsing license as a means of collecting a public revenue and the consequent reduction of individual tax. He said that a man who voted for license for the purpose of lessening his tax bill and saving his pocket, was in the same position as the liquor seller that thereby secured a revenue for himself. He held that a citizen who voted in favor of license as a means of protecting and restricting the sale, was right, but he who so voted for the purpose of reducing the taxes was wrong.

The New Fire Commissioners.

The election for two members of the Board of Managers of the Fire Department, held during the afternoon of Monday last, resulted in the choice of Mr. William H. Brower to succeed himself and Mr. William K. McClure to fill the vacancy caused by the expiration of the term of Commissioner Morris. There was in reality no opposition, but the persistent efforts of a few to obtain votes for a popular young gentlemen of this city who explicitly declined to run and who begged people to refrain for voting for him, caused a little excitement and varied the monotony that is usual upon such occasion without effecting the result. Mr. Brower has already evidenced his fitness for the position, and Mr. McClure will prove to be one of the most righteously irrepressible officers that any corporation was ever served by. The ticket voted was as follows:

FOR FIRE COMMISSIONERS,
WM. H. BROWER,
WM. K. McCLURE.
FOR ASSESSOR,
JOSEPH A. HUBBARD.
FOR FIRE PURPOSES,
$7,000.

The Treasurer to receive 2½ per cent on the amount of taxes he collects.

The Assessor to receive $125 in lieu of fees.

Secretary to receive $50 annually for services.

Reform Club.

At a regular meeting of the Reform Club held Thursday evening, 8th inst., President French in the chair, the resignation of James Q. Miles as Recording Secretary was presented and accepted, and George W. F. Randolph elected to fill the vacancy. After the transaction of routine business, Judge Harper submitted as follows:

Whereas, It having pleased Almighty God in His inscrutable wisdom to remove from life one who devoted time, talents and influence to the organization, growth and prosperity of this Club, and for the triumph of those grand principles of Truth and Right it represents, and who, through genial intercourse linked himself to fellow members by the silken cords of personal friendship; and whereas, to perpetuate remembrance of the worth of such a valued friend and faithful colaborer is a duty incumbent upon us, therefore be it

Resolved, That sincerely mourning the death of William Bliss Maxson, we gratefully remember and hereby make record of the efficient services he rendered the cause of Temperance Reform—the righteous cause of Heaven, Humanity and Home—and of the ever pleasant companionship we were privileged to enjoy with him, and whilst sorrowing for his departure from our midst, we reverently implore that strength and ability may be given us to carry onward to success the noble work he so dearly loved and earnestly espoused.

Resolved, That the foregoing preamble and resolution be entered at length upon the minutes of the Club, and that a copy thereof, signed by its officers, be transmitted as a heartfelt memorial to the bereaved family of our deceased associate and friend.

Which, on being seconded by Rev. Mr. Cleaver in a few eloquent and feeling remarks, were adopted by a rising vote of the Club.

RESOLUTIONS OF COMMITTEE.

1st—Resolved, That the Corporation Counsel be requested to draw a contract and bond conforming to the specifications and in accordance with the bid, and that the Mayor be authorized to execute the same.

2d—Resolved, That when contract has been executed and bond has been filed, That the Plainfield Electric Light Co., be granted permission to erect poles, and string wires thereon, for electric lighting as may be necessary to fulfil the contract.

3d—Resolved, That the City reserve to itself the right to attach two wires for City purposes other than electric lighting, to any and all poles that may be erected under this contract.

4th—Resolved, That the erection of poles, and the placing of lights, be under the supervision of the Committee of Fire, Water and Lamps.

Moved by Mr. Marsh, seconded by Mr. Cox, resolutions tabled.

On motion of Mr. Marsh the Council resolved itself into a Committee of the whole, to consider the matter of electric lighting and tax ordinance. Carried.

Mr. Voorhees was chosen as Chairman.

Mr. Bowers of the Lamps Com. stated that nothing definite had been decided as to the location of the electric lights, but such would be left to the discretion of the Committee under whose direction the poles were erected.

Mr. Goddard, of the same Committee, stated that the electric lights would take the place of all the gas lights in the city and some of the oil lamps. Also that the present cost of the gas lamps was $2,800, and to burn all night would cost $3,278 88. That the cost of the electric lights all night would be $4,200, with an average of forty eight hours without extra cost per month for the year.

Mr. Bowers stated his belief that the fifty electric lights would fully and satisfactorily replace the present gas lights. That 50 electric lights would do the service of 250 gas lights, and only 132 was now in use by the city.

Mr. Dumont spoke against the adoption of the electric light, expressing his conviction that it could not as effectively light the city as at present accomplished by gas.

Mr. Bowers said that when necessary, the city had the privilege of using the incandescent instead of the arc light where dense shade might interfere with the power of the latter.

Mr. Goddard favored the adoption of the resolution and the putting in of electric lights, because he was called upon to act as the majority of the community desired, and he believed that nine tenths of the people wanted to try electric lighting in the city.

Mr. Marsh, seconded by Mr. Goddard, that when the Committee of the Whole rise, it report to the Council its recommendation of the adoption of the resolutions with the amendments that the bid on Plan No. 1 be the bid accepted, and providing the erection of the poles at the points designated, can be legally done.

Mr. Dumont, seconded by Mr. Beguelin, amended to the effect that the Committee report to the Council where the lamps are to be located.

All amendments accepted, and resolution adopted—all aye.

Mr. Dumont presented the budget of appropriations for the year aggregating $22,960, which, with a deduction of the license fees of $5,200, would make a total to be raised of $17,760.

Mr. Marsh moved that the sum to be raised be $20,000, provided the electric light is adopted, and that the chairman of the committee so report to the council. So ordered.

Mr. Dumont proposed that $3,500 be raised for the support of the poor. The committee adopted the proposition.

Mr. Dumont also reported on the library tax, stating that under the law a larger sum could be raised, such as the request of the directors might determine, within a certain limit. The directors had asked for $2,100, and he proposed that amount.

Mr. Beguelin said he thought it was unfortunate at this time that the library tax should be increased in the sum of $1,200.

Mr. Marsh said that the law was an unfortunate one in his opinion, as it left no option to the council but to adopt the sum asked for by the directors. He thought the directors should file with the clerk legal evidence that the directors had in their possession the amount of property required under the law, which was ordered done.

THE COMMITTEE RISES.

The committee arose and Mr. Voorhees reported the action taken by the committee of the whole.

Mr. Marsh made a motion that the resolutions to adopt the electric light be adopted. All the members made brief remarks, those not fully persuaded of the practicability of the plan yielding to the apparent wishes of the people and voting for the measure. The measure was carried by a unanimous vote.

Mr. Marsh moved that the proper notice be given to the gas company of the change in the service. So ordered.

On motion of Mr. Marsh the certified check of $100 from the other electric light company making a bid was ordered returned.

The action of the committee on the whole on the library tax was taken up and laid on the table for the present.

Mr. Bowers, from the lamp committee, made a motion that the telephone company be requested to allow the electric wires for lighting to be strung on their poles as the committee may determine. So ordered.

Mr. Bowers, from same committee, proposed the removing of gasoline lamps as may be made necessary by the electric light, which was authorized.

Mr. Bowers, from the same committee, offered a resolution that the committee should be authorized to locate a few incandescent lamps, if found necessary, at an expense of not exceeding $300. Adopted.

The committee on fire, water and lamps reported favorably on Dr. Endicott's petition for the right to build a frame addition to his barn. Adopted.

The lamp committee reported correct the bills for lights in their hands. Referred.

Mr. Cox, from committee on laws and ordinances reported back the treasurer's bond for correction.

Mr. Cox recommended that Mr. Mahaffe's claim be returned to him. Adopted.

Mr. Cox reported the claim of Alice Runyon to be correct and it was ordered paid.

Mr. Dunham, from license committee, reported favorably on hack, cart, peddler's and scavenger's licenses in his hands. They were granted.

Mr. Goddard, from printing committee, reported correct above bill of W. L. Force & Bro. Referred.

Mr. Marsh, from salary committee, recommended the salary for city treasurer the sum of $350. Adopted.

Mr. Marsh, from the same committee, reported correct above salary bills. Referred.

Mr. Voorhees, from the street committee, reported correct the above bill of G. M. Angleman. Referred.

Mr. Voorhees offered a resolution that the street committee be directed to repair Front-st. from Peace-st. to Central ave., and Park-ave. from Front-st to 9th-st. Adopted.

The rules were suspended to allow the alms committee to report correct certain bills in its hands. Referred to the auditing committee.

Mr. Dumont introduced the usual ordinance to levy the annual tax. The sums of $20,000 for general purposes, $3,500 for poor and $2,100 for library were agreed upon. The ordinance was read twice, adopted and ordered engrossed and duly advertised.

Mr. Marsh moved that it be advertised in the three papers of the city of Plainfield.

Some question arose as to what were the official papers, but Mr. Marsh's motion prevailed.

Mr. Bowers introduced an ordinance amending the poor ordinance so as to give the overseer of the poor and alms committee more liberty in ordering provisions and supplies. It was ordered to its second reading and adopted, and was ordered engrossed and duly advertised.

Mr. Cox called from the table his resolution to adopt the rules of order as by-laws. The resolution was adopted.

Mr. Simpson, from auditing committee, reported correct the bills referred to the committee during the evening. The bills were ordered paid.

The council adjourned at 11:15 p. m.

Middlesex Gun Club.

For the benefit of those members of the above club, who cannot attend afternoon shoots at two o'clock, shooting will commence at ten o'clock a. m. sharp, on Saturday next, giving all members an opportunity to prepare for team shoot next week.

A high board fence will soon surround the shooting grounds of the Club at Dunellen.

North Plainfield Borough Meeting.

The Mayor and Council of the Borough of North Plainfield met in special meeting, Friday evening of last week. All were present with the exception of Councilman Weaver. The meeting was called for the purpose of adopting an ordinance relating to the office and duties of Street Commission, and the same was so adopted after some amendments. An opinion from the Corporation Counsel was received and read quoting the act of March 25th, 1885, and showing that the Boards of Health of cities, townships and boroughs had entire control of the privilege of locating or enlarging cemeteries within their jurisdiction. The Council then adjourned for one week.

Greatly to Their Credit.

As we experience the comfort, safety and convenience of our city illuminated from sunset to sunrise by electricity, and feel a just pride over the admiration and envy of others less favored, we should remember to give the credit of it all to those who have so faithfully and perseveringly labored for the result. To our Mayor, who from the beginning of his term has used every endeavor to bring about this better method of street lighting, much of the praise and thanks of the community is due. With a loyal desire to serve the people and accomplish for the city that which will be of the greatest benefit, he has urged the adoption of the advanced method of outdoor illumination of our streets and its continuance during the entire night. His efforts have resulted in what we are convinced will prove of greater advantage to Plainfield than any improvement the city has ever experienced.

To Mr. Charles Wann of North Plainfield the result is a deserved reward for his past ten months of patient and courageous labor against unjust prejudice, the power of competition and the impossibility of exhibiting the perfection of the service he proposed with the means attainable. Mr. Wann has made it possible for Plainfield to be better lighted and at less cost than any city in the State. For all of which make us truly thankful.

The clergy, you may have noticed, are much more forcibly reminded of the "uncertainty of life" when a millionaire dies suddenly than when a poor man drops dead.

Political economy has pointed out the loss it entails; science has recorded its verdict against it; morality and religion have branded it as that which undermines the virtue and saps the very life out of the nation. And yet it has pursued its way a very little disturbed or obstructed in its course, carrying in its deadly embrace men and women of all ranks of society. It outwits alike the teacher, the man of business, the patriot and legislator. Every other institution flounders in hopeless difficulty; this holds its triumphant course.

MISCELLANEOUS READING.

THE VILLAGE DRESS-MAKER.

The arrival of the new minister in Locust Hollow, as the pretty village was called, was regarded as quite an event by the congregation. A new minister is always an object of interest to the people for a month or two; then the interest flags, and finally he is accepted as a matter of course, and—generally to his delight—is no longer fussed over.

But this particular divine seemed likely to keep speculation going for a longer period than the customary nine days, and, being a somewhat humorous fellow, he thoroughly enjoyed it.

For the Rev. Jerome Grant was unmarried—warranted by the gossips to have no lady-love—young, handsome, and possessed of a private income, which made salary a secondary consideration.

Now, in Locust Hollow there were a number of very plump and pretty girls, with a few slim graceful damsels; but the plump ones outnumbered the slim, as always is the case in country villages, with their fresh air, healthy diet, and regular hours.

Among the very plumpest of the village maidens was Gussie Elliston; and Miss Gussie's blue eyes and red-and-white complexion seemed to have found favor in the eyes of Mr. Grant, for he speedily placed himself on familiar footing at the long low farmhouse, where he met with very warm greetings from the farmer and his wife, and dimpling smiles and shy blushes from their daughter.

Among the very slenderest and palest of those who listened to the young minister Sunday after Sunday, was Louise, the daughter of a helpless widow, who had lived a little out of the village, and who had therefore escaped the knowledge of Jerome for some time.

Perhaps Louise's cheeks would have had more color in them, and her eyes less of that wistful tenderness, did not the burden of her own invalid mother's support fall on her slight shoulders.

But day after day—on cold dark days, when winds swept wierdly by the little cottage—on warm wooing days, when her pulses throbbed with longing to be out among the violets—she sat quietly at the little window, her brown head bent over the sewing in her hands, the garments to be worn by more fortunate ones than herself, which she fashioned.

Jerome had noticed the girl's sweet patient face, and wondered why he only saw it on Sunday—wondered how it was he had never seen it in the many homes that had been opened for him to enter at, a welcome guest.

But Gussie's blue eyes had been enough like violets to make him speedily forget the wistful brown ones, and it was not until he had been installed at Locust Hollow for three months, and had begun to think that Gussie Elliston would make a very sweet minister's wife, that accident brought him to the door of the cottage which the widow Vennevale and her daughter occupied.

It was warm; the young man was warm, too, and tired, from a long ramble; he was thirsty, as well; and so, after hesitating a few moments, knocked lightly on the open door, intending to ask for a glass of water.

His knock had not been heard evidently, for nobody replied to it; and while he waited, a low murmuring voice reached him from within.

"I did my best, mother," girlish tones answered wearily, "and I thought it very nice. I often wonder how people can say such harsh and cruel words to me, when I try so hard to please them. Mother—my poor mother—it is very hard to be poor; to be a woman, and poor—there is nothing harder in this whole wide world!"

The sweet voice had taken more than weariness on its music. It became passionate and bitter, and ended in a burst of sobs.

The young man was profoundly touched, but he lifted his hand once more, and knocked more loudly.

This time he was heard, and a light but languid step crossed toward the door.

In a moment Louise Vennevale, with undried tears on her long lashes, was looking at him with wondering eyes, brown as hazel-nuts.

He held out his shapely hand.

"You are one of my people, are you not?" he questioned, with a smile. "I have not called before, but you will pardon that, and bid me enter now, will you not?"

"Certainly."

And she led him into the tiny room, where Mrs. Vennevale lay on a sofa.

"Mamma," she said, quietly, "this is Mr. Grant. He has come to see you."

And greatly to the young man's disappointment, after placing a chair for him beside the sofa, she glided out, slight and graceful as a spirit.

He remained almost an hour conversing with the invalid. He heard the pitiful story—too sadly frequent for men to mind it much to-day, in their busy selfish lives; the struggle to buy a little home for wife and child by the stalwart farmer, who had only his strong hands and strong heart to rely on; then the long lingering illness of the woman, during which the first mortgage had fallen on the farm; then the sudden death, by sunstroke, of the man, and the helpless widow's efforts to educate her only child, before allowing her to take up the weary burden that now she had borne for four years with gentlest patience.

"It breaks my heart to see her work at her sewing from morning till night, and often half the night," Mrs. Vennevale said, in conclusion, her eyes dim with tears. "And sometimes she has to take insolence, too. That is very hard to bear. To-day Miss Gussie Elliston came for a dress she had left for Louise to make, and she found so much fault, and said such cruelly unkind things, that my heart ached for my daughter. Did you notice Louise had been weeping when you came in?"

"I noticed that she looked very pale and weary," he answered, wondering if he had mistaken the character of Miss Gussie so completely, when he thought she would be so sweet a minister's wife, so truly a helpmeet to one who had chosen that most arduous of all positions—to be the spiritual adviser of a village full of people.

It was with a pang at his heart that he began to think the blue eyes and fair face of the girl who had smiled so shyly at his coming might but be a mask for a selfish heart.

"There is a picnic in the birch-grove on Monday," Mrs. Vennevale went on, "and it was for that Miss Gussie wanted this particular dress. My poor child cannot go, or rather, she will not, for she never leaves me, urge her as I may. She was just saying how hard it is to be a woman and poor, when you came, Mr. Grant."

Yes, he had heard her say the words, but did not say so. Instead, he stood up and took the weak hand of the woman.

"I do not think I will join the merry-makers on Monday, either," he said pleasantly. "My dear madam, you and I have been strangers too long. Let me come here on Monday and become better acquainted with you."

So when Gussie Elliston, arrayed in the pretty dainty muslin, which was really very well made and well-fitting, and set off her blue eyes and fair complexion to advantage—was watching for one face vainly in the grove of birch, that masculine face was turned towards a window in the little cottage of the Vennevales, at which a girl sat sewing with bent brown head and eyes alight.

Gussie met him next after the morning service on the following Sunday.

She chided him playfully for his absence from the picnic, but he only smiled, and, after a few words, passed on and joined Louise Vennevale, leaving her at the cottage gate.

It was only three months later that a pretty Gothic dwelling shot up rapidly beside the church.

And when it was completed, Jerome Grant took his bride and her mother to it one golden day in late autumn, and Louise Vennevale, the slighted dress-maker, was the bride.

Strange to say, Gussie was one of the first to call on her, as she whispered to her intimates, "out of pure curiosity."

Of course, as the minister's wife, Louise had to be civil to her, laying aside the past.

Delicious Food, Healthfulness and Economy.

CLEVELAND'S
SUPERIOR
BAKING POWDER

Manufactured by Cleveland Brothers, Albany, N. Y., is the PUREST, STRONGEST, MOST HEALTHFUL, and will always be found THE MOST RELIABLE AND MOST ECONOMICAL preparation ever produced for making most delicious, light, white, sweet and healthful biscuits, cakes, pastry, puddings, &c., and has met with unprecedented success wherever introduced during the past fifteen years.

The public have a right to know what they are using as food. Anything that so vitally affects the health of the family as the daily bread we eat should be free from any suspicion of taint, and housekeepers should demand that manufacturers plainly state all the ingredients of compounds that are used in the preparation of our daily diet. Do not use baking powders whose manufacturers wholly or partly withhold from the public a knowledge of the ingredients from which they are made. CLEVELAND'S SUPERIOR BAKING POWDER is made only of purest Grape Cream of Tartar, Bicarbonate of Soda, and a little wheat flour, the latter to preserve the strength of the powder. Nothing else whatever is used in its manufacture.

NEW YORK, July 11, 1884.

In analyzing samples of baking powder purchased by myself of a number of grocers in New York City, I find that CLEVELAND'S SUPERIOR BAKING POWDER contains only pure Grape Cream of Tartar, Bicarbonate of Soda, and a small portion of flour.

An Efficient Remedy

In all cases of Bronchial and Pulmonary Affections is AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL. As such it is recognized and prescribed by the medical profession, and in many thousands of families, for the past forty years, it has been regarded as an invaluable household remedy. It is a preparation that only requires to be taken in very small quantities, and a few doses of it administered in the early stages of a cold or cough will effect a speedy cure, and may, very possibly, save life. There is no doubt whatever that

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral

Has preserved the lives of great numbers of persons, by arresting the development of Laryngitis, Bronchitis, Pneumonia, and Pulmonary Consumption, and by the cure of those dangerous maladies. It should be kept ready for use in every family where there are children, as it is a medicine far superior to all others in the treatment of Croup, the alleviation of Whooping Cough, and the cure of Colds and Influenza, ailments peculiarly incidental to childhood and youth. Promptitude in dealing with all diseases of this class is of the utmost importance. The loss of a single day may, in many cases, entail fatal consequences. Do not waste precious time in experimenting with medicines of doubtful efficacy, while the malady is constantly gaining a deeper hold, but take at once the speediest and most certain to cure,

KEEP OUT OF DEBT.

A man in debt
No rest will get
Until he's in the tomb,
His cares will weigh
So heavy though
Will shroud his life with gloom.

He'll practice guile;
And never smile;
His head with pain will ache;
He'll grieve and sigh
And want to die
And thus his troubles slake.

But owing none
He'll have more fun
Than any king that reigns;
He'll feel benign;
His health is fine
And he long life attains.

Without a doubt,
All can keep out
Of debt if only they
Will never buy
To please the eye
And cash down always pay.

REMEMBER, BOYS MAKE MEN.

When you see a ragged urchin
Standing wistful in the street,
With torn hat and kneeless trousers
Dirty face and bare red feet,
Pass not by the child unheeding;
Smile upon him. Mark me, when
He's grown he'll not forget it;
For remember, boys make men.

When the buoyant youthful spirits
Overflow in boyish freak,
Chide your child in gentle accents,
Do not in your anger speak.
You must sow in youthful bosoms
Seeds of tender mercies; then
Plants will grow and bear good fruitage
When the erring boys are men.

Have you never seen a grandsire
With his eyes aglow with joy,
Bring to mind some act of kindness—
Something said to him a boy?
Or relate some slight or coldness,
With a brow all clouded, when
He said they were too thoughtless
To remember boys make men.

Let us try to add some pleasures
To the life of every boy;
For each child needs tender interest
In its sorrows and its joys;
Call your boys home by its brightness;
They'd avoid a gloomy den,
And seek for comfort elsewhere—
And remember, boys make men.

MISCELLANEOUS READING.

IN THE SMUGGLER'S CAVE.

BY MARIA HOWARD.

South of Monterey lies a bleak and dreary road across the mountains. This road used to be a dangerous one, infested by smugglers, robbers, and wolves. Even the police refused to explore that region, and the road was left clear for marauders.

Many years ago a young Mexican, Jose Quederos, and his cousin Federigo Menillo, were traveling this road on horseback. They were gay, brave young men, anxious to play with edged tools. Gradually they came into a very lonely and desolate region, where the mountains rose high and bleak on each side of them. As the evening stole on, they became silent, watched the sun set with a tremor at their hearts, and settled themselves with their pistols in their hands.

The night closed in upon them fast, and a white mist rose from the valley.

The could no longer see the road.

All at once their horses were stopped by a group of rough men who demanded their money. One of the robbers snatched the pistol from Menillo's hand and stabbed him with a dagger. Quederos was so occupied in warding off the attack, that he did not observe the fate of his cousin. The bandits were struggling to bind his arms, when suddenly a girl appeared at the corner of the road with a flaming lamp, which she held high above her head.

"Manuelo! Pope!" cried the girl in an authoritative voice, "do no more! It is the order of Don Pablo! It is the night of the annunciation, and all life is to be spared."

But one of the robbers pointed silently to the body of young Menillo stretched upon the ground.

"He has perhaps only fainted from loss of blood," responded the girl. "Carry him to the tent, and I will look after his wounds."

Two of the robbers marched Quederos between them, two carried Menillo's body, and the rest followed with the horses.

The girl led the way for a mile or two, and the whole band halted between the mountain side and a huge bowlder. The girl knocked thrice, with a pause after each knock, the stone of the mountain seemed to swing back, and a path was descending into the earth. They entered and came into a low, wide room hollowed out in the rock. The men crowded about a large fire in the centre, and began to talk in a dialect unknown to Quederos.

Menillo was laid on a bundle of hay, and the girl began chafing his hands with the contents of a beautifully wrought bottle. In obedience to her gesture two men advanced and opening his shirt found a long, uneven wound under the left breast.

"That is the hunchback's mark. There is no chance for his life, Senora, for the knife is poisoned," the men cried.

She, however, patiently bathed the wound and stopped the blood. Quederos assisted her. At last the girl said in a low voice:

"He is dying."

"He is dead!" returned Quederos.

It was too true. Menillo was beyond human help.

In his anxiety Quederos had forgotten that he himself had been wounded, but now he fell to the ground almost fainting. In an instant the two men bore him into another room, cooler and handsomely furnished as a bedroom. Here they removed his clothing, skillfully dressed his wound and left him sleeping.

When he awoke a handsome old man sat before his head reading a pile of letters. On the bed lay the papers and purse of Quederos. In an instant the old man had clutched the papers and property and risen to his feet.

"Ah, my young friend," he exclaimed, "you are decidedly improving. I will leave you with Manuela; and these," waving the papers and purse, "I shall keep for you till you are strong enough to need them."

His wounds were freshly dressed, and when he was once more comfortable in his bed, he said to Manuela:

"What is Don Pablo doing with those papers and my purse?"

"I cannot hope that you will ever get them again," returned Manuela coolly, "If he fails in getting the ransom demanded for you, you will never need them any more."

"Who is Don Pablo?" asked Quederos, feebly.

"He is known as the famous robber 'El Diablo,'" the girl answered sadly.

Quederos started up, and fell back again with a groan as his wounds opened afresh. Manuela quietly bound them up again without calling for aid. After a long silence he said:

"Senorita, do you like the life you lead here?"

"Like it?" cried Manuela, with horror in her face—Santa Virgin! I loathe it! But what can I do? I can go nowhere without being tracked, and who would help El Diablo's daughter, and hide her from the knife of the Hun hback?"

"I would," said Quederos solemnly. "My people are powerful and rich; they will not leave me here long for want of a large ransom."

Manuela's face wore a terrified look as Quederos said those words. By a gesture she gave him to understand that there were listeners all around. From that time, during more than a month that Quederos lay ill in his bed, he was hardly heard to utter a word.

Manuela was tall and slight, with fine features and most beautiful soft eyes. Her dress was flowing and her magnificent hair hung down her back almost to her feet, under a small silk cap ornamented with gold coins. Her hands were small and peculiarly pretty and her feet were shod in soft white satin slippers.

At last a lull seemed to fall on the company. Only two or three of the men appeared, Manuela came oftener to see him and stayed longer. Quederos asked the reason of the dead silence in the cave. She informed him in a whisper that the whole party had gone to meet a troop of travelers, laden with precious things, and that meanwhile her father was negotiating Quederos' friends for his ransom.

During the few days the lovers (for such they had become) had an interval of quiet happiness, but one awful day the chief returned. Instantly she left Quederos' side and went to the outer room to receive her father.

His face was stern and his voice was harsh as he gave orders to the servants. He kissed Manuela in an absent way; his thoughts were evidently far away. Left alone, he began to mutter aloud to himself:

"Things are going terribly against us. The whole band is lost unless help can reach them soon. Then that precious prisoner of ours is being searched for, and his people, instead of paying his ransom, have set half the country after us. If anything happens his life shall pay for it, ransom or no ransom."

A slight movement of the curtain disturbed Don Pabo. He strode across the room, lifted the curtain and looked around.

"Manuela!" he cried, "where in the name of the foul fiend are you?"

"Preparing your supper, my padre," answered a distant voice, and presently Manuela appeared, bringing the meal.

He seized her by the wrists and scanned her face fiercely by the firelight. She was a trifle pale, but her clear, bright eyes returned his look unflinchingly. She served her father, removed the dishes, and seemed absorbed in his welfare. But her mind was in a whirl. Something must be done and that soon. She had overheard enough to know that the band was in great danger, mainly through the active exertions of Quederos' family. But her father was especially watchful of her movements that evening; and it was not until she heard his snores that she was able to say a word to her lover. He rose and dressed, as she bade him, though trembling from weakness in every limb. When he was ready she tied a colored handkerchief round his head, placed a bundle of cloth over his shoulder, and opening a door, of which she had till then been ignorant, led him along a dark pathway. Then they emerged into a curved passage, lighted at intervals with torches. Sometimes they thought they heard voices, and Manuela would gently push Quederos into a recess. But no one disturbed them, and after a long journey they came to the mouth of the cave.

Manuela let her lover out and bade him a tender farewell.

"But surely you are coming with me!" he cried. "I had rather die than leave you to meet your father's anger alone."

"No, no," she said. "The only thing you can do to help me is to come back with a great band of armed men. By that time I shall have placed my father in safety, and shall be ready to go with you. But do not betray my father," she added quickly. "Say only that I am in bondage in a cave."

Then with a kiss and an assurance that he would soon return for her, they parted; Quederos was on his journey home.

Don Pablo, meanwhile, had waked from his sleep, and sought his guest's room. But the bird had flown. Mad with rage, he turned to his daughter's room, and stumbled over the two servants snoring on the floor. Manuela was not to be found.

"Fools! blind pigs!" he cried to the servants as they stood trembling before him, "do you not see that both the prisoner and my daughter have made their escape while you have been sleeping?" Then, having beaten them, he tied them by their wrists to two rings in the wall, from which their feet could hardly touch the ground, and then disappeared in the darkness. In the curved passage Don Pablo suddenly confronted Manuela coming toward him.

"Where is Quederos?" he said, sternly.

"Gone to his home," Manuela said quietly.

"Traitress that thou art," said Don Pablo. "Take what thou deservest!" and he gave her a blow in the face that felled her to the ground. In a moment more his knife glittered in the torchlight and he stabbed Manuela mortally.

By a superhuman effort she gasped: "Save thyself and thine—he promised to give thee two days to escape—I have not betrayed thee"—and with a groan she fell back dead.

For a long time Don Pablo stood as though paralyzed with horror. But there was no time to be lost. He stretched and composed Manuela's limbs, took off the gold coins hanging in her hair and all the jewels on her person. Then he hurried away.

"Dogs!" he said, as he cut down the slaves, "remove the treasures quickly; the hell-hounds are upon us."

In a few hours the little company had escaped, leaving a withered branch marked with a cross and a dagger across the mouth of the cave.

The cave was empty, and only torches in the curved passage flared down upon the mutilated face of Manuela.

Fired with rage and hatred, Quederos and his troops captured the robbers and smugglers. They were taken to the City of Mexico and tried and sentenced.

Amidst the peaks of the Sierra Madre, not far from Monterey, stands a small black cross bearing the name of Manuela. When they found her in the passage of the cave, Quederos and his men buried her tenderly among the mountains she loved so well; and only the little cross marks the spot where lie the mortal remains of the smuggler's daughter.

OPHELIA'S VALENTINE.

It was a dreary night, dark, cloudy and windy. Bertha Westervelt sat beside the window looking out upon the passers-by, envying them their erect carriage and strength as they passed along. Then, with a piteous sigh, she cast her eyes downward upon her own frail form.

At that moment the door opened and a lady swept into the apartment. To very near where Bertha sat, the lady drew a chair and dropped into it.

"How very melancholy you look in this dim twilight," she said softly.

"Do I?" questioned Bertha, absently.

"Yes, indeed. I do wish you would be more cheerful, for I am sure it must be very depressing to Godfrey. I know he feels it, he wears such a sombre air when he leaves you. It is very unfortunate for him that you should become an invalid so soon after marriage!"

"Very," responded Bertha, tremulously. "Surely I will get my strength soon now?"

For a moment, in profound silence, the lady regarded Bertha.

"Do you believe so, Bertha Westervelt? Why, I thought you knew better."

"I—what do you mean, aunt?" she queried, piteously. Her heart seemed to stand still; what new horror was to descend upon her now?

"Why, I am sure Godfrey knows it, and I thought, of course, you did. You have always been delicate, and now the physician thinks that you are troubled with hip disease. There is no permanent cure for that complaint; you go from bad to worse, as it is vulgarly expressed. Poor Godfrey!"

Bertha threw up her thin, white hands, as if to ward off a blow; but she uttered no word, gave vent to no cry.

Uncomfortable, from the death-like silence that her speech had produced, the lady, after fidgeting a moment, arose and left the room.

At that moment Bertha's eyes fell upon her husband walking briskly up the street, his cousin Ophelia Brent, beside him. She was a radiant brunette, sparkling and vivacious in manner, though there was something in the expression of her greenish-hued eyes and around her mouth that made Bertha instinctively distrust her.

"She is the one he loved before he met me," she groaned, "and whom he would have married. And now I am cripple—perhaps, for life. God help me!"

Her head dropped upon her hands; her cup of grief was full to overflowing.

"I have just left Bertha asleep," said Mrs. Brent, in a low tone, to Godfrey. "I think you had better not disturb her."

Godfrey opened the door softly and peered in. The room was so dark that he could only see the outline of his wife in her chair by the window; as she did not speak he, concluded she must still be sleeping, and so closed the door softly.

"I am in a hurry to return to my office," he observed, "so we'll have dinner now. Explain to Bertha when she wakes why I did not wait for her."

He ate a few mouthfuls in silence and then left the house. His wife heard the door close behind him and watched him hurry up the street.

"No wonder he avoids me!" she thought bitterly. "What am I to do?"

The next morning dawned clear and bright. It was Valentine's Day, and the postmen were darting hither and thither with their precious missives.

Ophelia and her mother sat in the room with Bertha, toying with some worsted work. The very sight of the two women made her nervous and wretched, but they told Godfrey how much care they took of his dear wife and kept her from thinking of her illness, so they were welcome guests.

"Miss Ophelia Brent," the postman said at the door, and the maid brought the missive in.

"A valentine for me!" Ophelia explained with delight. "See, Bertha, what it is not to be married!"

She tore the envelope open, read the contents; then, with a profound sigh, she placed it in her pocket. Bertha thought no more of the little scene, until a few hours later she saw Ophelia's little pug playing with it under a chair. She went over to rescue it from him. In taking it from his mouth she recognized her husband's well-known chirography. She looked at the envelope a moment; a great desire took possession of her to know the contents.

"It surely cannot be wrong," she whispered to herself, and flushing with conscious shame, she pulled the neatly folded sheet out.

"My lost darling," she read; "lost by my own mad folly. I cannot restrain the desire to take advantage of faithful Valentine's Day, to tell me how dear you are to me still, and how much happiness your simple presence gives me in my miserable home." The flush died out of the wronged wife's cheek, and was succeeded by an unnatural pallor, as she continued: "I have to keep my passion concealed for fear of its discovery by her who holds your rightful place, or else the tattling servants."

She read no more. She crushed it in her hand, and then hid it in her pocket, as if it was a serpent that had stung her, as if it were a serpent of the deadliest kind!

"Oh, my God," she groaned, in her anguish, "it is only too true what his aunt told me! I am only a blot on his life." She hobbled into the adjoining room, where a five-months-old infant slept in a crib. She fell on her knees, hid her pallid face in the coverlid, and wept such bitter tears that grief can only wring from the eyes but seldom during life.

"O, my poor little Blossom, if it was not for you I would not live another night!" she wailed; "O, we will not endure it longer; we will go out of his life as completely as if he had never been!" She rose, went into her own chamber gathered up her jewelry, hid it in her bosom, and filled her purse with money. Godfrey had always been liberal, and for the last few months she had bought nothing. "There must be a place somewhere in the world for us, baby," she thought.

About dusk she called the nurse.

"Bring the baby into my room, and tell them not to wait dinner for me."

The nurse obeyed. "The mistress is going to lie down, she thought, and wants her babe with her.

An hour later Godfrey asked for his wife. The nurse answered that she was lying down and did not wish to be disturbed. He turned away disappointed; it had now been two days since he had seen her for a moment. He returned to his office and did not come home until a late hour. In the outer room he found the nurse asleep in the chair. He awakened her. She sprang to her feet and rubbed her eyes.

"What time is it?" she cried.

"One o'clock," was the somewhat impatient response.

"And I have forgot the blessed lady!" she cried. "I sat down to await the mistress' orders and must have gone asleep." As she spoke she opened the door. "They are not here."

"Not here!" he ejaculated.

He entered the desolate room; no wife, no baby greeted his eye.

On one of the pillows a note was pinned, and the nurse handed it to him.

"Your own heart will tell you where I have gone. Do not seek to find me."

He read the words over and over. Was there any hidden meaning in them?

"My God, what can it mean? She must be mad!"

He had no inkling of the truth—nothing to lead him to the unraveling of the mystery.

He called the servants, awoke his aunt and cousin. Their search was fruitless; she had gone as completely and secretly as though she had dropped through the earth.

The next morning Ophelia Brent opened the newspaper, and ran her eyes over the column.

"A sad accident," she read. "Last night about eleven o'clock, a woman with a babe in her arms jumped off the ferry-boat. All efforts to rescue her were fruitless."

A cry escaped from her lips, and she passed it to Godfrey.

He read it with ashen lips and pallid face.

* * * * * * * *

It was a quiet little hotel generally, but to-night there was a rushing of feet and some unwonted commotion.

A pale, delicate woman opened her door and beckoned to a servant.

"What is the trouble?" she inquired.

"A lady is dying in the next room," was the response.

She cast one glance back to the bed where an infant lay asleep, and then cautiously wended her way to the scene of death and sorrow.

The woman on the bed was insensible, and beside her stood a man with a wailing infant in his arms. Great tears were running down his cheeks and his form shook with emotion.

"Give me the infant," she said, gently, "I have a child of that age of my own."

He cast one glance at the frail woman who spoke to him, and then relinquished the child to her care.

The next day the bereaved husband came to see her.

He told her that they were on their way to California; that his wife was taken sick on the train, and got off here for medical aid.

"All help was in vain," he continued; "and now I am left with a poor motherless babe. I have no relatives to take it to; I am utterly at a loss what to do."

"Let me keep it," said the woman, eagerly, "it is about the same age as my own; they will be like twins."

"Are you able?" he questioned. "I notice that walking seemed very painful to you?"

A flush stole into her pale cheeks.

"I am weak, very weak," she returned, "but surely I will not be forsaken if I try to care for a motherless infant."

"Then I will leave him. May Heaven reward you for your kindness." He took a roll of bills from his pocket, and counted out a liberal sum. "I will write you soon after I reach my destination," said he, as he left.

"No one will ever trace me here," Bertha thought. "I will rent a cottage, and make a home for myself and babes."

A small but desirable place was soon found. She hired a girl to do her work and help care for the children.

A few weeks made a great change in her health, and she determined to try to give music lessons. She wanted no time to think, understanding there is no panacea for grief equal to a mind constantly employed.

The old physician she had consulted when she had first arrived, and who had assured her that all that ailed her was protracted weakness, from which in time she would recover, promised to speak among his patients for pupils. His two little granddaughters headed the list, which soon ran up to six.

Once every six months a letter came from Mr. Forrester, the father of the babe, and with it a check for two hundred dollars.

The years passed by; years of bitter tears, passionate longings, until they numbered seven. Had it not been for her blossom, Baby Belle, she would not have had the courage to face them.

One morning she was surprised by a strange gentleman calling to see her. She went into the little parlor thinking it must be some one who wished to procure a teacher.

She recognized her visitor.

"Mr. Forrester!"

"Mrs. Godfrey, I am pleased to see you so much improved," he exclaimed, as he took her hand.

"Yes, I have improved," she responded, with a sigh. I can scarcely realize that I am the same weak, crippled creature who came here seven years ago. But I must call your boy."

A little boy with a bright, healthful face, came bounding into the room.

"This is your papa," she said to the child.

He gave one look into his father's face, and then sprang into his outstretched arms.

At that moment Belle, a fair-haired child, with dark, starry eyes, entered the parlor.

"Is it my papa, too?" she queried.

"No, my child."

"When will he come? I want to see him."

Bertha turned away to hide her tears; how was she to answer the child?

Mr. Forrester noticed her emotion and thought how faithfully she must have loved her husband.

He tarried at the hotel, each day visiting at the cottage to see his boy. The time passed away rapidly and still he tarried, not saying whether he wished to take his child away with him or not.

At last he came to the cottage very early one morning and sent his boy out to play.

"I wish to speak to you, Mrs. Godfrey," he said. "I have just received a letter summoning me back to California. I do not wish to go alone. I have learned the same lesson that you have taught my boy—I love you."

"Stop! stop!" she pleaded. I can hear no more. I know I can trust your honor to keep my secret—I am not a widow."—He looked at her in surprise while she briefly told her story.

"Believe me," he said, impressively, "that you have been misled. I can not for a moment entertain the idea that your husband was guilty of such infidelity. That woman and her daughter purposely drove you away."

"Impossible!" He loved her first—he wrote her that letter."

Mr. Forrester was too delicate-minded a gentleman to say more about his disappointment.

"I'll not take Charley away from you," he observed. "You are all the mother he ever knew, and little Belle is a dear sister to him."

Later he bade the children good-by, who wept at his going, for they would miss him very much.

After his departure life went on as usual for a month or so. Then her servant informed her that another gentleman wanted to see her.

She hurried into the parlor, and then stagg-red against the walls almost lifeless; before her stood Godfrey Westervelt!

"Bertha!" he cried, and stepping forward he pressed her to his bosom. "Bertha, my wife!"

After their first great joy of meeting had somewhat subsided, Bertha told him why she had left him.

"Your aunt told me you were discouraged. Your looks confirmed it. I was afraid I would indeed become an invalid for life, and I was almost frantic. Then she had always told me how much you had loved your cousin before we met, and this letter proved that you had not forgotten her."

She produced the valentine which Ophelia had received on that long-to-be-remembered 14th of February.

"It is a base forgery!" he cried indignantly, and he read it over. "Bertha, how could you believe such a thing? I looked sad and worried because I was on the verge of bankruptcy, and I did not wish to worry you because you were so ill. Happily, I tided over, and my aunt and Ophelia still remained in the house until a year after your disappearance. Then aunt came and told me the gossips were busy; if I did not marry Ophelia they must leave; I told them to leave, that I should never marry again. I was about to sell my house, give up my business and go to California. They left in high dudgeon, and yet I never connected you going with them. I was sure you had gone insane and drowned."

"And how did you find me?" she queried.

"Mr. Forrester told me. I have been acquainted with him for years. He suspected the truth when you told him your history; he had known of my loss."

CHEAP PRINTING.

The Paterson Press speaks of a business man in that city who had been using "cheap and nasty" printing in his bill heads, cards, etc. He has at last become disgusted, and says he is done with that sort of business; it makes him sick every time he handles the stuff, and also makes him feel as if he was a "cheap and nasty" concern himself. The Press adds: "Our friend was right. It ought to make any one sick, and does make those who know what good printing is, to see these miserable specimens of typography which so many of our business men content themselves with, in the mistaken notion that they are saving money. They save no money in the end, for even if the printing costs them a trifle less in the outset than first-class work would have done, yet they must not forget that men are gauged by their surroundings. A shabby store brings shabby customers. If a man is seen to equip himself in a mean and stingy way for business, he is gauged accordingly, and customers of large means and liberal ideas are apt to avoid him. This proposition needs no proof. It appeals to reason and logic. If a man wants to be rated as a dealer in first-class goods, he must present to the world a first class equipment for business. And if his cards, his bill heads, his circulars or his advertisements do not speak for him as a man who has large and liberal ideas of neatness and elegance, he may be sure that the public will mark that fact."

PROCLAMATION BY THE GOVERNOR.

STATE OF NEW JERSEY,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

The Legislature of this State adopted, and on the twenty-first day of February, eighteen hundred and eighty-four, I approved the following Joint Resolution:

"Joint Resolution relative to the Planting of Forest Trees:

"1. Be it resolved, by the Senate and General Assembly of the State of New Jersey, That the Governor be and he is hereby authorized to issue a proclamation annually setting apart a day in April for the planting of forest trees, and recommending that the day be devoted by the people to that purpose.

"2. And be it resolved, That this resolution take effect immediately."

Now, therefore, pursuant to the foregoing resolution, I do hereby set apart FRIDAY, April THIRTIETH, eighteen hundred and eighty-six, for the planting of forest trees, and recommend that the day be devoted to that purpose.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand, and caused the great seal of the State to be hereunto affixed, at Trenton, this thirtieth day of March, eighteen hundred and eighty-six.

[L. S.] LEON ABBETT.

By the Governor,
HENRY C. KELSEY,
Secretary of State.

ANOTHER VICTIM.

A reputable citizen of New York committed suicide the other day because of financial losses incurred through gambling speculation. He had been a successful business man, made a handsome fortune by honest exertion, but not content with that, foolishly allowed himself to fall a victim to the devastating mania for chance acquired wealth, that blighting curse existing throughout this country at the present time.

It is a curse.

Destroying legitimate trade.

Unsettling industry and enterprise.

Breeding extravagance.

Creating embezzlement and fraud.

Deranging monetary affairs.

Sowing broadcast the seeds of ruin and distress.

If the honest American masses would fight to extermination the gambling system now so extensively practiced, not only in the way of manipulating stocks and bonds, but almost every standard article of food production and life necessity, and keep constantly in mind the sterling fact, that the only safe road to honorable riches and worldly happiness remains to be contentment with moderate gains, derived from intelligent oversight and patient industry within a legitimate business calling, they would increase personal prosperity and advance the cause of public morality.

To get rich slowly and honestly is the essence of wisdom—the only pathway of safety.

SELF RELIANCE.

Self reliance is the grand lever of success, and it applies to nations as well as to individuals.

Who have ever been and still are the prosperous and useful men of our country?

They who were born, reared and educated in wealth, protected by influence and money?

No.

But they are the self made men, who struggled with adversity, overcame difficulties by relying upon their own inherent strength, men who bravely worked on and became conquerors, because the power of victory was implanted within themselves and by themselves properly exerted. They are the men of worth and ability in every profession and department of life action.

Just so would the United States spring forth a national giant and become the richest and most powerful realm on the face of earth, if enlightened knowledge governed legislation, and freedom and equity were permitted to rise superior to the selfish spirit of avarice and monopoly, and the people be allowed to develop the country's boundless natural resources and fully and freely exercise the unexampled advantages they rightfully possess and should enjoy.

National self reliance and an unobstructed opportunity for the working of intelligent enterprise and industry is the needed programme.

Such would infuse healthful vigor into Commerce, Agriculture, Manufactures, Mining, Mechanics and Industry of every kind.

It would give us command of the markets of the world.

It would show the invincibility of American labor when bereft of the shackles of mercenary greed.

Self reliance is the Archimedean lever of success.

It would protect all—plunder none.

Ex-President Arthur's physician states that his patient is daily improving.

Gov. Abbett has changed the date of Arbor Day to April 30. Plant a tree then.

The Legislature has adjourned until June, when they will reassemble and take action in the railroad tax matter.

Prosecutor Wilson returned to his home in Elizabeth from his Florida trip on Monday last, and was sworn in by Judge McCormick for another term of office for five years.

At a special meeting of the Elizabeth City Council, held Tuesday evening last, Col. C. C. Suydam was unanimously elected Excise Commissioner for five years in place of J. O. Hoyt.

Governor Abbett made a good and wise selection in ex-Senator John Carpenter for Commissioner of the Sinking Fund in place of the late Eugene Doughty. Mr. Carpenter fills the bill in executive ability, and other requirements incident to the office.

In 1791 there were only six post offices in New Jersey, viz:—Newark, Elizabethtown, Bridgetown, (now Rahway) New Brunswick, Princeton, Trenton. The total receipts for the year ending October 5th, 1791, was five hundred and thirty dollars, of which amount the several postmasters received one hundred and eight dollars and twenty cents, leaving four hundred and twenty-one dollars and eight cents net revenue due the government.

The New Brunswick Fredonian, published for many years by Mr. John F. Babcock, has passed into new hands. Owing to physical disability, the veteran publisher has been compelled to transfer a portion of the burden of editing and conducting the Fredonian to others. The paper will hereafter be published under the management of "The Fredonian Publishing Company," composed of thirty-four prominent New Brunswick Republicans, with Mr. H. M. Woodmansee, former publisher of the Burlington Daily Reporter, as business manager, and Mr. Babcock, editor. The business of the office will be under the control of the former and the reading matter under that of the latter. We wish Mr. Babcock prosperity in the change of base.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

The Legislature sat till nearly two o'clock Friday morning, and reconvened at ten o'clock. During the latter sitting about a score of bills were slaughtered by adverse reports and twice as many were withdrawn. In this way the calendar had been cleared by noon. There were the usual scenes preceding adjournment. In order to give time for the presentation of some congratulatory speeches, big Tom Titus, of Warren, with the aid of a broom stopped the clock when it was within four minutes of twelve, and so it remained till the House was ready to dissolve. Mr. Noonan offered the following, which was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That before this House adjourns to take a recess until the June session, we, the members of this House, place upon the record of our proceedings our high appreciation of our very worthy Speaker, the Hon. E. A. Armstrong; that we hereby give expression to our recognition of the marked ability and fidelity with which he has at all times discharged his official duty; and that we hereby tender to him our warm thanks for the courtesy and impartiality uniformly extended to us and practised by him throughout the present session of the House.

Mr. Hudspeth offered a resolution of thanks to Clerk Toombs, Assistant Clerk Potts and Sergeant-at-Arms Colfax, and other officers, which was also adopted.

Speaker Armstrong then formally declared the Assembly in recess till June 1st when the Legislature will reconvene to consider the railroad tax question. The Senate did not adjourn except to Monday night, when that body also took a recess to June 1st. After the dissolution of the House, Mr. Hudspeth on behalf of the members presented Sergeant-at-Arms Colfax with a watch chain and charm. Then Major Peloubet of Jersey City started up "Marching Through Georgia" and the members all joined in the chorus. During the afternoon there were hand-shakings and good-byes at all the hotels and by evening but few legislators lingered in Trenton.

During the season 473 bills were introduced in the House and 233 in the Senate. About 250 passed both branches of the Legislature, and 180 have so far become laws. There are about fifty in the Governor's hands to be still acted upon, including the Capitol Rebuilding bill. Among the measures killed during the session, either by direct vote or by inaction, are the five per cent. and local option bills, and the oft discussed plan for reorganizing the Court of Errors and Appeals. The few laws of general importance passed by the Legislature can be counted on the fingers of one hand. A great deal of the Legislature's time was spent in attending to the interests of the corporations.

The Greenback party, popularly supposed to be in its little grave, has been resurrected in Michigan, where a few mourners of that persuasion got together to weep the other day. By the by, where are the Plainfield Greenbackers? It is about time they began their work of upsetting all the national banks in the country.

The labor troubles still agitate the country. The past few days has witnessed a strike among the street car drivers of New York city, which suspended business of the roads and interfered with the business of the metropolis. It is to be hoped that the differences between labor and capital will come to a speedy settlement for the good of the country.

Through the exertions of Hon. Robt. S. Green, ex-Mayor Peter Bonnett, of Elizabeth, has been appointed Chief of the Revenue Marine Division at Washington by the Acting Secretary of State. This is a gratifying result, and one which redounds to the credit of all concerned. Mr. Bonnett is well qualified to fill so honorable and desirable a position. He is honest; he is capable. Good for friend Peter.

The man who assumes to say when others shall labor or where they shall labor is a lawless despot whose mission has no field in the freest country of the world.

The labor agitator who lives on the woes of labor is the enemy of prosperous industry. Kick him out.

The Republican programme is to nominate William Walter Phelps for Governor of New Jersey, and carry the State if possible with the aid of his corruption fund. Then Blaine is to be nominated for President, and William Walter is to give him the electoral vote of Democratic New Jersey. These well-laid plans of the Republican managers will be checkmated, however, especially if that sterling Democrat, Judge Robt. S. Green, can be induced to sacrifice his personal interests and enter the political arena against Mr. Phelps for Governor.

As might be expected a Republican Court of Impeachment has found a Democratic official guilty of high crime and misdemeanor, and deposed him from office and disgraced him in the eyes of his fellow men. The trial of Patrick H. Laverty, State Prison Keeper of New Jersey, charged with criminal intercourse with convict Minnie Shaffer, before the State Senate, came to end on Wednesday night. All the Republican Senators voted "guilty" and all but one Democrat, Vanderbilt, voted "not guilty." The vote of the latter was sufficient to make the required two-thirds vote necessary. The sentence was then announced by President Griggs that Mr. Laverty be removed from the office of Keeper of the New Jersey State Prison and disqualified from holding office hereafter in the State. The Governor will at once appoint a new Keeper.

The General Opinion.

The present session of the Legislature goes out with a rancid flavor similar to that of a snuffed tallow-candle.—True American.

The adjournment of the Legislature yesterday to June 1 is a relief that we are thankful for. It did those things it should not have done and left undone the things it should have performed. After an ineffectual effort to raise their salaries from $500 to $1,000 per session, it was meet that the Railroad Legislature should vanish into night, singing, as we are told, "Marching Through Georgia."—Elizabeth Herald.

The Teachers' Reading Circle.

In response to a call issued by Superintendent C. K. Meleney, Chairman of the Committee on Local Management of the New Jersey Teachers' Reading Circle, a large and interesting meeting of County and City Managers was held in the High School at Newark on Saturday the 10th inst. There were present representatives from the counties of Essex, Hudson, Bergen, Passaic, Morris, Union, Somerset, Middlesex and Monmouth and the cities of Newark, Jersey City, Hoboken, Paterson, Morristown, Elizabeth, Rahway and New Brunswick. The Secretary, Mr. B. C. Gregory, of Newark, announced that from the reports thus far received from all parts of the State the estimated membership of the Reading Circle had reached a thousand. When is taken into consideration the fact that the organization was effected only three months ago this success is certainly wonderful and, as the Secretary said, phenomenal. In New York State the Reading Circle has been in existence for a year and has only enrolled eleven hundred. But their course is wholly professional, while that adopted in this State admits of reading of a general character. The Managers were called upon for their reports of the work, which were gratifying in the extreme. The general policy throughout has been to leave the matter wholly voluntary on the part of the teachers. No compulsion has been allowed. The course has been offered as a good thing, and the readiness with which it has been accepted proves that the teaching profession of New Jersey realizes the benefits that are to follow such an undertaking. In Jersey City 230 teachers are enrolled and have been reading the course for some time. In Newark and Paterson the arrangement of terms and examinations has retarded the work, there being only about one-third of the teachers in each place enrolled. Superintendent Meleney addressed the teachers of Passaic City last week on the subject of "Culture in the Profession" and at the close explained the Reading Circle. All the teachers enrolled themselves as members. In all the cities and counties heard from the work has been taken up with much interest. Various methods of conducting the local circles were reported, and all seem to understand how to make the meetings interesting and instructive.

COSTIVENESS

affects seriously all the digestive and assimilative organs, including the Kidneys. When these organs are so affected they fail to extract from the blood the uric acid, which, carried through the circulation, causes Rheumatism and Neuralgia.

The functions of the Liver are also affected by costiveness, causing Billious Disorders.

Among the warning symptoms of Biliousness are Nausea, Dizziness, Headache, Weakness, Fever, Dimness of Vision, Yellowness of Skin, Pains in the Side, Back and Shoulders, Foul Mouth, Furred Tongue, Irregularity in the action of the Bowels, Vomiting, etc.

The Stomach suffers when the bowels are constipated, and Indigestion or follows. Fetid Breath, Gastric Pains, Headache, Acidity of the Stomach, Waterbrash, Nervousness, and Depression, are all evidences of the presence of this distressing malady. A Sure Relief for irregularities of the Stomach and all consequent diseases, will be found in the use of

Dyspepsia,

AYER'S PILLS.

They stimulate the stomach, free the bowels, healthfully invigorate the torpid liver and kidneys, and by their cleansing, healing and tonic properties, strengthen and purify the whole system, and restore it to a salutary and normal condition.

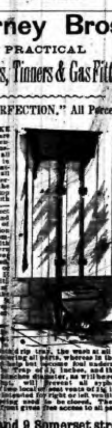
The "PERFECTION," All Porcelain.



WE TAKE pleasure in calling attention of our customers and all interested in sanitary matters to the all porcelain "Perfection," the only square top Hopper, with trap, made.—For perfect cleanliness and simplicity of construction we invite comparison with any Cistern Closet ever manufactured, either home or foreign. It combines, with the utmost simplicity, all the points of a strictly first class water closet. The square top will make itself apparent to all users, doing away with drip tray, the wash at all times thoroughly scouring all parts, whereas in the drip tray it cannot help but become foul underneath. It has a seal in Trap of 3½ inches, and the soil pipe vent of 2 inches diameter, as will be seen in the above cut, will prevent all syphoning of Trap. The two local or seat vents of 1½ inches diameter are intended for right or left ventilation, the one not being used to be closed. The large handhole in front gives free access to all parts of trap.

GOOD FRIDAY comes again and hot-cross buns are ripe.

THERE will be a matinee for roller skating at The Crescent, Monday afternoon next, from three to six o'clock.

THE Elizabeth Herald thinks the "Kaffee Klatsche" the Plainfield ladies are indulging in, should be called "Latest Catches."

THE Plainfield Painters' Union notifies the public and its employers that on and after Saturday of next week, May 1st, nine hours will constitute a day's work.

THERE is a five-year old member of one of the Seventh Day Baptist families, that hasn't missed a Sabbath service or a church sociable since she was nine months old.

MRS. L. ADAMS invites her friends, customers and the public generally to her Spring and Summer opening of millinery novelties at No. 42 W. Front street, Friday, April 23.

THE regular rehearsal of the Plainfield Vocal Society of next Monday evening, has been postponed until the following Saturday on account of the performance of "The Mikado" at Music Hall.

THE Easter music at Grace church, Sunday morning, is to be especially grand and enjoyable. The quartette for the occasion will consist of Mrs. T. W. Davis, Miss Runyon and Messrs. W. Cock and B. T. Barnes.

THE running of a candidate for the office of fire commissioner against the nominee of the Department had no effect on the result of the election, but it seems to have had something to do with the organization of the new Board.

AN exchange brings us news of two roosters that are doing quite well. Mr. Enoch Abel, of Perryville, writes to the Flemington Democrat that "during the month of March I gathered 628 eggs from thirty-two hens, and two of them were roosters."

EXTRAORDINARILY large advanced sales of seats for both the "Mikado" of next Monday evening, and Modjeska's appearance the following Thursday, have resulted. Easter week at Music Hall will then see probably the two biggest houses of the season.

THERE now seems to be a fair prospect of seeing one of our pleasantest thoroughfares—Broadway—evolving from a "slough of despond" into something like a macadamized condition, thanks to the energy and patience of our fellow citizen, Mr. P. Battaglia.

TWENTY-THREE members of the Plainfield Bicycle Club were out for a moonlight run, last Saturday evening. The remnant of the company finished with a visit to Ramonetti's, and cooled off with French cream, while the boys outside practiced with their machines.

THE ladies and children will be glad to hear that The Crescent is to be opened during the afternoon of Easter Monday, the 26th inst., from three to six o'clock. The prices for admission, skates and floor privileges will be the same as the matinee prices during the past season.

WE are requested to announce that Thursday is the last chance to sign the petition for a 5:15 p. m. express train from New York, to stop only at Elizabeth. The desirability of such a train is apparent to us all, and the justice of the demand is proven by the scores of signatures to the petition.

THE thermometer during Monday afternoon last registered no less than 80 in the shade and the coolest places out of doors. Winter flannels were decidedly uncomfortable, but the man that shakes them in consequence of the unusual warmth will regret such act before the blooming of the flowers of May—tral la.

AT the sociable of the Young People's Association of the Crescent avenue church, last Friday evening, Dr. E. W. Hedges furnished the instrumental music of the occasion and proved himself a performer of much power and expression. Easter rehearsals elsewhere that called for the presence of vocalists that were expected to contribute to the evening's programme, caused unavoidable disappointment.

THE Kitchen-Garden entertainment which all present so thoroughly enjoyed at Music Hall, last week, was also a great success financially. The receipts exceeded $200. As the public so generously patronized the affair, and the programme only included a portion of the work accomplished and only an exposition of the methods adopted in first lessons, another will be arranged for the purpose of showing the requirements of advanced pupils.

THE Borough of North Plainfield has also received a proposition from Mr. George H. Norman to build a system of water works within its limits, promising to complete the same if a franchise is granted, and have the water introduced and ready for use for commercial and domestic purposes and for fire protection, by early autumn. The Council was unanimous in referring the petition to the Committee on Fire, Water & Lamps—which settled it.

MME. HELENA BENDA, or, as she is more familiarly known, "Modjeska," will appear at Music Hall, Thursday evening of next week as "Rosalind" in "As You Like It." All know of her fame, and have heard of or witnessed her talent. She is wonderful, but her manager's demand that an advanced price for reserved seats should be charged, would not result in the full house she deserves. The fact that such increase was refused by the management here, again evidences Mr. Marsh's good judgment in such matters.

THE "war" prices charged by a would-be Plainfield monopolist in electric supplies, induced Mr. Charles Wann, long known in electrical matters of greater extent in this city, to bid for the work in the new residence of Mr. Charles Schipper on Seventh street. It is needless to say that Mr. Wann secured the contract, as his figures were fully 25 per cent. below others, and because his personal standing in the community was as good as a bond of assurance that the construction would be unexcelled and the workmanship of the most superior kind.

NEXT Friday is "Arbor Day" throughout the State by the proclamation of its Governor, and Mr. Chapman, State Superintendent of Schools, has issued an address to the city and county superintendents in which he says: "The day, so far as any regular school work is concerned, should be made a holiday, to be remembered with pleasure through the coming year. The morning may be spent in the school-room, with songs, recitations, readings or lectures, but the afternoon should be devoted to the planting of trees or shrubs, with such exercises as may seem best appropriate and most likely to encourage a love of nature."

THE marten birds are here for the season.

MESSRS. JACKSON & CODDINGTON, on Wednesday last, received a pension of over $1,100 for Mr. John Gaddis.

AT Caspar's on Second street, during to-day and to-morrow, bock-beer, bock-wurst, etc., will continue to be served.

J. RUSSEL MARSH is his name, and he was just a year old April 17th. No "old" Johnnie or "young" Johnnie about J. R.

THE Crescent will be reopened next Monday afternoon for an Easter matinee of roller skating from three to six o'clock.

THE soda fountains are fizzing all over the country, and pure fruit syrups (and "wink" syrups) are in great demand again.

NOW is the time when the festive private watchman sees burglars in the night that always get away from him and leave no trace.

IF we should state that there was only one beautiful baby in Plainfield, every mother in the city would believe we meant hers.

WE are indebted to State Geologist Geo. H. Cook, for a copy of his annual report. It is an interesting and instructive document.

THE New York company calls itself the only authorized "Mikado," but Templeton's is the original and far excels all others in many respects.

THERE will be appropriate Easter services in the Trinity Reformed church with specially selected music, both morning and evening of next Sunday.

FORCE'S Hotel, on North avenue, is being re-painted in an artistic manner by Burton Smith, contractor, of New York city, per order of the owners, Messrs. Coudert Bros.

THE Corporation Counsel may bring home with him from Germany one of the latest improved bicycles as high in price as is made, though only as high in inches as he can reach.

SNEAK thieves, during Tuesday night, stole about fifteen dollars worth of silver plated and fancy locks and door-knobs from the house that is being erected for Mr. Snedeker of North Plainfield.

DURING next Thursday and Friday Mr. Charles Smith, of Front and Somerset streets, will offer for the delectation of his patrons the usual bock-beer and bock-wurst that is so tempting at this season of the year.

THE unanimity of opinion that exists among the Councilmen of the Borough of North Plainfield, is surprising. At their last meeting every motion made was unanimously passed, and the entire Council was present and voting.

THROUGH many of our streets, as Councilman Marsh suggested, it would be healthier if the trees were trimmed to a height of at least fifteen feet. But then we would be satisfied if the powers that be would compel the trimming even as the laws direct.

THERE is an opportunity for a smart, energetic young man to gain admittance to the Military and Naval Academy at Oxford, Md., Hon. John Vetterlein, of North Plainfield, has the appointment of such a cadet in his district. Full particulars may be obtained of him.

THERE are many "anxious inquiries" as to when the Electric Light Co. will begin to erect its plant. We can say that just as soon as the papers drawn up by the Corporation Counsel are signed by the representatives of the city and the company, work will begin at once.

THOSE who "read-up" on the Shakesperian comedy of "As You Like It" in anticipation of the previously expected appearance of "Modjeska" as "Rosalind," are already prepared to the more thoroughly enjoy the star's interpretation at Music Hall, next Thursday evening.

IN our advertising columns will be noticed the advertisement of Mr. John N. Schenck, who is prepared to give estimates for fitting up private residences, green houses, etc., with the most improved systems of hot water and steam heating. He proposes to do first-class work in every respect.

DURING the Sunday following the Wednesday on which President Murray of the Board of Education sailed for Europe, that gentleman appeared on deck and received the profuse apologies of the Captain who explained that he did not know that Mr. Murray was aboard or he should have greeted him before.

THE second visit to this city of Dr. Dupree, the chiropodist, was a success in every way. More than one hundred sufferers were painlessly relieved of their ailments with complete satisfaction. A third visit from the Doctor is a possibility, the increasing demand for his services being an inducement hard to resist.

A BIRTHDAY anniversary will be held in Cutter's Hall on Thursday, May 6, 1886, by the Ætna Social Club. A swell club is the Ætna. They have rooms over Steiner's segar store and some of our best colored citizen's names are on its roll. Mr. John Mitchell is President, Mr. Henry Garretson, Secretary, and Mr. Edward Washington, Treasurer.

M. T. MULFORD and family were agreeably surprised on Tuesday evening last by his relatives, (representing four generations) who came with handsome presents, edibles and good cheer to remind him that it was the tenth anniversary of his wedding and should be appropriately celebrated—which it was to the satisfaction and enjoyment of all.

THE old established business of Clare, the jeweler, at No. 9 Park avenue, is being continued with a large and varied stock of goods in that line, under the management of Mr. C. E. Vail, a gentleman of many years experience in the business, who acts as the representative of Mrs. Clare. Repairing in all branches executed equal to New York houses and at less than New York prices.

THE township committees along the road are to meet together and decide upon an unanimity of action that is to result in a continuous macadamized highway from Fanwood to Roselle. This city should catch-on at this end, and as the Commissioners of the Borough of Dunellen will meet us at Evona, there is no reason that in time a perfect drive from New Brunswick to Elizabeth should not be completed.

THE Hopewell Herald says:

"There is a growing conviction in the minds of smokers that the upper vest pocket should be made deep enough to entirely hide a cigar from the scrutinizing gaze of the man who never has any."

And the Hunterdon County Democrat adds:

"The Hopewell Herald editor is a young man, but he is full of enterprise and thoughtfulness and bids fair to make a mark in the world. Every smoker ought to take his paper."

MESSRS. Woolston & Buckle of No. 25 North avenue are artist painters and dealers in supplies of all kinds for interior and exterior decoration. They are at present engaged on some of the handsomest residences in the city, among which are the houses of Messrs. Fraley, at Park avenue and Seventh street, and Watson of Crescent avenue. Mr. Theo. Hard, a well known artist decorator in paper hangings, has charge of this branch of their business.

MESSRS. Schwed Bros., the leading Plainfield clothiers, merchant tailors and gent's outfitters, of No. 7 E. Front street, are prepared for the rush with a large and elegant line of Spring and Summer clothing made up in the latest patterns and designs of domestic and imported goods, ranging from the cheap and durable grades to the finest imported worsteds. The growth of their business during the past year may be attributed to the fact that their prices are so uniformly low. They make a specialty of boys' and children's wear, and gentlemen's furnishing goods of all kinds at lowest prices.

THE date of the Plainfield Bicycle Club's entertainment has been set for Monday, May 17th, at The Crescent.

WE are requested by a reader to "Oh" for water works. No; thanks. Not just yet. When we "oh" for anything it generally comes, and the city is not ready for water works quite yet. We'll let our readers know when the time arrives.

THE odor of the fertilizer about the freight station where it arrives and the yards where it is kept on sale, is unpleasant (to say the least) but not unhealthy. However, most people prefer to take their health some other way.

THE very courteous representative (whose name is Dennis) of Messrs. Chase & Sanborn, of Boston, has dealt out during the past three days hundreds of cups of coffee to the inhabitants of this city without distinction as to age, sex or condition of servitude. We wish he would stay a year.

THE Central Times is no doubt proud of its more enlarged, convenient and handsome editorial offices. It has taken in addition to its old sanctum the commodious room connected with it, and thus attains larger quarters for its extending business and a greater chance for the "exchange fiends" to sit around, read the papers and ask questions of the editor while at work.

THE news we published exclusively, some weeks ago, of the coming of Mr. Moody, and perhaps Mr. Sankey, is authenticated by the almost positive assurance that has been received of their arrival on the 15th and 16th of May. The Crescent will probably be secured for the accommodation of the thousands that will gather from all over the State to hear these great evangelists.

A FINE reproduction of the Hon. Andrew Albright's handsome face in steel plate, is being sent to the press throughout the State as the candidate for New Jersey's next Governor, by the Tribune of Chesilhurst. Should Mr. Albright be nominated, Willie Phelps will be slaughtered and his money used to save some of the other Republicans on the same ticket from the same deep, deep burial.

The Original Mikado.

Monday evening of next week, Mr. John Templeton's Opera Company will again appear in Music Hall in their perfect presentation of "The Mikado." Those who saw them before will again, and the few who did not are fortunate in having the chance within their reach. Our readers will agree that it is only our practice to praise in advance companies of any kind that deserve commendation, and this rule we follow in this particular. Of the cast for Monday evening a judgment may best be formed by a brief comparison. Mr. Charles Harris in build and make-up excels all other "Mikados." Mr. George Broderick is far superior as "Pooh Bah" to Messrs. Gilbert & Sullivan's own, and the same assertion is true of Miss Hattie Starr as "Piti-Sing." Mr. Jay Taylor as "Nanki-Pooh" is not so good an actor but is in voice the peer of any artist at present singing the part. Miss Lucille Meredith is a most charming "Yum-Yum," and Miss Emma Baker in quantity and quality satisfies the audiences much better than any of the other "Katishas." And last, but not least, Mr. Seymour as "Ko-Ko" is just "immense."

The New Board of Fire Commissioners.

Last Friday evening in the Council rooms, the President and two members of the old Board of Managers of the Fire Department met and adjourned, and the new Board organized. There were present Commissioners Jones, Livingston, Brower and McClure; absent, Commissioners Cutter and Knowland.

On motion of Mr. Livingston, Mr. Jones was re-elected President of the Board. On motion of Mr. McClure, Mr. Brower was elected Treasurer, and on motion of Mr. Brower, Mr. Knowland was re-elected Secretary.

The usual routine business was transacted, and a motion carried that when the Board adjourned it be to meet again Thursday evening the 22d inst.

Mr. McClure urged the policy of repairing No. 2 Engine at once. He was in favor of its being sent to the Scott Works for a thorough overhauling immediately at a cost not to exceed $600. Action in the matter was deferred until the following meeting.

The President was requested to give the usual notice of the annual election for Chief Engineer and Assistants of the Department, to be held in the parlors of Alert Hose Co., Monday evening, May 3rd, between the hours of seven and nine.

Personals.

Mrs. and Miss Clarkson, of East Front street, have engaged passage for Europe, to sail July 3d.

Mr. and Mrs. James Clark of Seventh street have returned from their annual visit to St. Louis.

Corporation Counsel Marsh will endeavor to so arrange his business affairs and engagements as to be able to take another short trip to Europe and back, during the mid-summer.

Miss Nettie French, daughter of ex-Fire Commissioner Theodore French, of Fifth street, was a classmate and intimate friend of Miss Frankie Folsom, who is to marry President Cleveland in June.

Mr. James W. VanSickle and Miss Henrietta Randolph of this city, were united in marriage Wednesday evening, at the residence of the bride on East Third street. The ceremony was attended by a number of the many friends this popular gentleman and his lady possess.

Mr. Harry B. Conklin, after a competitive examination with a number of other applicants, has secured a lucrative position in the office of the Public Administrator in New York city. This is a very flattering endorsement of Mr. Conklin's ability, and he will prove especially fitted for the place.

On Wednesday evening last a Reception was held at the residence of County Collector Sheridan, 124 Race street, Elizabeth, N. J., in honor of the marriage of his daughter Nellie to Mr. C. O'Callaghan. A large number of guests were present, including many prominent officials. We extend our congratulations to the newly wedded pair.

Dr. C. Mitchell Field and his brother Mr. Richard B. Field, sailed for foreign ports Wednesday last. Dr. Field has just returned from a trip through the South in improved health and strength, and the present journey is one in continuance of a search for rest after many month's hard work and faithful service to secure health and life for others.

Mr. W. D. Howells, the talented novelist, and wife, are guests of Mrs. Howells' sister, Mrs. A. D. Shepherd, of Scotch Plains. Mr. and Mrs. Howells will remain to be present at the wedding of a brother of Mrs. Shepherd and Mrs. Howells, who will next Thursday marry Mrs. H. B. Kaufman (nee Myers) of Front street, East. The occasion is to be a very brilliant one.

The death occurred during Monday evening last of Mr. Samuel J. Burr, at his place of residence for the past few weeks, on the corner of Front street and Central avenue. The deceased has been suffering some time from a complication of diseases, and his death was not entirely unexpected or unprepared for. He was the father of the wife of ex-City Physician, H. H. Lowrie, and of Mr. Samuel D. Burr, also of this city, an editorial writer of extended abilities in scientific matters. The deceased was for many years the editor of the Dry Goods Bulletin of New York, and has been connected with various other trade papers. He was 76 years of age, and has lived in retirement with his children in Plainfield for a long time.

An Opening for Poets.

The Neillsville, Wis., Times says: "We will be pleased to publish unobjectionable poetry for twenty cents a line. The Times has a very large circulation, and poets desiring to reach the public will find better facilities offered here than by the average paper. The cash must accompany all 'outbursts of the muse,' at the rate announced above. If you send ten lines let it be accompanied by two dollars; if twenty lines, four dollars, etc. Spring poetry, five cents per line extra. No cordwood taken on poetry."

Five Kinds That Disagree.

We print in full, elsewhere on this page, the remarks of the Rev. W. R. Richards, from the pulpit of the Crescent avenue church, on the subject of the legal aspects of temperance reform. Everybody will read these remarks with interest, but there are five kinds of people we just now have in our mind, that will disagree with the sentiments expressed. Those who are biassed, those who are fanatical, those who are incapable of using their reasoning power, those who are ignorant of the question in all its bearing, and the hypocrites.

Nominations for Company Officers.

The different companies of the Fire Department are nominating their respective officers for the coming annual elections. Those so far chosen are as follows: Engine Company No. 2: For Foreman, Thomas Kellar; First Assistant, Frank Day; Second Assistants, Alex Gee, Chas. Krewson, John Morton; Secretary, J. B. Martin; Assistant Secretary, Hiram Voorhees; Treasurer, Horace M. Sherwin; Engineer, Frank Schuck; First Assistant, Edward Mosher; Second Assistant, William Goeller; Representatives to Relief association, E. Mosher, H. M. Sherwin.

Only Registered Pharmacists.

The act to regulate the drug business has passed the Legislature. Now only registered pharmacists are allowed to put up prescriptions. A State Board of Pharmacy consisting of five members will meet quarterly at Paterson, Newark, Trenton and Camden in turn. Applicants for certificates must give proof of service for four years in the business and pass a satisfactory examination. Fine and imprisonment constitute the penalty for violation of the law. Red labels must be put on all bottles, boxes, etc., containing poison. The act does not affect physicians, patent medicines and retail dealers.

North Plainfield Borough Meeting.

The Mayor and Council of the Borough of North Plainfield met pursuant to a call, Friday evening of last week. All members were present.

Councilman Riker nominated Mr. Geo. Becker as Marshal of the Borough at a salary of $100 a year. Seconded by Councilman Arnold and so ordered; all voting aye.

Councilman Sister of the Committee on Streets and Public Health moved that the Corporation Counsel be instructed to give two weeks notice to certain parties named to abate nuisances they permitted, and if not then abated to proceed against such parties as provided by the ordinance. Seconded by Councilman Arnold and so ordered; all voting aye.

Councilman Sister also presented for the adoption of the Council, rules defining the duties of the permanent Committee on Streets and Public Health. Read and adopted; all aye.

Councilman McCutchen with a view to ascertain the power and ability of the Council in the matter of raising money in anticipation of taxes, offered a series of resolutions authorizing the Committee on Streets and Public Health to negotiate a loan of $800 for use on the roads of the Borough. The same to be paid out of the first moneys collected of the $1,500 voted for the purpose at the preceding election. On motion of Councilman Sister, seconded by Councilman Arnold, the resolutions were adopted; all aye.

Councilman Sister presented a petition for sidewalks on Washington avenue and other streets. Also a petition for the abatement of a nuisance. Both read and referred.

Councilman Tuickstun of the Committee on Printing, stated that a map of the Borough had been purchased as instructed, and that copies of the ordinance recently passed had been printed and posted as required.

Also a petition from Mr. George H. Norman for the right to construct and maintain a system of water works within the Borough, for commercial and domestic purposes and protection from fire. Referred to the Committee on Fire, Water and Lamps.

The Council then adjourned.

A Brighter Star in Heaven.

Why should she sleep, while all around is waking;
Why should she die, when life is come again?
Why fade away, when the glad earth is breaking
Into bloom and beauty over hill and plain?
Perhaps, beyond our grim and groping sense,
Heaven had for her some glorious recompense.
—Central Times.

As during Friday morning of last week the sad news spread of the death of Josie, the younger daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Force of North Plainfield, everyone felt almost a personal loss and realized how even they, unconnected by any tie of relationship, would miss the little one. Of her it could be truly said as the shock of her unexpected death went from one to another, that "none knew her but to love her, none named her but in praise." But a few days before she had been the life and light of her birthday celebration, full of good health and blessedness, and now she had passed away and entered into the Kingdom of Heaven just as the song birds were trilling a welcome to the Spring, as the trees and shrubs were bursting into bud and blossom, and as the sun shone so brightly in the depths of the blue skies. Letters and spoken words of heartfelt compassion and tender pity came to the bereaved parents from everywhere. The little schoolmates of her who had left them, flocked with their sweet messages of compassion to add to the deep expression of sadness that came from the older ones. If the sincere sympathy, intense sorrow and earnest regret shared by all who had been won and charmed by her sweetness of character and tenderness of heart, can lighten the burden of affliction that seemed to crush all future hope and happiness from out the lives of father, and mother, and sister, then will resignation come the sooner as calmer moments follow. As her life faded quietly and peacefully away, so bright a light went out on earth that it is just the parents and sister should think the most brilliant star they now see in the mid-night sky is the spirit of their lost one.

The funeral services took place from the residence of the parents on Duer street, Sunday afternoon. The Rev. Dr. Yerkes officiated and told from his personal knowledge of the beauty of the life that had been taken away. The attendance was large, and the display of flowers it is probable was never excelled in quantity and elegance. The separate grades of the school each sent offerings, and the little friends of the deceased and older sympathisers buried the casket under the richest blossoms. The pall bearers were Mr. John Force of this city, Mr. Fred. Dunn of Elizabeth, and Messrs. Robert Maxwell, Jr., and John Bradshaw of Newark, all cousins of the deceased. While the services at the house were in progress, Mr. Rufus K. Case, Assistant Superintendent at the First Baptist Sunday school, spoke to the scholars of the companion who had left them and of the example her pure life was for all to follow. A hymn was then sung by the entire school to her memory. The remains were interred in the Presbyterian cemetery.

Dr. Richards on Temperance Legislation.

There have been circulated so many false reports in relation to the views expressed by the Rev. W. R. Richards of the Crescent avenue church, Sunday morning the 11th inst., and so unsatisfactorily and incorrectly has the community been informed regarding just what his sentiments are on the subject of the legal aspects of temperance reform, that we have taken pains to obtain the exact opinions expressed. Mr. Richards said, after showing how, in this world, character is developed through endurance of temptation:

"Your minds have no doubt been turning to a question which confronts us all in these days, viz: the proper attitude of the law to traffic in intoxicating drink; or, what is the true relation of human law to temperance reform? You will have gathered my own opinion that, however we may proceed to define it, this is a wholly subordinate relation. The very most that law can ever do in this reform is to remove certain temptations; but the virtue of temperance, if there is any such virtue among men, will grow up, not through the temptations that have been avoided, but through those that have been endured. We do well to avoid them when we can; 'Lead us not into them,' is our sincere prayer here as elsewhere. But we are sure that in the course of God's providence plenty of them will still be left in the way which we shall have to endure.

"I have heard the statement made somewhere that one of the soberest communities to be found in our land is the State prison at Sing Sing, where prohibition is effectually enforced; but one can see at a glance how very far removed such enforced and unwilling sobriety is from temperance, or any other form of Christian virtue. The whole course of God's providence, from the Garden of Eden down, proves conclusively that he would look with more favor on a community where fifty men were habitually drunken, and fifty more sober from resolute' principle, than on a community where the hundred were all sober only because they could get nothing to drink. And our plans for the welfare of society must be formed after God's counsel, or we must hope for little success in carrying them out.

"The work that law may be expected to accomplish then, however we should proceed to define it, is merely a subordinate work, the diminishing of temptation. Law should accomplish that.

"Is it right that we should even willfully by law put temptation in another's way; as England, for instance, for the sake of her Indian revenue, forced the opium trade on China? I think not. But here you must allow me to explain myself. Under some circumstances—in New York, for instance, at the present time—I should certainly vote for a license law; not with the understanding that I was licensing a temptation; not at all; but with the understanding that this trade, which a very large portion of the people demanded, both buyers and sellers, and which perhaps I do not see my way clear to forbid them; but which is unquestionably dangerous; should pay for a part of the risk that it imposes on society, and should be kept under the closest possible control.

"I know that many good men differ from me in this; and, holding that the trade is not only dangerous but also essentially sinful, declare that to license it is to become participator in a crime. I do not so understand it; but I do fully agree with them when they say that the State has no right willfully to put temptation in the way of her citizens.

"And here is the distinction. As a citizen I might properly vote for a license law because I thought—if I did so think—that the best way of restricting a dangerous and costly business; but suppose I voted for that very same law from another motive, because I coveted for my city the revenue which that law would secure; in other words because I wished to diminish my own burdens of taxation? It seems to me that the millstone of which Christ spoke would begin to hang heavy about my neck. The difference in motive makes all the difference in the world as to the moral character of the vote. Really I can see no distinction between selling liquor yourself in order to support your family, and voting to license that sale in order to support your city—voting under the influence of that financial motive, I mean. If both acts are right, well and good. But if you condemn the one act, I do not see by what possible logic you can justify the other.

"I am not trying to suggest schemes of practical temperance legislation. The pulpit is not the best place for that work; and certainly the preacher in this pulpit has little qualification for it. To my own mind, I must say, that partial prohibition which may be secured by local option seems the wisest, and most hopeful, and most equitable legal measure that has been placed before us as yet. I sincerely wish that it might be given a fair trial in our own town."

WESTFIELD WISPS.

Kaylor & Moffett have the contract for the erection of a new dwelling house on Middlesex street.

The death of Eliza Hamilton, wife of Jacob Hamilton, occurred on Wednesday. The deceased has been confined to her room for over ten years with the palsy.

Overseer of Road District No. 6 should level the newly deposited earth in the road bed on the Summit road, or we may have to record a serious accident to passing teams.

The familiar face of Chris. Eggis may now be seen at Decker's clothing establishment. He has been absent about one year. He takes the place of one of Mr. Decker's striking employees.

The overseer of Road District No. 8 ought to repair the plank walks on his district. There are several bad places where persons in the night time are in danger of injuring themselves; one especially at the corner of Broad and Prospect street.

The writer has in his possession a map, showing Westfield in the year 1836, before the railroad was made, although it had been projected, and it is marked on the map as the Elizabethtown and Summerville railroad. The present Broad street is called the stage road to Philadelphia. Central avenue is named Rahway avenue on map. The lots are 25x100 feet. At the point where the residence of John S. Irving is located, on Central avenue, is situated a Public Lyceum. The following are some of the streets on map: Mechanic, Oak, Ridge, Elizabeth, Hewitt, Cherry and Spring. The depot is on the east side of the present Central avenue at the railroad crossing.

On Sunday last two of our young men arrived in town on one of our morning trains so drunk as to be a disgrace to themselves; all bloated up their hat and clothes torn, and then going into one of the parks adjoining the depot, laying around all day quarrelling and almost coming to blows, thinking themselves, no doubt, smart. It we had had a lock up it would have been the right place to have put them until they had sobered up, and they would not have had the chance to do as they did on Sunday evening—replenishing themselves with whiskey, and keeping up their state of beastly intoxication. If it should occur again, the names of the young men ought to be published, and no doubt will.

Wednesday evening of last week, Mr. William J. Bogert tendered his friends a soiree-musicale in Arcanum Hall, that was beyond a doubt the grandest feast of music ever experienced in the town. All the artists who took part deserve the highest praise, and some of them demand special mention. Mr. E. A. Lefebre, of Gilmore's band, is the most wonderful performer on the saxophone in this country, if not in the world. His obligati were the feature of the evening. Miss Lizzie Seymour's pure contralto voice was thoroughly enjoyed. Her rendition of Gilmore's "Columbia" should bring the song the notoriety it doesn't seem to attain. Gounod's "Light from Heaven," given by an instrumental quintette composed of Messrs. Lefebre, Buchanan, Johnson, Taft and Bogert, was very effective, and the "Miserere" with one of the saxophones, hidden, was most realistic.

The residents of our town have complained considerably the past week of the tramp nuisance, and are trying to get at some way to get clear of them. If our justices would commit them to the county jail as vagrants, and have them set to breaking stone, it may not be necessary to make but a few examples of them before we would be rid of tramps, as every one knows a professional tramp will shun work, and would give our town a wide birth in their tour through the country. Under the tramp act recently passed by our Legislature, the fees are so small that the officer who takes one of them to jail would be money out of pocket, besides his time, and the law allows only fifty cents for taking one of the tramps to Elizabeth jail, and as every one knows it is impossible to get there and back for less than fifty-five cents; the more you have the worse you are off. Could not our Thief Detective Society take some action in the matter? It has been done in some of our adjoining towns, which probably accounts for their being so many of them around of late. A look-up to run them in at night, and set them to breaking stone or sawing wood in the morning, might be a good idea.

IN MEMORY OF JOSIE FORCE.

BY MRS. T. S. DRAKE.

Sweet girl, and parents' pride,
Beloved by all her friends,
Too pure for earth, just ripe for heaven,
So Jesus for her sends.

This blooming girl, a sister's joy,
Just bloomed awhile to die;
To bloom again in immortelle,
In Eden's bowers on high.

Were we to see dear Josie now,
We would not breathe a sigh,
But fall submissive at His feet,
And cry Thy will be done.

That crown of life upon her brow
Which in life's race she won,
And blood washed robe whiter than snow,
Is shining as the sun.

But when the angels lift the veil,
From off this mortal flesh,
We'll see, and know our Josie dear
On yon celestial shore.

SPORTSMEN'S CORNER.

The Spring flight of English snipe has been small thus far.

Woodcock are reported as numerous. Watch the pot-hunter.

There was a large attendance on the grounds of the Middlesex Gun Club Saturday last, and the shooting excellent. One modest member of the Club astonished his friends and even himself by killing fourteen out of fifteen live birds.

A movement is on foot to call a convention of sportsmen at Lake Hopatcong early next Fall to take into consideration the codification of all the game and fish laws, and present such a bill to the Legislature at its next session for passage. We have advocated such a Convention and such action a long time. We trust the convention will be held.

The shad season is now fairly open. A few have been taken in the Raritan River at New Brunswick, and in a few days we expect to hear of large catches farther up the river. Fishermen are warned that it is contrary to law to draw seines within nine hundred feet of the dam across the Raritan at Five Mile Lock, below Bound Brook. Offenders will be promptly arrested and fined.

Two disciples of Uncle Izaak Walton, one a resident of this city and the other of Evona, visited that historic piscatorial spot, the "Dam" below Bound Brook, a few days since, with the intention of alluring "something" out of the muddy waters with the aid of their new Club fishing paraphenalia. The Evona disciple, being a lazy fisherman, inserted a board into a convenient cleft of the stone abutment of the dam, and invited the ma—— other man to sit beside him. The latter declined with thanks, and went about his business, fishing scientifically. Shortly afterwards, hearing a splash, he looked around, and there was Ma—— his friend struggling for dear life to reach shore in ten feet of water. A narrow escape for the Plainfield ma——. Moral: Expect inconvenience when fishing.

About twenty bills affecting the game and fish laws, some good, some bad and others radically wrong, were presented for passage in both branches of the Legislature of this State just adjourned. But few of them passed, however, among those which did was Senate 113, a righteous good bill for the protection of stocked waters. It is as follows:

A further Supplement to the act entitled "An act to amend and consolidate the several acts relating to game and game fish," approved March twenty-seventh, one thousand eight hundred and seventy-four.

1. Be it enacted by the Senate and General Assembly of the State of New Jersey, That the nineteenth section of the act to which this is a supplement be amended so as to read as follows:

19. And be it enacted, That no person or persons or corporations shall place in any fresh water stream, lake or pond, any lime or other deleterious substance, or any drug or medicated bait, with intent thereby to injure, poison or catch fish, nor place in or allow to flow or be discharged into any pond, lake or stream stocked with or inhabited by trout, bass, pickerel, pike, sun fish or perch, any drug, acid, gas tar or any deleterious substance whatever which will kill or destroy said fish; any person or persons or corporations violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by imprisonment for a period of not more than two years, or by a fine of not more than two thousand dollars, or by both such fine and imprisonment at the discretion of the court before which such conviction shall be had.

2. And be it enacted, That this act shall take effect immediately.

Other bills passed opens the season for catching black bass with hook and line on May 30th, and closes it on Dec. 1st, in each year; prohibits the catching or killing of black bass less than seven inches in length, or trout less than six inches in length; prohibits killing red or grey squirrels during months of November and December; imposes a fine for having in possession any sort of game after the same has been shared; restricts killing European pheasant, partridge or grouse for three years.

On Wednesday last a team of twenty members of the Middlesex Gun Club went to the grounds of the Jersey City Heights Gun Club, at Marion, N. J., to contest with a like number of members of the latter club in a friendly match at eight live pigeons each. The match was shot according to the rules of the Jersey City Heights Club—25 yards rise, double barrel, 80 yards boundary. Our home team found the Jersey City's a jolly and gentlemanly lot of sportsmen, who entertained their visitors in a right royal manner. A splendid collation was served on the grounds, and the event proved one of enjoyment to all participants, and made many new friends. The visiting team labored under the disadvantage of shooting on strange grounds, and without any preconcerted plan of action as to captaincy and other important points. The birds furnished were a lively lot, and needed quick shooting to stop them. Although beaten by a small majority, the shooting of the Middlesex Club was commendable, considering the "fever" experienced by them in contesting against such a veteran and invincible club as the Jersey City Heights. All were pleased with this, the first team shoot of the Middlesex Club. They hope to do better next time. The following is the official score of the match, the home club being beaten by only six birds:

MISCELLANEOUS READING.

THE CONFEDERATE SPY.

When Gen. Early made his great raid on Washington I was scouting between his advance and the city, and was captured within the city limits twenty-four hours before his battle flags appeared in sight. I was dressed in citizen's clothes, pretended to be deaf and dumb, and claimed to have been driven out of Richmond, because I had written threatening letters to Jefferson Davis.

I had been inside the fortifications for half a day, and was slowly walking out, when a couple of young men, both of whom were considerably the worse for liquor, halted me and wanted to fight. I had a pencil and a block of paper with me, and I wrote:

"I am deaf and dumb."

That made no difference with them. Indeed, they declared that it would be a novel idea to lick a deaf and dumb man, and one of them gave me a cuff on the ear.

In those days I weighed 160 pounds and had the muscle of a prize fighter. I tried to get away from them without further trouble, but when they seemed determined to have a row I gave them all they wanted, and wasn't many minutes about it.

A crowd of soldiers and civilians collected, the provost guard came up, and the result was as I had anticipated. I was arrested and carried off to a guard-house.

One of the young men, who afterward turned out to be related to a member of the cabinet, followed me to the office of the provost marshal and charged me with being a spy.

No one seemed to entertain a doubt that I was deaf and dumb, as I claimed, and my examination was carried on in writing. I was asked my name, age, when born and a hundred other questions, and then searched.

They found nothing on me of a criminating nature, and I reasoned that I would be detained until after the excitement had passed and then turned loose.

NEARLY THROWN OFF HIS GUARD.

After being detained three days an officer entered my quarters one morning and said to me:

"Well, dummy, you can pack up and get out."

The minute I heard his step outside I was on my guard, but he spoke in such a natural tone that I came near giving myself away. On three different occasions during the war I played the part of a deaf and dumb man, and I tell you it takes all the nerve and presence of mind a man can call up. I sat facing the door, and, while I heard his words, I made no movement. He came closer to me and said:

"Come, pack up your traps, you are to be turned loose."

I looked him straight in the eyes without winking, and after a bit of chagrin stole over his face he motioned for me to follow him.

He took me to the provost marshal's office, and I was ushered into a private room where the marshal and three or four other officials were seated. On the way to the office, as we crossed a wide street, the officer suddenly exclaimed:

"There's a runaway horse; look out!"

If I hadn't been expecting some such thing on his part I must have betrayed myself. As I gave no sign, continuing on with my head down, I heard him growling:

"They think they've got a sucker, but they'll find out their mistake!"

I entered the office, knowing that every trick would be resorted to to break me down, and my nerves were braced as if to charge a battery of artillery. I was left standing by the door for a moment, when one of the officials looked up and quietly said:

"Take a seat, sir, and we'll attend to you in a moment."

I made no move, but looked around the room in a stupid sort of a way. I was looking out of the window on to a roof when the same official said:

"You may come forward and take this chair."

I stood like a stone, and he rose up, came over to me, and led me to a chair at the table. When I was seated one of the others remarked:

"Write your name, age and last place of residence on a slip of paper."

THE SHARPEST TRICK AT LAST.

That was trick number three, and it failed as the others had done. By and by the marshal wrote on a slip of paper:

"Who are you, and where from?"

I wrote in reply, "I am Charles Jones, of Richmond."

"But you are a Union man?" suggested one of the officers aloud.

I saw his lips move, but he got no sign from me. The examination continued in this manner for a full hour, the men using every artifice to trap me, but they failed to score a single point. I knew they would reserve the sharpest trick to the last, and was therefore nerved up for it. At length the marshal pushed back in his chair, pointed his finger at my breast and angrily exclaimed:

"Where did that Confederate button come from?"

It was another failure. Then he turned to his companions and said:

"Gentlemen, it's no use. The man is certainly deaf and dumb and a d——d fool besides!"

"We have wasted our time," replied a second. "He is not only what he claims to be, but may be of great service to us. I'd have the officer take him over to the secretary of war."

"I guess I will," said the officer, and he rang a bell and I heard the door open. Then he turned to me, carelessly as you please, and said:

"Go with the officer."

It was their last shot. I never moved a muscle until the officer approached and placed his hand on me. I was taken back to the guard-house, kept a prisoner for another week, and then the disgusted marshal turned me loose in the streets.—"Ex-Rebel" in Detroit Free Press.

Straw matting should be washed with warm salt water; wring out a soft cloth in it and apply quickly, not wetting the matting much, only enough to take out the dust and stains.

The smell of paint may be taken away by closing up the room and setting in the centre of it a pan of lighted charcoal on which has been thrown some juniper berries. Leave this in the room for a day and night, when the smell of paint will be gone. Some persons prefer a pail of water in which a handful of hay is soaking. This is also effectual in removing the scent of tobacco smoke from a room.

We know a man so cross-eyed that he put his hand into another man's pocket and abstracted therefrom a watch. He wanted to learn the time. The judge told him it would be three years.

HOUSE-CLEANING NOTES.

Silver that is not in frequent use will not tarnish if buried in oatmeal.

Nickel-plated ware can be cleaned and brightened by rubbing with flour and a woolen cloth.

To remove paint splashes on window glass, moisten the spots with a strong solution of soda, then rub hard.

A piece of zinc placed on the coal of a hot stove will clean out the stovepipe. The vapor produced carries off the soot like chemical decomposition.

Clean the glass of pictures by dipping a cloth into alcohol or water and then into whiting, and rub over it, and wipe dry with a silk handkerchief.

The best way to brighten a carpet is to put a half tumbler of spirits of turpentine in a basin of water, and dip your broom in it and sweep over the carpet once or twice.

Lemon juice and salt will remove ordinary iron rust. If the hands are stained, there is nothing that will remove the stains so well as lemon. Cut a lemon in half and apply the cut surface as if it were soap.

THORD'S BETTER PART.

The man of whom I am going to tell was the big man of the parish; his name was Thord Overaas. One day he stood proud and solemn in his pastor's study. "I have got a boy," he said, "and I want him christened."

"What shall be his name?"

"Finn, after my own father."

"And who shall be his godfather?"

He named several, great people one and all in the eyes of their neighbors, and relations of his own.

"Anything else?" asked the pastor, looking up. The peasant hesitated a little. "I want to have him christened by himself," he said.

"That means on a week day?"

"Next Saturday, at noon."

"Anything else?" repeated the pastor.

"Nothing else." The man took his hat, and turned to go.

But the pastor rose. "Yes, one thing more," he said; and, going up to Thord, he took his hand, looking him in the face—"please God that this child become a blessing to yourself!"

Sixteen years later the man again stood in the pastor's study.

"You are little changed, Thord," remarked the pastor; "age deals kindly by you." "There is nothing to trouble me," replied Thord. To this the pastor had no answer, but presently he asked: "And what have you come for this evening?"

"I have come to speak about my son, who is to be confirmed to-morrow."

"He is a fine fellow."

"I did not want to pay for his instruction until I knew what rank he is to take to-morrow at church."

"He has got the first place."

"So I hear; and I have brought ten crowns for the teaching."

"Anything else?" inquired the pastor, looking at Thord.

"Nothing else;" and Thord went his way.

Eight years had passed, when one day there was a great commotion outside the pastor's study; a number of men had come, Thord at their head. The pastor looked up, and recognized him. "You are well attended," he said.

"It is to ask you to put up the banns for my son; he is going to be married to Karen Storliden Gudmund's daughter, whose father is here beside me."

"Why, she is the richest girl in all the country-side!"

"People say so," returned the peasant, pushing back the hair from his forehead. The pastor sat silent, as though following his thoughts, and then he entered the names on his books. Thord put three crowns upon the table.

"It should be but one," said the pastor.

"I know; but he is my only child, and I want to do it handsomely."

The pastor took the money. "This is the third time, Thord, that you have come here on account of your boy."

"And I have done with him now," said Thord, putting up his pocket-book. He took his leave and went, the other men following slowly.

A fortnight after this, father and son in fair weather were rowing across the lake to Storliden, in order to arrange about the wedding. "The board on which I am sitting seems loose," said the son, and rose to fix it. But the plank on which he rested slipped; he opened his arms wide, and with a cry fell overboard.

"Catch hold of the oar!" cried the father, rising and holding it out to him. But the son—struggling twice, thrice—felt numb and stiff. "Wait, I am coming," cried the father, pulling with all his might. But the son, on his back, gave a long look into his father's face, and sank from sight.

Thord could not believe it; he sat, oar in hand, staring blankly upon the spot where his boy had gone down, as though waiting for his reappearance. A bubble rose; another and yet another, and then a large one which burst on the surface—and the lake lay smiling as before.

For two days and three nights the father was seen rowing about the spot without taking food or sleep; he was seeking for his son. On the morning of the third day he found him, and carried him in his arms across the hills to the homestead.

A year might have passed, when, one autumn evening, late, the pastor heard a sound in his ante-room, as of some one's hand on the latch. He went to open it, and in came a tall man, but bowed, wasted and white. The pastor had to look close before he recognized him; it was Thord. "Is it you, coming so late?" said the pastor, and stood silent.

"Oh, yes, I have come late!" said Thord, and sat down. The pastor also sat down, as though to wait; he waited long in silence. Then Thord began—"I have brought something I want to give to the poor; it shall be a trust-fund bearing my son's name." He rose, put the money on the table, and sat down again.

"That is a large sum," said the pastor, examining the gift.

"It is the half of my property; I have sold it this morning."

The pastor sat very still; when he spoke there was a tremor in his voice. "What will you be thinking of for yourself now, Thord?"

"The better part."

A long pause followed, Thord's eyes were on the ground, the pastor's searching his face. And then the pastor said slowly and softly—"I think, Thord, that your son has become a blessing to you at last."

"Yes, I think so," said Thord, looking up; and two big tears ran heavily down his face.—From Bjornson's "Tales of Norway," translated by Julie Sutter.

HEALTH HINTS.

Cover a burn immediately with the pulp of a raw potato.

A glass of cold water taken every morning before breakfast will keep the stomach in order.

Muscular exercise in pure open air to the point of fatigue is the best possible prescription for sleeplessness.

Cooked celery is said to be a specific for rheumatism. Cut the celery into small pieces and boil it until soft. The patient should drink the water in which it is cooked. Serve the celery hot upon toast.

In case of a bite from a rabid dog, Dr. Billings recommends that the wounds be cauterized with strong carbolic acid. It is much less painful and more effective than burning with a hot iron. The wounds will also heal in less time.

Sponge off your neck, throat and chest in cold water every morning, dry quickly with a soft towel, then rub with a rough one; do not be more than a minute about it, and a sore throat will rarely trouble you. A towel may be roughened by dipping it in strong brine, then drying.

From the dangerous wounds which often result from running a rusty nail in the foot or other part of the body, the following is said to be a certain cure: Smoke such wound, or any wound or bruise that is inflamed, with burning wool or woolen cloth. Twenty minutes in the smoke of wool will take the pain out.

BIRDS AND BONNETS.

In view of the fact that the destruction of birds for millinery purposes is at present attracting general attention, the appended list of native birds seen on hats worn by ladies in the streets of New York, may be of interest. It is chiefly the result of two late afternoon walks through the uptown shopping districts, and, while very incomplete, still gives an idea of the species destroyed and the relative numbers of each:

Robin	4
Brown thrush	1
Bluebird	3
Blackburnian warbler	1
Blackpoll warbler	3
Wilson's black-capped flycatcher	3
Scarlet tanager	3
White-bellied swallow	1
Bohemian waxwing	1
Waxwing	23
Great northern shrike	1
Pine Grosbeak	1
Snow bunting	15
Tree sparrow	2
White-throated sparrow	1
Bobolink	1
Meadow lark	2
Baltimore oriole	9
Purple Grackle	5
Bluejay	5
Swallow-tailed flycatcher	1
Kingbird	1
Kingfisher	1
Pileated woodpecker	1
Red-headed woodpecker	2
Golden-winged woodpecker	21
Acadian owl	1
Carolina dove	1
Pinnated grouse	1
Ruffed grouse	2
Quail	16
Hamlet quail	2
Sanderling	5
Big yellowlegs	1
Green heron	1
Virginia rail	1
Laughing gull	1
Common gull	21
Black tern	1
Grebe	7

It is very evident that, in proportion to the number of hats seen, the list of birds given is very small; but in most cases mutilation rendered identification impossible. Thus, while one afternoon 700 hats were counted and on them but twenty birds recognized, 542 were decorated (?) with feathers of some kind. Of the 158 remaining, seventy-two were worn by young or middle-aged ladies, and eighty-six by ladies in mourning or elderly ladies, or:

SPRING!

Now that Nature is beginning to clothe herself in forms of beauty you will naturally be looking 'round for wearing apparel suitable for the season. A glance at our Spring offerings will save you a good deal of time and money too, for we were never better prepared to serve you than at present. For months past, long before you ever thought of the matter, we have been engaged in selecting, with the care and judgment born of a long experience, a diversity of fabrics that will not only please the eye, but render genuine service in the wear. We set the ball rolling with a Union Cass. Suit, in two shades, at $8. It is a marvel of cheapness and, if you don't give it away, the price you paid for it will never be guessed. In all wool goods we commence at $10. Nobby, stylish, durable and, remember, all wool. We guarantee this, and are not afraid to have them compared with anything offered near this price. The celebrated goods manufactured by the Sawyer Woollen Co. are too well known to need praise. The demand for and ready sale of these goods have been such as to lead to their imitation, and, so far as looks go, they have been successfully copied. But the wearing qualities of the Sawyer goods have not been, and cannot be, imitated. To protect themselves and those who have learned the value of their goods, the Sawyer Co. have issued tags to those who purchase the goods direct for manufacture, to be attached to every suit made up. We offer this Spring genuine Sawyer Suits, with the "tag guarantee" attached, for $13 and upward. We have them in Plaids, Checks and Mixtures, and in patterns both grave and gay. For real value, combined with elegance of style and good workmanship, they take—the cake, we were about to say; no, the whole bakery would be more appropriate. Our general stock is full, large, varied, all manufactured this season, and at prices beyond comparison. We invite inspection. The stock itself is our best advertisement. It is more eloquent than any description we can write.

PYÆMIA

Is the most virulent form of blood-poisoning. Less speedily fatal, but not less certainly so, is the vitiation of the blood of which the first symptoms are Pimples, Sties, Boils, and Cutaneous Eruptions. When the taint of Scrofula gives warning of its presence by such indications, no time should be lost in using AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, the only perfect and reliable medicine for the purification of the blood.

SCROFULA

Is a foul corruption in the blood, that rots out all the machinery of life. Nothing will eradicate it from the system and prevent its transmission to offspring but AYER'S SARSAPARILLA. This preparation is also the only one that will cleanse the blood of Mercurial poison and the taint of Contagious Diseases. Impoverished blood is productive of

ANÆMIA,

A wretched condition indicated by Pallid Skin, Flaccid Muscles, Shattered Nerves, and Melancholy. Its first symptoms are Weakness, Languor, Loss of Nerve Force, and Mental Dejection. Its course, unchecked, leads inevitably to insanity or death. Women frequently suffer from it. The only medicine that, while purifying the blood, enriches it with new vitality, and invigorates the whole system, is BALKED.

"Won't you come down, Olive?"

Rose Annesley paused, with her head on her sister's chair; but Olive only laughed merrily, and shook her head.

"What!" she replied, "when this is Mr. St. Cloud's first visit, and you two have not seen each other since you parted at Mt. Desert? No, Rosie, dear, nothing would induce me to spoil the meeting."

"But you wouldn't spoil it," persisted Rose, in her quiet, straightforward way. "He understands all about you, Olive. He knows that we two have only each other in the world, and that you have always been more like a mother than a sister to me. He wants to meet you ever so much. You needn't laugh and shake your head. He does, indeed! Dear Olive!" she whispered, affectionately, laying her cheek against her sister's, "don't think that my happiness can ever make me forget you, or love you one bit the less."

Olive did not answer, only stroked the sunny little head that nestled so close to her own.

She was a quiet, reticent girl—in fact, society considered the elder Miss Annesley, with her keen, gray eyes and sarcastic manners, "rather an eccentric young woman."

But then, society felt a little vexed that Olive Annesley was so utterly indifferent to its claims.

The two sisters had been orphans for several years, Mrs. Annesley having died when Rose was quite a child, her husband a year or two after.

Those that knew Olive best, knew that the softest spot in her heart was for the pretty, golden haired child who had been left so entirely to her charge.

She had tried to rouse herself, of late, to go rather more into company, to entertain more extensively, for Rose's sake.

But during the previous summer Rose had gone with a party of friends to Mount Desert, and the result had been this engagement to handsome Bertie St. Cloud.

Olive had never met the young man. He was one of the employees in a large banking-house, and had been sent abroad on some business matters, shortly after his engagement to Rose.

He had just returned, and his first visit was, of course, to the large Western city which formed the home of his fair fiancee.

Rose had pleaded in vain that Olive would go down and join her in this welcome to her lover.

"I am not well, to-night," she said, as a ring at the door announced his arrival. "I shall see him to-morrow and do my best to cut you out. Perhaps I shall succeed. Who knows?" she added, with a smile, as Rose, looking like a veritable fairy, in her soft, blue cashmere reflitted joyously from the room.

But as the door closed behind her, Olive's face changed. She arose wearily, and crossing the room, paused in front of a mantle, where stood a large and handsomely mounted photograph.

The face which smiled back at her, with its soft brown eyes, delicate features, and dark moustache, was one which few women would have had power to resist.

"Why is it?" she said, impatiently, "that I feel such an inward distrust of that man? His face is simply perfect—too perfect to be true—yet it must be my own jealous fears for Rose which make me so unreasonable. He is probably no worse than others of his class. Oh, if I could only read him aright—could only find out what manner of man he is!"

Meanwhile, the lovers below, free from all apprehensions of the future, were tasting the full bliss of reunion after long separation.

The hours flew quickly by, and when St. Cloud returned to his hotel he was surprised to find it so late.

One of the waiters met him in the corridor.

"A gentleman has been asking for you, sir," he said, "and I showed him to your room. He has been there some time."

St. Cloud hastened up stairs, and on opening the door, descried, to his great pleasure, an old friend, whom he had not seen for some time.

"You here, Max?" he exclaimed, shaking him heartily by the hand. "My dear fellow, where did you drop from at this unseasonable hour?"

"I am stopping here on business for our law firm," he explained. "They were at one time located here, and still have a good deal of business in the city. I saw your name on the hotel register, and concluded to hunt you up, but have been waiting so long my patience is nearly exhausted. What keeps you out so late?"

St. Cloud smiled complacently. He had always liked Max Hart well enough, though he considered the young lawyer in some respects an "odd fellow." To-night, however, St. Cloud felt particularly good-humored, and therefore conversationally inclined.

"Well, to tell the truth, I'm engaged," he explained. "It's getting time for me to settle down, and I couldn't do so under more favorable circumstances. Rose Annesley is the dearest little girl in the world, and owns quite a handsome property beside."

"Do you mean the older or younger Miss Annesley?" queried Max, rather drily.

And St. Cloud rejoined, in surprise:

"I allude to the younger. Are they not both the daughters of the late John Annesley?"

"They are," replied his friend. "But Mr. Annesley was twice married, and his elder daughter inherits her fortune from her mother's family. Mr. Annesley himself lived up to his entire income, and his younger daughter inherited nothing. She is, and always has been, entirely dependent upon her sister, though I doubt if she has ever felt this dependence, as Miss Annesley shares every comfort and luxury with her. I know whereof I speak," he added, with a sidelong glance at St. Cloud's crestfallen countenance; "for our senior partner is Miss Olive Annesley's guardian, and transacts all her business affairs."

"The deuce!" muttered St. Cloud, under his breath; "here's a nice piece of work. I thought Rose owned fully as much as her sister. I'm not able to marry a girl without money—I really am not. If I could only put up a few thousand dollars I could command a junior partnership in our house."

He checked himself; he had spoken more freely than he intended.

"How about this Miss Olive Annesley?" he asked with a forced smile. "Anything of an old maid? Likely to die soon, and leave her property to Rose, eh?"

"I should say not," answered Max, composedly, "I have only seen Miss Annesley at a distance, but I should judge her to be a fine-looking woman of about twenty-seven or eight."

"Quite young enough to marry," murmured St. Cloud, gloomily.

Then rousing himself, with an effort, he changed the subject.

But when he called on the Annesleys the next morning, he invited Max most cordially to accompany him, adding, jocularly:

"You can take a chance at the heiress, old fellow; but mind, if you win her, I shall call for a division of the spoils."

And Max was not loth to accept the invitation. He felt some curiosity to see St. Cloud's sweetheart, and remembering their conversation of the night before, felt some pity for her also.

"He cannot love her as she ought to be loved!" was his mental comment—a conviction which strengthened after his meeting with Rose.

She greeted him so cordially as "Bertie's friend" that when he looked into her innocent eyes, he felt something like a pang of self-reproach.

He was presented to Olive at the same time, but she seated herself near St. Cloud, and seemed really determined to cultivate her future brother in law.

St. Cloud responded warmly to her efforts, and a war of wits ensued between them, in which, man of the world as he was, he could not but feel, at times, a little puzzled by Olive Annesley.

The arts and flatteries which he had practiced so successfully on other girls seemed to fall harmlessly on Olive's armor.

In the days that followed he found himself devoting more time to this pale, gray eyed girl than to his own pretty Rose.

He said to himself that she was the moneyed member of the family, and it would certainly be to his interest to gain some influence over her.

At first he really had no other object. He saw that Olive was peculiar—that she differed from the ordinary society girls whom he knew so well, and he took pains to become acquainted with her pet theories, her favorite authors—everything calculated to interest her.

They had frequent discussions, in which St. Cloud would, at first, oppose her ideas, and then, with a sudden tact, seem to defer to them.

Rose was, necessarily, thrown a great deal into Max Hart's society; but she showed no sense of neglect, and only rejoiced that Bertie and her quiet sister should have taken such a fancy to each other.

Max Hart alone divined in it all a deeper meaning than appeared on the surface. He saw that Olive was beginning to look for St. Cloud's coming as eagerly as Rose, that her color deepened whenever he approached, and that she showed at times an agitation strangely at variance with her usual calm demeanor.

He was filled with righteous indignation. It was bad enough that a girl like Rose should be willing to throw herself away on a selfish scamp like St. Cloud, but that she should be deceived, betrayed, and, above all, by her own sister, was too much. He lost all self control whenever he thought of it.

Fortunately for his patience, the business which detained him was now concluded, and he found himself free to return.

But the evening before his departure, he overheard some words which seemed to him proof positive of what he feared.

Rose had stepped into the observatory to gather for him some of her favorite flowers as a parting gift, and Max stood alone at a large bay-window which overlooked the balcony. St. Cloud and Olive, who had been promenading the balcony, apparently in deep conversation, paused near the window, which was partially open.

"I have much, very much, to tell you, Olive," he heard St. Cloud say eagerly, "but I dare not. Never was a man placed in a more unfortunate position than myself."

"Why should you fear to speak?" asked Olive, in a slightly agitated tone, "if what you wish to say be indeed from your heart?"

"Can you doubt it?" was the reply, accompanied by a glance which made Max thrill with anger.

But at that moment Rose's cheerful tones were heard, exclaiming:

"Oh, Mr. Hart, I cannot find a single Marechal Niel in bloom! I am so sorry! With one of those buds your bouquet would be perfect."

She stooped as she spoke to pin it on his coat, and Max, glancing down at the little white hand which held the flowers, thought, bitterly:

"Poor child! Betrayed by both lover and sister, what an awakening lies before her!"

That awakening came sooner than he dreamed, for the next afternoon, as Rose reclined, half asleep, on a sofa in the library, she heard St. Cloud ring at the door.

Before she could rouse herself sufficiently to speak, his voice was audible in the adjoining parlor, asking eagerly:

"You here, Olive, and alone? Where is Rose?"

"I left her asleep," was Olive's answer.

And St. Cloud, understanding her to mean in her own apartments, said hurriedly:

"Do not rouse her. It is so seldom that I see you alone, and—and lately I think you have avoided me, Olive."

There was no answer and he continued:

"I cannot blame you; I know how true and noble you are, and I will not even speak of what I have suffered. But I place my whole fate in your hands. Decide for me. Say but the word, and I will marry Rose."

Olive's head dropped, her breath came quicker, as she murmured:

"No!"

A gleam of triumph shot from St. Cloud's eye. He drew near Olive, and bent over her until his cheek almost touched her own.

"My darling," he whispered, "you do not know what a struggle I have undergone. But Rose is generous. I will tell her all, and at some future day, when she is happy again, you will let me claim you—is it not so? For you do forgive me; you do love me a little. I am sure of it!"

He laid his hand tenderly on her own, but at that touch, Olive started abruptly to her feet and turned her gray eyes, blazing like stars, full upon the astonished St. Cloud.

"Love you!" she said. "Yes, as you have loved her—my poor, trusting little Rose! Forgive you? Yes, when she forgets you—not before! Go, Bertie St. Cloud, and seek some other dupe! I have outwitted you at your own game!"

St. Cloud waited for no second bidding. He had been snared in the toils he himself had laid, and silently raging at his own failure, he quitted the house forever.

Olive turned at once to seek her sister. She found her still crouching on the sofa, from which she had half arisen, her face pale as ashes, her whole frame trembling like a leaf.

"Olive, Olive," she cried, piteously, "I have heard all!"

And Olive, with the muttered comment, "Thank heaven!" knelt beside her, and drawing the poor little head down upon her shoulder, soothed her with the tenderest caresses. From that time St. Cloud's name was never mentioned between them.

But the rumor of the broken engagement must, in some way, have reached Max Hart, for it was not long ere he made it convenient to see the two sisters again. He asked no question; he sought no confidence; but his silent and respectful sympathy touched them as no words could have done.

In time he gained the place he coveted—that of a friend valued above all others by them both. But it was long ere he ventured to speak of love to Rose, and when he did, the color rushed painfully to her cheek.

"Do you know the story of my past?" she said, bravely.

And he replied:

"Aye, and love you but the more! You are still my rose—my queen of flowers!"

"A poor, withered, faded rose!" she answered, smiling through her tears.

"But the one rose in the world for me!" he said.

And then she placed both hands in his to have and to hold.

LITERARY NOTES.

The publishers of The Century are entirely out of the April number, containing the Alabama and Kearsage articles, and as the printers of the magazine are moving to their new quarters on Lafayette Place, it will be impossible to issue a new edition without seriously interfering with the printing of the May number. In response to a cable message the English publishers are returning all the copies of the April issues they can spare,—only five hundred.

With the coming May number the Magazine of American History enters upon its fourth year under its present able editorial management. Through the judicious broadening of its scope and the substantial value and varied interest of its contents, appealing alike to the student and the general reader, it has achieved a greater marvel in the way of success than that of any other periodical of its character in the world. This speaks well for American scholarship, and the rapidly growing popular desire for historical information.

PLATFORM ECHOES.

This entirely new and splendidly illustrated volume is the crowning life-work of the world-famous John B. Gough. Every one is familiar with the story of his early life, and of his rescue from a drunkard's grave, and how this once wretched and despised sot became one of the most famous men of our time and the best known speaker in the world. For seven years he stood amid the horrors of delirium tremens an abject slave to the bottle; and his condition and wretched appearance were such as to cause people to exclaim. "There's the man who has been in hell." Since that time the good he has accomplished cannot be estimated. The rich and poor, the high, the low, the learned and unlearned, have been alike thrilled and moved by his burning words. He has swayed brilliant audiences of royalty and fashion; has spoken in State prisons, jails, poor houses, penitentiaries, reform schools, and houses of correction; to the deaf, and dumb, and blind; to audiences composed wholly of outcasts; and to audiences numbering thousands of children. At his feet more than ten million people have sat and listened in admiration and wonder. In his library may be seen a set of large volumes—a far better memorial of his life and labors than any monument of marble or bronze—containing the original signatures of one hundred and fifty thousand men and women who were induced to sign the pledge through his personal efforts. These names—many of them tear bedewed and written with trembling hand—represent stories of happiness and woe, of ruin and remorse, of blighted hopes and wasted lives, of battles fought and victory won. To give some of these thrilling life histories; to depict scenes of joy and sadness; to lift the curtain on life's stage and show its tragedy and comedy; and to draw "living truths" from the lessons thus taught, and bring them home to every heart, is the prime object of this volume. Many distinguished men and women have long urged Mr. Gough to write this book. They knew that in forty-five years of unceasing work among all classes in Europe and America, he has seen much of the bright and shady sides of life, and that the wealth of material in his possession would make one of the most valuable and thrilling books of the day. Rev. Dr. Lyman Abbot, the eminent editor and divine, has written the story of Mr. Gough's life and career for the book. It is John B. Gough in print. In it he gives to the world in permanent form his best thoughts on many topics, his most touching tales, his most stirring anecdotes and incidents, his most telling stories of deepest pathos and keenest humor. As a story teller he has never been equalled. The tenderness of his pathos and the spice of his humor are irresistible. But whether he narrates a story of mirth or of sorrow, it is always to illustrate great and living truths. Stranger stories are here told than romance ever dreamed of, every one of them drawn from real life by a master hand. In every chapter he weaves in anecdote after anecdote, incident after incident, story after story, and underneath them all lie "Living Truths," that stand out as beacon lights. He plays upon the reader's feelings as with an enchanter's wand, at one time filling his heart with gladness, at another blinding his eyes with tears. At his bidding hearts are melted, and stern, strong men, as well as sensitive women, weep tears of compassion, are aroused to indignation, or moved to uncontrollable laughter in spite of every effort to control their feelings. This work is wholly and entirely new. Not one word of it has ever before been published. It contains nothing that appears in Mr. Gough's "Autobiography" (1869), or in his Sunlight and Shadow" (1880). This is a totally different work, and is conceded by critics, and by the entire press, to be the crowning life-work of its illustrious author. Its illustrations are the best we have ever seen. It contains two hundred and twenty-seven fine engravings by the best artists and engravers in the world. Many of these illustrations are "too funny for anything," while others depict wretchedness and woe. Sixteen of these engravings are full page ones, and are magnificent specimens of art. Two hundred and nine are text illustrations. There are two fine steel-plate portraits. One is from a life-size full length painting, showing Mr. Gough as he appeared shortly after his rescue. The other is from a photograph just taken. All in all, it is one of the finest and most elaborately illustrated volumes ever produced by the American press. We advise our readers to buy "Platform Echoes" at the first opportunity. They can, in our opinion, much better afford to dispense with a dozen other books than not possess this. Once begun it will not willingly be laid aside till the last page is finished.

"HER YANKEE."

There is a long lapse of years between that time and this, but the incident has lost none of its pathos or beauty, because of that.

I can see her now as she trips along to school, a sweet girl of seven years, her sunny curls blown back from a fair forehead, her bright blue eyes glad in the innocent happiness of childhood.

It was in 1864 that there were a few prisoners of war brought to G——, for incarceration and kept here several months, well guarded.

Later Sallie passed the prison every morning on her way to school, and, with childish curiosity, though not evincing any fear, she would look at the gloomy place of confinement giving a glance commingled with pity and awe at the prisoners, peering hopelessly from the small windows of the forbidding house. The men, weary of the monotony of captivity, were glad to see the little sunbeam as it flitted by, morning and evening, though it left them in shadow.

There is one, however, pale and sick, whom the child gazed at in mute sympathy, and he in return would smile at her until once he called her, saying: "Come and bid me good morning, and tell me your name."

Attracted by his gentle manner and refined appearance, she approached and said: "My name is Sallie, and what is your name?"

"Charlie," he answered; then he said, "My dear little girl, if you have anything in your bucket please give me something to eat for I am sick and cannot eat prison fare."

"I will give it all to you, but I don't know how to get it way up there."

"Ask the guards to let you pass."

With childish confidence she went to the nearest guard, but was courteously refused, and going back, told the Yankee. He then bade her ask the guards to pass the bucket to him.

Returning to the sentinel, she said so earnestly, "Please carry this to that poor man, who is so sick," *that the Confeder*ate soldier could not resist the pleading eyes and manner, or the compassionate feelings of his own heart, and taking the lunch passed it as requested. So it continued for a week, until the child was seen coming with two buckets, one for herself, the other for "her Yankee."

She was afraid to reveal her secret at home, fearing she might be denied the privilege of feeding her Yankee, and when her mother asked her why she carried two buckets and why she chose the daintiest and best of all on the table, she replied: "Oh, mamma, it is for a good person not able to buy nice things to eat." The evasion was pardonable under the circumstances. Often did she deprive herself of delicacies to put into the "other" bucket; and so it went on for four months, the guards allowing her to pass freely, and her mother encouraging her in her charitable deed, but never dreaming who was the recipient.

At last Sallie passed one evening and the prison was empty. "Her Yankee" and his companions had been exchanged and had gone to join their respective commands. Sallie quietly stopped taking his lunches and her mother supposed she had simply become tired of it.

Four months passed, when the dread cry was heard, "the Yankees are coming!" Everybody tried to be calm and collected, but very few succeeded. Soon the town was "blue," and Sallie's mother had her front yard and porch full of the blue-coated strangers and among them two Lieutenants and one Captain. The lady had shut all her little children into the bedroom with the injunction, "Be perfectly quiet."

The captain announced that he would like to have dinner for himself and men. Pale and solemn, not afraid, but feeling that the intruders were her enemies, she left them, and going to her room to see after the children found them "mute as mice," with the exception of Sallie, who would run to the window and turn the blinds. Her mother begged and scolded in an awful whisper—"Don't do that, Sallie!" "Just a little bit, mamma. I won't let them see me," and suiting the action to the word, she turned the blind very carefully and caught a glimpse of a face that she alone of all the family, had ever seen before.

"Oh! mamma, there's my Yankee!" she exclaimed, forgetting all precautions and instructions. "Let me go and see him; I'm not a bit afraid!" The poor mother, already in a state of bewilderment, thought that her bright and beautiful child had suddenly become bereft of her senses and cried out, "Hush Sallie! You have no Yankee, and they'll kill you if you go out there!" Being compelled to superintend the dinner, she locked the door to keep the child safe and returned to the kitchen.

When dinner was ready Mrs. —— went through the room into the hall where the soldiers were assembled. Sallie slipped her golden head out and stood partly in the door, while the men, slowly and silently, marched to the dining-room. When the seventh man passed he glanced at the child, and in a moment of glad recognition, caught her up in his arms and kissed her again and again.

"Mamma, I told you this was my own Yankee!"

Mrs. —— stood in a state of amazement bordering on stupefaction, and the men were as much astonished. "This is my sweet little Sallie!" the Yankee exclaimed, and the child wound her arms around his neck whispering, "Charlie, I have that Yankee dollar you gave me yet." "Madam," said the soldier, "I must explain this scene, as you seem to be in total ignorance of my acquaintance with your little daughter. While I have never had the honor of seeing you before to-day, I am no stranger, as you see, to this dear child. She saved my life by feeding me daily for months when I was sick and feeble for want of proper nourishment while a prisoner in this town." With tears filling his eyes he continued, "Ah! you would not be surprised at my loving her if you only knew, could comprehend, the dreariness of prison life and how this little angel brightened it by her visits and her charity. Do not have any fears, madam. I would protect your interests and this child with my life.

I do not know how long the soldiers remained in G——, but they left to join other battles and Charlie was killed in one some time after.

Sallie is married, has a lovely home, two beautiful and interesting children and is a kind neighbor and friend.—Picayune.

WHAT BAKING POWDER SHALL WE USE.

This plain question comes home to every housekeeper. We all desire pure and wholesome food, and this cannot be had with the use of impure or poisonous baking powder. There can be no longer a question that all the cheaper, lower grade of baking powders contain either alum, lime or phosphatic acid. As loth as we may be to admit so much against what may have been some of our household gods, there can be no gainsaying the unanimous testimony of the official chemists. Indeed, analysts seem to find no baking powder entirely free from some one of these objectionable ingredients except the Royal, and that they report as chemically pure. We find some of the baking powders advertised as pure, to contain under the tests of Profs. Chandler, Habirshaw and others nearly twelve per cent. of lime, while others are made from alum with no cream of tartar. This, we presume, accounts for their lack of leavening power as sometimes complained of by the cook, and for the bitter taste found in the biscuits so frequently complained of by ourselves.

But aside from the inferiority of the work done by these powders, the physiologists assure us that lime and alum taken into the system in such quantities as this are injurious. They are not decomposed by heat and not dissolved in mixing or baking. They go with the bread, therefore, into the stomach where their physiological effects are indigestion, dyspepsia or worse evils.

The question naturally arises, why do these cheap baking powder makers use these things? Alum is three cents a pound, lime still cheaper, while cream of tartar costs thirty-five or forty. The reasons for the chemical purity of the Royal Baking Powder were recently given in the New York World in an interesting description of a new method for refining argols, or crude cream of tartar. It seems that it is only under this process that cream of tartar can be freed from the lime natural to it and rendered chem*ically pure; that the patents and plant* for this cost the Royal Baking Powder Company about half a million dollars, and that they maintain exclusive control of the rights.

Prof. McMurtrie, late chief chemist of the Department of Agriculture at Washington, D.C., in the interest of commerce, made an examination of this process and reported upon the results attained in the refined cream of tartar. The following extract from his report would seem to answer the question repeated at the head of this article, which we have heard so frequently propounded by our lady friends:

"I have examined the cream of tartar used by the Royal Baking Powder Company in the manufacture of their baking powder, and find it to be perfectly pure, and free from lime in any form. The chemical tests to which I have submitted the Royal Baking Powder prove it perfectly healthful, and free from every deleterious substance.

AN AMERICAN SUMMER HOTEL.

It happened to be at the Kaaterskill House—it might have been at the Grand, or the Overlook—that the young gentleman in search of information saw the Catskill season get under way. The phase of American life is much the same at all these great caravansaries. It seems to the writer, who has the greatest admiration for the military genius that can feed and fight an army in the field, that not enough account is made of the greater genius that can organize and carry on a great American hotel, with a thousand or fifteen hundred guests, in a short, sharp, and decisive campaign of two months, at the end of which the substantial fruits of victory are in the hands of the landlord, and the guests are allowed to depart with only their personal baggage and side-arms but so well pleased that they are inclined to renew the contest next year. This is a triumph of mind over mind. It is not merely the organization and the management of the army under the immediate command of the landlord, the accumulation and distribution of supplies upon this mountain-top, in the uncertainty whether the garrison on a given day will be one hundred or one thousand, not merely the lodging, rationing, and amusing of this shifting host, but the satisfying of as many whims and prejudices as there are people who leave home on purpose to grumble and enjoy themselves in the exercise of a criticism they dare not indulge in their own houses. Our friends had an opportunity of seeing the machinery set in motion in one of these great establishments. Here was a vast balloon structure, founded on a rock, but built in the air, and anchored with cables, with towers and a high-pillared veranda, capable, with its annex, of lodging fifteen hundred people. The army of waiters and chamber-maids, of bell-boys and scullions and porters and laundry-folk, was arriving; the stalwart scrubbers were at work, the store-rooms were filled, the big kitchen shone with its burnished coppers, and an array of white capped and aproned cooks stood in line under their chef; the telegraph operator was waiting at her desk, the drug clerk was arranging his bottles, the newspaper-stand was furnished, the post-office was open for letters. It needed but the arrival of a guest to set the machinery in motion. And as soon as the guest came, the band would be there to launch him into the maddening gayety of the season. It would welcome his arrival in triumphant strains; it would pursue him at dinner, and drown his conversation; it would fill his siesta with martial dreams, and it would seize his legs in the evening, and entreat him to caper in the parlor. Everything was ready. And this was what happened. It was the evening of the opening day. The train wagons might be expected any moment. The electric lights were blazing. All the clerks stood expectant, the porters were by the door, the trim uniformed bell-boys were all in waiting line, the register clerk stood fingering the leaves of the register with a gracious air. A noise is hear outside, the big door opens, there is a rush forward; and four people flock in—a man in a linen duster, a stout woman, a lad of ten, a smartly dressed young lady, and a dog. Movement, welcome, ringing of bells, tramping of feet—the whole machinery has started. It was adjusted to crack an egg-shell or smash an iron-bound trunk. The few drops presaged a shower. The next day there were a hundred on the register; the day after, two hundred; and the day following, an excursion.—Charles Dudley Warner, in Harper's Magazine for May.

PROCLAMATION BY THE GOVERNOR.

STATE OF NEW JERSEY,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

By the authority conferred on me by Joint Resolution No. 1, passed by the Legislature of this State, approved March 18, 1886, entitled "Joint Resolution in reference to pension claims of New Jersey Volunteers," I desire to announce to all concerned that the Congress of the United States, by bill approved March 19, 1886, has increased the rate of pension for widows and dependent relatives of soldiers and sailors of the late war from eight to twelve dollars per month, and that the increased allowance will be paid on the vouchers of June 4, 1886, without any application therefor on the part of pensioners.

An amendment to the pension law is now pending and will probably pass increasing the rate of pension per month to minor children from two to four dollars. I presume the same mode of payment will be followed.

A bill is also pending in Congress granting a service pension to the soldiers of the Mexican war. It will probably pass.

Any person entitled to increased pay or pension, under the above or any other acts, can obtain advice or assistance by addressing the Governor, at Trenton, in which case the Adjutant General will have the matter specially attended to at Washington without expense to the applicant.

In testimony whereof I have set my hand, and caused the great seal of the State to [L. S.] be hereunto affixed, at Trenton, this thirteenth day of April, A. D., eighteen hundred and eighty-six.

LEON ABBETT.

By the Governor,
HENRY C. KELSEY, Secretary of State.

THE URGENT WANT.

It must be apparent to every unprejudiced American citizen, rising above the haze of partisan conflict into the clear atmosphere of patriotism, that the urgent want of our country is more statesmen and fewer politicians.

The contest in Congress, and out of it, is not how to benefit the people, but how to lay plans and counter plans for the success of party and its attendant spoils of office.

That, we regret to say, is about the sum and substance of partisan politics at the present time and it certainly marks a degenerate era.

The people are growing disgusted with the selfish schemes of mousing politicians and have just cause therefor.

The odium attaches alike to both parties; it is about six of one and half a dozen of the other.

Where are the statesmen?

Is the race totally extinct?

Cannot some Congressional Clay, Calhoun, Webster, Marcy, Benton or Walker be found able and willing to strike down every kind of selfish intrigue, and intelligently elaborate and boldly advocate measures designed alone for the general public good.

That would be statesmanship.

The crying need of the day.

Senator Wm. J. Sewell has been selected as New Jersey's representative on the Republican Campaign Committee.

Jefferson Davis was tendered an enthusiastic demonstration at Montgomery, Ala., on Tuesday last, on the occasion of his visit there.

It seems to be a settled fact among the gossips that President Cleveland is to be married in June to Miss Frankie Folsom, of Buffalo. Well, why not?

Miss Cleveland declines to be interviewed as to her big brother's matrimonial intentions. This may compel the Senate to call for the papers in the case.

The demagogue and the hoodlum, who are laborers for revenue only, are the prominent figures in many of the labor strikes. Those which are controlled by the laborers themselves are few.

Monday's election in Richmond, Va., on the Prohibition question resulted in an overwhelming victory for John Barleycorn. The colored men voted solidly for untrammelled liquor traffic. The question cannot be agitated again for two years.

The residents of Dover, N. J., will no doubt be delighted to hear that their interests are not neglected by Congress. The House has passed the Senate bill granting the Morris County Railroad Company the right of way through the United States powder depot close to that place.

Edmund Wilson, member of the Democratic National Committee for Maine, died of apoplexy at Rockland, Me., Sunday evening. He was born in Limerick in 1812 and had resided in Thomaston over forty years. He was for many years a leading lawyer, but had not recently practised. He was a life-long Democrat. He served several times in the Legislature and had held many positions of trust.

The disastrous effects of the great contest between the President and the Senate so far are summed up in the rejection of six out of 2,156 nominations, and the conspicuous failure of some Republican attempts at leadership. As the policy is now adopted of considering each nomination on its merits, it requires a considerable mental effort on the part of most people to understand what the late trouble was really about.

The United States Government is the most prolific publisher in the world, having printed over 7,000 distinct works, the annual output being at this time not fewer than 4,000 titles. In the book of estimates for the next fiscal year, just sent to Congress, $1,390,231.88 is asked for wages alone. There are on the pay roll 400 compositors, besides old men and managers. Fifty proofreaders are steadily employed, besides forty-five pressmen, 115 press feeders, and thirty-four ruling machine feeders. The estimates call for 100,000 reams of printing paper, or 18,000,000 sheets.

Levi D. Jarrard, formerly of New Brunswick, died on Monday last of consumption in the State Prison at Trenton. He was perhaps one of the ablest Republican leaders of politicians which this State ever produced. Led, into politics originally against his will, he became engaged in local and State fights. His name became famous throughout the State as the man who held the Legislature in the hollow of his hand. Recently he lost money, mainly by aiding his friends. In the struggle for the County Collectorship five years ago he embezzled $30,000 from the county treasury, and in the fight he was defeated. Flight to Canada resulted in his return to New Brunswick in 1883, where he was tried for forgery and embezzlement and committed to the State Prison for ten years.

DIFFICULT INDEED.

It would be difficult to imagine any proper reason which should lead the Senate to reject the nomination of John D. Carpenter, and confirm that of Waters B. Miller, as Commissioner of the Sinking Fund. They are both ex-Senators, both earnest Democrats; both men of about equal ability and integrity. The one point of difference, which even the Senatorial eye could discern, is that both in his paper and individually Mr. Carpenter was an open, fearless opponent of the Pennsylvania Railroad legislation, opposing the entrance of the Baltimore and Ohio into this State. The Senate wears its collar with brazen effrontery, when it thus makes a man's position upon a railroad fight, the test for his selection for public office.—True American.

WHO FOR GOVERNOR?

Under this caption a writer in the New Jersey Ledger, of Jersey City, thus concludes a lengthy article on the Governorship of this State:

"But who is the man, and where can he be found, is the question of the day in the ranks of the Democracy of New Jersey? A broad, liberal minded, a deep thinker; one who has the power to conceive and to put into practical operation measures which will benefit the State? A scholarly man who knows the nature of the educational requirements of the State, and what is best adapted to its future welfare? A man who is above reproach, and who will reflect honor upon the people of New Jersey? I answer, Hon. Robert S. Green, of Elizabeth, the present Representative in Congress from the Third district. You may travel the State from Paulus Hook to the confines of Sussex county, thence to the jumping off place at Cape May, and I question whether a better man, in every respect, can be found to satisfy all the elements in the Democratic party than this gentleman. I speak now from personal observation which came under my notice while in the lower House of Congress in Washington, several days ago, and from conversations with several of the leading men connected with the Democratic party of this State, all conceding that this gentleman was the man for the times. Should the party centre upon this gentleman, I am inclined to believe they will not be disappointed. We shall see."

The number of telephones now in the United States is 325,574, while in Great Britain there are only 13,000. In other words, there are over twenty-five telephones in the United States for every one in England. There is no country which pretends to be in the front rank of civilization where telephone facilities are so limited as in England and Scotland.

The terms of eight Senators expire with this Congress. They are Hale, of Maine; Edmunds, of Vermont; Dawes, of Massachusetts; Aldrich, of Rhode Island; Hawley, of Connecticut; Miller, of New York; Sewell, of New Jersey, and Mitchell, of Pennsylvania. They embrace all the old free States east of Ohio except New Hampshire. These eight Senators are all Republicans.

Under the present laws the Sheriffs have absolute control and care of prisoners confined in county jails. During the session of the Legislature a bill was introduced which provided for the appointment of Jail Wardens under the supervision of the Freeholders, virtually giving the latter authority in the management of prisoners. This bill was stoutly opposed by the Sheriffs. It passed both branches of the Legislature but was vetoed by the Governor.

The jury in the Janeway suit against the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, after being out all night, brought in a verdict last Saturday morning for $179,806.89. The Janeways had sued for $209,889.69, to recover losses from the burning of their factory at New Brunswick in 1883. The fire was caused by a collision of trains on the railroad bridge across the river at that city. Oil cars took fire from the collision and caused great loss of property and life.

The appointment of John H. Patterson, of Monmouth, to be Keeper of the State Prison, in place of Mr. Laverty, was unanimously confirmed by the State Senate on the 23d ult. He is a well-to-do farmer of Monmouth county, and has held several important political positions. For several years he was Sheriff of that county and since then has been a doorkeeper in the House of Representatives at Washington. In 1872 he ran against Amos Clark, Jr., for Congress in this district, and was defeated. For Commissioner of the Sinking Fund the Governor nominated ex-Senator John Carpenter, of Hunterdon, editor of the Clinton Democrat. His name was rejected, 9 to 11. It is understood that Senator Large, of the same county, opposed the nomination strenuously. The Governor being informed of the Senate's action, at once sent in the name of ex-Senator Waters B. Miller, of Cape May, for the same position, and he was confirmed, 12 to 6. The nomination of James F. Connelly, of Newark, for a member of the State Board of Assessors, sent in by the Governor some time ago, was not acted upon.

The article in the New York World of Tuesday, relating to the Governorship and Congressional candidates, and which the Elizabeth Herald says had its origin in a shoe store of that city, and was the result of a conference between two limbs of the law and one enthusiastic scribbler, calls forth the following remarks from the Herald:

"We speak advisedly when we say that Mr. Green has not sought nor will he seek the Gubernatorial nomination by any act of his own. Like the Congressional nomination given him, such an honor must come unsought and untainted, and even then we are not certain that he would accept it, unless he believed that the true interests of his party and the election of a Democratic U. S. Senator demanded that he should, as a Democrat, guided purely by principle, consent to make the sacrifice. Robert S. Green is not the man to enter into a 'dicker' with Miles Ross or anybody else for the end stated by the World, and the scribbler who intimates it surely knows nothing of the true character of the man he thus foolishly assails. In the first place, Mr. Ross does not desire to return to Congress; and, in the second instance, by Democratic usage, Mr. Green is entitled to a second term, which there is no doubt that he will be awarded by the Democracy of this district. The attempt to make Mr. Green an aspirant for the chief magistracy of the State through intrigue, as the World article insinuates, comes from a class of plotting machine politicians in this city whose opposition is much better to have than their favor, and those who know the character of the 'strikers' engaged in such representations know what we write. We would advise these would-be perturbers of party harmony to get down and out of their questionable attitude, for they are sure to be 'left.'"

CALL FOR THE REDEMPTION OF BONDS.

The Acting Secretary of the Treasury has issued the one hundred and thirty-sixth call for the redemption of bonds of the three per cent. loan of 1882. The call is for $10,000,000, and notice is given that the principal and accrued interest will be paid at the Treasury of the United States, in the City of Washington, D. C., on the 1st day of June, 1886, and that the interest will cease on that day. Following are descriptions of the bonds:

Three per cent. bonds issued under the act of Congress approved July 12, 1882, and numbered as follows: $50, original number 271 to original number 274, both inclusive.

One hundred dollars, original number 2,007 to original number 2,048, both inclusive, and original number 9,917 to original number 9,921, both inclusive.

Five hundred dollars, original number 908 to original number 921, both inclusive, and original number 4,219 to original number 4,223, both inclusive.

One thousand dollars, original number 7,336 to original number 7,659, both inclusive, and original number 23,712 to original number 23,719, both inclusive.

One thousand dollars, original number 13,625 to original number 14,596, both inclusive; total, $10,000,000.

The bonds described above are either bonds of the "original" issue, which have but one serial number at each end, or "substitute" bonds, which may be distinguished by the double set of numbers, which are marked plainly "original numbers" and "substitute numbers."

The latest name that has been added to the list of possible candidates for the Democratic nomination for Governor is that of Judge John Clement, of Camden.

To the disgruntled Democrats who talk about boycotting the administration for not giving them all the offices, the Washington Post propounds this conundrum: "Is it better or wiser to vote Republicans into office because Democratic officials do not turn them out fast enough?" Biting one's nose off is never satisfying as a steady diet.

Some disgruntled politician, or enemy of Hon. Robert S. Green, has been using the columns of the New York World, to place the name of that gentleman in an unfavorable light with the public, regarding his possible nomination for the Governorship of this State. The writer endeavors to make it appear that there is a bargain between Judge Green and Hon. Miles Ross for the nomination of the former for Governor and the latter for Congress. We know that such assertion is untrue. Judge Green does not desire the nomination for Governor, and would make no personal effort to secure the honor. The people, however, who know his sterling worth, are daily becoming more emphatic in their allusions to him as the proper man to nominate for such position, while the Democratic press of the State are unanimous in expressions that he is the right man for the party's standard bearer in the next Gubernatorial fight. While he has repeatedly declared that he does not desire a re-nomination for Congressional honors, we are among those who think that he should be returned to Congress where he has proven himself such a worthy and true representative of the people. In case of his nomination for either position, Robert S. Green would be triumphantly elected, despite the efforts of his opponents, either political or personal.

What the Governor Can Do.

The Legislature left a large number of unsigned bills in the hands of Governor Abbett when it took its recess. It is reported that the Governor has consulted the Attorney General, who advises him that he is not obliged by law (in view of the fact that it is a recess, not an adjournment of the Legislature,) to act upon these bills within thirty days after he has received them. The Attorney General holds "that the Governor can keep all bills that he declines to approve until the end of the recess and the reassembling of the Legislature, and then communicate to that body the reasons for his actions in the usual form of a veto message.

Brisk Work at Lake Hopatcong.

The Big Hotel Breslin at Lake Hopatcong is going up with wonderful rapidity. A large force of men has been at work and on Monday forty additional mechanics arrived. At that time one wing was framed and ready for the roof, and the remainder was well along in the process of framing.

Mr. G. L. Bryant, Superintendent of the High Bridge Branch, has purchased of H. W. Courtright a fine site at Nolan's Point, for $2,000. This is supposed to be the first step in the direction of a hotel for fishermen and others at that prominent point.

Mr. Henry Weitzel, of Dover, has a lease for six years on the Brooklyn House, at the outlet of the Lake. The location of the Forcite powder works and the increasing lake patronage makes it a valuable stand.

Mr. Headley, the boat builder, expects soon to begin work on a fine barge for Lotta, the actress.—Iron Era.

A Batch of New Bills.

Governor Abbett has signed the following bills the past week:

Senate—178, limits trial to bring action upon forfeited recognizances in criminal cases to ten years; 208, creating vacancies in certain offices when the occupants have been or may hereafter be ordered by a Judge of the Circuit Court to be confined in a lunatic asylum; 226, gives the Governor, Comptroller and Treasurer power to pledge the State securities to provide moneys for the use of the school fund whenever a majority of them decide it necessary; 197, revising, consolidating and amending certain acts concerning Boards of Health in the State.

Assembly—18, providing that bills against counties shall be approved by the Board of Freeholders before the County Clerk shall pay the same; 14, appropriating $500 to each regiment and battery from New Jersey engaged at Gettysburg for the purpose of properly marking the positions occupied by them, and $1,000 where regiments were brigaded together in each brigade; 133, prohibits persons now residents of the State for six months from planting oysters in Raritan bay for private use under a penalty of $500 fine or a year's imprisonment; 137, appropriating $225,000 to rebuild the State House; 215, enabling the Lunacy Committee of the Board of Freeholders to employ physicians and nurses outside the State; 436, empowering Boards of Freeholders in counties having no hospital to appropriate $1,000 annually for the support and maintenance of county patients in private hospitals.

The following was filed without the Governor's signature: Senate 323, provides renewals of charters of insurance companies; Assembly 148, extending the provisions of the law relating to the improvement of streets, etc., so as to include moneys raised for the opening of streets and the construction of sewers; 456, the incidental bill.

The Westfield Road Case.

The celebrated North avenue road case of Westfield township occupied the attention of the court in the Common Pleas at Elizabeth Friday morning last. Three classes were represented by counsel. City Attorney Bergen appeared for the township, Mr. Bolton, formerly of Westfield, appeared for the plaintiff, and Mr. Nicholas C. J. English for the parties who were personally interested. North avenue was laid out a year or more ago and assessments were laid on the property of those persons whom it benefited. They claimed that about $800 too much had been put upon them, and they asked for a re-assessment, and that this $800 be placed upon the township. The officials of the township objected to this, and the case was taken into the courts. After able arguments had been made by the representing counsel, it was arranged that the surveyors meet next Friday at Westfield to reopen the case for re-assessments. It seems there is also an obstruction in the shape of a barn, and it was used in the argument of Mr. Bergen to show that the road is a nuisance, but it did not have the desired effect, as it was clearly shown that the road was a benefit and a necessity.

Our Heat and Power.

We are justly and naturally proud of the thorough system of heating by steam, and the complete apparatus therefor, that has been recently erected for us in the basement of the Chautauqua building. The entire construction has been under the charge of Mr. C. E. Jacques, the architect, of this city, and from the time the boilers were selected and ordered until the time the steam was turned into all the floors of the building, and THE CONSTITUTIONALIST presses and steam pumps worked together, his attention to the details of the work has been unremitting. Mr. George Killian had charge of the piping and fitting and the connecting of the boiler with the radiators, the engine and the pump. These connections are so systematized that any room or office in the whole building can be shut off or turned on from the boiler room below the sidewalk. As this is the largest steam heating plant in the city, numbers of visitors (who are very welcome at all times) drop in and inspect the work. Director Martine and Freeholders Oliver and Vanderbeek of the Union County Board, recently took a tour of examination through the building and expressed themselves in admiration and endorsement of the whole construction.

Fashionable Wedding.

A fashionable wedding took place last Wednesday night at Elizabeth. The contracting parties were Miss Nellie I. Sheridan, daughter of County Collector Patrick Sheridan, and Mr. C. O'Callaghan, a resident of Elizabeth. The bride was attired in bronze rademal satin, with velvet brocade and corsage of flowers. The bridesmaid, Miss O'Callaghan, a sister of the groom, was dressed in brown satin, with velvet brocade and corsage of flowers. The best man was John M. Sheridan, brother of the bride. The ceremony took place at St. Mary's Roman Catholic Church, Rev. Father Thebaud officiating. A reception was afterwards held at the residence of the bride, No. 124 Race street. A splendid collation was served after the reception. Music, singing and dancing were indulged in, the festivities lasting until midnight. The presents were very numerous, and nearly filled a large room. Many rare and valuable gifts were among the collection. The happy couple started on an extended bridal tour on Thursday.

Among the guests were Judge and Mrs. McCormick, Capt. and Mrs. W. H. Gill, Sheriff and Mrs. G. W. Stiles, City Treasurer, J. W. Whelan, Gen. J. M. Drake, Mayor Jos. H. Grier, Surrogate Gerber, Councilman Smith, Mr. and Mrs. W. Moore, Plainfield; Freeholders Astfalk and Oliver, Director C. W. L. Martine, Fanwood; ex-Freeholder and Mrs. J. J. Donohue, F. W. Ward, Chief Jenkins, Dr. J. S. Green, Mr. and Mrs. P. J. Ryan, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Ryan, Lewis A. Dunn and wife, Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Kelly, Mr. and Mrs. Brady, Plainfield; J. P. Benson and wife, New York; Mrs. Hughes and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Fitzpatrick, New York; School Commissioner E. G. Putnam, Mr. and Mrs. Muldoon, Plainfield; Mr. and Mrs. P. Tuite, Wm. Whelan and a number of others.

WESTFIELD WISPS.

Cyrus P. Wilcox, of Quimby street, was the happy father of a daughter on Tuesday last.

On Saturday last Thomas Hislop, while at work in repairing a well, fell into it, but escaped injury except a skinned face. A very lucky fall.

On Tuesday last Auctioneer Marsh sold the house and lands at executor's sale of the late William H. Little, at Branch Mills. It was sold to close the estate to George E. Kerr of Newark, N. J.

The town committee met on Wednesday evening last and transacted considerable business of importance in township affairs.

A resolution was passed, and suggestions made to the overseer of road district No. 8 that he fix and repair the sidewalks in the district in the early Spring, instead of waiting until late in the Fall, or until he has done all the farming work. As yet nothing has been done by the overseer in obedience to the resolution and suggestions, and there is considerable talk about it among our residents and taxpayers.

On Friday last the Court of Common Pleas made an order that the Surveyors of Highway who laid out the extension of North avenue, from Central avenue to Elmer street last Fall, to which a caveat had been filed against recording the returns, that the Surveyors meet at the Westfield hotel on Friday, April 30, at 10 a. m., to correct and amend said returns, as they had made an error in making the assessments of benefits and damages at their last meeting; under the instructions from the court, they have a right to change the lines of the road, also the assessments for benefits and damages. The Surveyors are Albert A. Drake and Sherman Cooper of Westfield; Frank Hosslinger and E. M. Johnson of Fanwood; Albert W. Moffett and Samuel Smith of Clark. This is a road which is considered by a number of our residents of our town as a great public benefit, and no doubt at their meeting to-day there will be considerable interest taken in the action of the Surveyors of Highway.

On Saturday evening last the residents of that portion of our town near the depot, were disturbed in their slumbers by the action of a number of drunken men, which consisted principally of those who cannot get any intoxicating liquor at our hotel or saloons, but have some one run the "growler" for them, even in going to the distilleries in Fanwood township for their supply of applejack, together with the purchase of a box of beer, making their headquarters on the bridge near the depot. If the persons who heard the offensive remarks, cursing and swearing, also fighting, would make a complaint if they know the names of the parties, before either of the Justices of the Peace, the guilty ones would no doubt be sentenced for thirty or sixty days to breaking stone at Elizabeth. There is a rumor that we are soon to have a lock-up in our town. If it should be the fact in the near future, it probably would be apt to deter those who make it a practice of disturbing the quiet of the neighborhood from so doing. There is not one of them but had rather be locked up in Elizabeth ten days, than one day in their own town.

"Blood Will Tell."

We are in receipt of late Montgomery, Alabama, papers, which contain accounts of a brilliant firemen's parade in that city, on Wednesday, April 21st. Among the "parade paragraphs" we notice that "Master Robert E. Lee turned out wit Lomax No. 4 yesterday." This alludes to the young son of Mr. John E. Lee, a former resident of this city, and evidences that "Robbie" has the blood of his sire in him. Mr. Lee was one of Plainfield's prominent firemen in the days of the Department's infancy.

From Pole to Pole
AYER'S SARSAPARILLA has demonstrated its power of cure for all diseases of the blood.
The Harpooner's Story.
New Bedford, June 1, 1883.
DR. J. C. AYER & CO.—Twenty years ago I was a harpooner in the North Pacific, when five others of the crew and myself were laid up with scurvy. Our bodies were bloated, gums swollen and bleeding, teeth loose, purple blotches all over us, and our breath seemed rotten. Take it by and large we were pretty badly off. All our lime-juice was accidentally destroyed, but the captain had a couple dozen bottles of AYER'S SARSAPARILLA and gave us that. We recovered on it quicker than I have ever seen men brought about by any other treatment for Scurvy, and I've seen a good deal of it. Seeing no mention in your Almanac of your Sarsaparilla being good for scurvy, I thought you ought to know of this, and so send you the facts.
Respectfully yours, RALPH V. WINGATE.
The Trooper's Experience.
Masera, Basutoland (S. Africa,) March 2, 1883.
DR. J. C. AYER & CO.—Gentlemen: I have much pleasure to testify to the great value of your Sarsaparilla. We have been stationed here for over two years, during which time we had to live in tents. Being under canvas for such a time brought on what is called in this country "veldt-sores." I had those sores for some time. I was advised to take your Sarsaparilla, two bottles of which made my sores disappear rapidly, and I am now quite well.
Yours truly, T. E. BODEN,
Trooper, Cape Mounted Riflemen.

The "PERFECTION," All Porcelain.

WE TAKE pleasure in calling attention of our customers and all interested in sanitary matters to the all porcelain "Perfection," the only square top Hopper with trap, made.—For perfect cleanliness and simplicity of construction we invite comparison with any Cistern Closet ever manufactured, either home or foreign. It combines, with the utmost simplicity, all the points of a strictly first-class water-closet. The square top will make itself apparent to all users, in doing away with drip tray, the washout all times thoroughly scouring all parts, whereas in the drip tray it cannot help but become foul underneath. It has a seal in Trap of 1½ inches, and the soil pipe vent of 2 inches diameter, as will be seen in the above cut, will prevent all syphoning of Trap. The two local or seat vents of 1½ inches diameter are intended for right or left ventilation, the one not being used to be closed. The large handhole in front gives free access to all parts of trap.

IT is said to have been discovered by science that the wind always moves in a circle, but no explanation has been made as to how it happens that when the playful zephyrs seize a man's hat they always (or nearly so) make a shoot for the nearest mud puddle or other place that has no claims upon it.

THE display of flowers at Grace church, last Sunday, surpassed that of any other. There were calla and ascension lilies by the hundreds, besides set pieces and other flowers in great profusion. The display, and its arrangement, was under the supervision of Mrs. Rowland Cox, Mrs. E. T. Low and Mrs. F. O. Herring.

WE understand that it is proposed to locate an electric lamp at the depot, and there is no doubt that one is needed at that point more than any other; but possibly the railroad company can be persuaded to incur such expense for the accommodation of its patrons, and the city will thus save a lamp for some other location.

THERE is yet so much to be done towards the inward completion of the Sixth street primary school, that it will not be opened this Spring unless for the purpose of organizing the classes just before the commencement of the Summer vacation. Most of the furniture has arrived, but as the walls are being kalsomined the desks and benches cannot be put in position.

THE Bicycle Club's entertainment to take place during the evening of Monday, May 10th, promises to be unusually enjoyable. Its many features will be rather different from those of the late Tournament, but none the less attractive and satisfying. The club now numbers fifty members, and all hands working willingly for the success of the affair will achieve it.

AN attendance of about three hundred ladies and children enjoyed themselves at the Easter Monday matinee at The Crescent. The floor was, as usual, perfect and the band an improvement on that of the past. Everybody skated, and as they kept up the exercise and enjoyment until six o'clock closed the session, it was evident that the pleasures of roller skating had not faded away.

THE music for the last of the Vocals, to be given Thursday evening, May 13th, is especially attractive. The trios, duetts, soli and choruses of Athalia, cannot be excelled in tunefulness and grandeur. This may be the very last concert this society will ever give—its existence as at present organized may cease—and consequently it proposes to expire in glory, and with orchestral accompaniment.

THE basement under the Post Office has been thoroughly renovated and refitted in a tasteful manner for restaurant use. JAMES J. TITUS, the janitor of the Methodist Institute, at Hackettstown, where Tillie Smith was recently found murdered, has been arrested, charged with the crime. Dr. Whitney, President of the Institute, who is leaving no stone unturned to ferret out the guilty party who caused Tillie's death, is a son-in-law of P. M. French, Esq., of this city.

BESIDE and besides the wealth of flowers from the conservatories of John Taylor Johnston, Esq., and other members of the Crescent avenue congregation that buried the pulpit of that church last Sunday in fragrance, were a number of expensive and extensive thank offerings by a member who had just recovered from the effects of a railroad accident that might easily have been fatal.

COMMISSIONER Wm. H. Brower, the new Treasurer of the Board of Managers of the Plainfield Fire Department, has appointed Mr. F. A. Dunham as his deputy to collect the taxes due and belonging to the Department. Mr. Brower proposes that the taxes shall be collected; and that Mr. Dunham is the man that can do it was proven by his successful service to the city in the same relation.

THE encore fiend at Music Hall, Monday evening, demanded the repetition of that old chestnut song—"The flowers that tral la"—so often, the company imagined itself in a field of buckwheat, where no one had heard anything fresher than "Home, Sweet Home." No one would discover how "country" we are about some things, if we didn't give ourselves away by applauding a rank singer with a stale song.

IT was thought necessary to arrange for four services during the two days that Messrs. Moody and Sankey are to be in Plainfield, in order to accommodate the crowds that will gather to hear them—one service for Saturday evening, one Sunday morning at nine o'clock, and others during the afternoon and evening of the same day. If The Crescent is rented, however, the entire population of this city, and the hundreds that will flock from out of town, can be comfortably accomodated during three meetings.

A COMMITTEE of former pupils of Dr. Pingry's school at Elizabeth, are arranging for suitable and appropriate exercises to be held in Library Hall, that city, during Friday evening, June 18th, in celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of Dr. Pingry's career as a teacher. A testimonial fund is being raised for the purpose, and surely among the pupils of Rev. Mr. Pingry in this city, there are many that might desire to contribute to the cause. All subscriptions should be sent to Mr. W. F. Thompson, Cashier First National Bank, Elizabeth.

Then reflect that it may not be long before you may want some favor again."

PIERRE LORILLARD, JR., and Floyd Jones, both of the Carteret Gun Club, of Hudson county, will each shoot at 100 birds at the Westminster Kennel Club Grounds, Long Island, on Saturday. The match is for $1,000 a side, five traps, Hurlingham rules, the birds to be supplied by opponents and to be shot at 30-yards rise. It will be a deciding contest between the two men, each of whom stands high in amateur ranks and will be witnessed by a large number of spectators. On the first shoot between the two men Lorillard won by a score of 93 to 91, Jones winning the second contest by a score of 90 to 87.

Easter Election.

The following persons were elected church wardens, etc., at the annual meeting in Grace church on Easter Monday night: Wardens—Messrs. Dumont and Clark. Vestrymen—Messrs. Low, Erickson, Waring, Finch, Fleming, Ames, Cock. Delegates to Convention—Messrs. Dumont, Clark and Lowe. Alternates—Messrs. Erickson, Cock and Finch. To Convocation—E. B. Clark, Esq. The Treasurer reported receipts for past year to have been $8,040. Received by Guild $886. From other sources $183. Total $9 109.

Easter.

Last Sunday was Easter, a day observed among all Christian people as the anniversary of the great event of the resurrection of Christ. He was dead but returned to life. The egg is taken as emblematic of a return to life. It is to all appearance dead, but we know that when placed under proper conditions life will come forth from it. The use of eggs at Easter was adopted from an usage older than our era. It was the custom in very early times to celebrate the return of spring by making presents of eggs. Appropriate sermons were delivered in all our churches, and the bright flowers of Spring adorned the pulpits.

A Bold Swindler.

A well dressed gentleman (in appearance) visited Rahway on Monday last, having in his possession a check for $32.60, containing the signature of Cornelius H. Miller, a well-known and responsible citizen of that city. He called on numerous business men for the purpose of having the same cashed, telling a very plausible story that Mr. Miller had promised the amount in cash, but instead, had given a check. After calling on several business men without success, he finally called on Mr. Gibby, [illegible] dealer on Cherry street, who, knowing Mr. Miller well, readily cashed the check, when the stranger at once went to the depot and took the first train out, and, strange to say, Mr. Miller arrived in Rahway on the same train on which the bold swindler made his departure. Mr. Miller was at once made known of the facts and pronounced the check a forgery, but the forger made good his escape and Mr. Gibby is out just $32.60. The man was well dressed, apparently about thirty years of age, and no doubt is an old offender.

Personalia.

Halsey DeCamp, the aged uncle of H. H. and Alonzo DeCamp died suddenly at Chester last week.

Hiram H. DeCamp, of Chester, paid a flying visit to this city on Tuesday. "High's" many friends were glad to see him.

The little daughter of Mr. Henry B. Newhall of Seventh street, aged seven and one-half years, died during yesterday morning of diphtheria.

Ex-Councilman Jasper G. Cadmus and wife start on Friday for an extended trip through New York and Western States, intending to be absent the summer season.

Mr. John Russell Marsh of Westfield, spent yesterday with his aunt, Mrs. Jas. H. Searing of West Front street. He didn't have much to say, but he seemed pleased with Plainfield as a place of residence.

Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Robertson of Emily street, North Plainfield, who are both so dangerously sick with typhoid fever, were reported to be slightly better, yesterday, but there is yet little hope of their recovery.

Mr. William Corey, son-in-law of the late S. O. Horton, of North Plainfield, arrived here on Sunday last from his place of business, Bisbee, Arizona, proposing to spend some weeks among us. Mr. Corey is a native of Plainfield, but went to Arizona some twenty years ago to try his fortune. He is connected with a large mercantile house in Bisbee, which pays monthly about $16,000 in wages to the workmen of the Copper Queen Mining Company, in which they have an interest. Mr. Corey is a sound Cleveland Democrat, and alludes with pride to the fact that he was the first Secretary of the first Democratic Convention ever held in Arizona Territory, in 1868.

A Revival By Ticket.

Just when the people of the city and its vicinity are rejoicing over a promised opportunity of hearing the great revivalists Moodey and Sankey, and the christian community feels that the populace is to be awakened and great good is to follow the efforts of the evangelists here, we learn that it has been decided by those in charge to hold the meetings in small places with admission by ticket.

We feel sure such intention will be reconsidered before the date of the meetings. Messrs. Moodey and Sankey would be disappointed to find on arrival that instead of preaching in a building available, that will accommodate thousands, and where a chorus of hundreds made up from the choirs of the churches can ring out the glad tidings free to all, they were to conduct their labors in cramped quarters where only a chosen few can hear them, and that those only possessing a ticket of admission could receive the gospel and join in holding the fort.

The Crescent contains seats for almost two thousands. The loose chairs and, if necessary, the school benches from the different churches, could be moved in and thousands more accommodated. There would be no expense whatever in providing seats for all, and the other expenses that might arise in thus meeting the desires of the people, and holding the meetings where all could attend, would amount to but a small proportion when divided among the many churches of the city.

Who'll Be Chief?

As Mr. Andrew Jennings, the present efficient Chief of the Plainfield Fire Department, will not accept the position for another year in spite of his unanimous choice by the entire membership of the Department, it is just now a matter of deep calculation and speculation as to who is best fitted for the office among those who will accept. There are a number ready to step into Chief Jennings' honored shoes. Who will it be?

Sudden Death.

Mr. Jacob Irving, an old resident of Plainfield, died suddenly while at work in his garden adjoining his residence on Second street, above Peace, Tuesday morning last. Mr. Irving has been a sufferer for years from dropsical complaint. The funeral will take place today (Friday) from the residence of his son-in-law, Mr. A. E. Bushnell, No. 12 West Front street. Mr. Irving was highly respected by the community, and his sudden death was a shock to them as well as his immediate relatives and family. He was in his 78th year.

Joseph Jefferson.

Wednesday evening of next week, Mr. Joseph Jefferson will appear at Music Hall in two plays that will serve to illustrate his versatility and show his ability outside of his own particular creation of "Rip Van Winkle." Associated with him are a list of actors and actresses of much talent, the principal of the former being "Mr. Edwin Varrey," who is known in North Plainfield, where he resides, under his real name of Phillips. He is an artist worthy the position of Mr. Jefferson's support, and his scores of friends and admirers in the vicinity will be glad of this opportunity of hearing him and flocking to fill the house with which he will be favored.

Travels in the Orient.

Dr. Stephen Hasbrouck, who has lately returned from an extensive tour in the East, will deliver a course of four illustrated lectures on his travels in the Orient, at Music Hall on the dates and subjects set forth in his advertisement elsewhere. Each lecture is illustrated by over eighty views collected by the Doctor in his travels, and are unsurpassed of their kind.

The Rev. C. W. Millard, the head of the C. L. S. C., at Yonkers, N. Y., thus speaks of the lecturer in a private letter to a prominent clergyman of this city:

> "Allow me to introduce my esteemed friend, Dr. Stephen Hasbrouck. He is a prominent and successful physician and surgeon in the City of Yonkers. He has been invited to give his illustrated lectures in Plainfield. They received here the warmest kind of commendation. Dr. Hasbrouck is neither a tramp, crank, sham nor bore, but an accomplished gentleman who has traveled extensively, observed carefully and gathered pictures of very great merit and fascination."

The "Original" Mikado.

Templeton's company in the "Mikado" appeared again to a full-to-overflowing house at Music Hall, Monday evening, and emphasized its success of the past. Since its first introduction to a Plainfield audience it has lost the efforts of Mr. William Seymour as "Ko-Ko," but Mr. Kirtland Calhoun, after recovering from the embarrassment of his "first night with the company," did the best he could to make something of the part. Miss Starr as "Piti Sing" was fuller of life than ever, and Miss Lucille Meredith (?) was just as cute a "Yum-Yum" as could be desired under the circumstances. Mr. George Broderick is the finest "Pooh-Bah" on the stage, and Mr. Jay Taylor is as good a tenor though possibly a stiffer "Nanki-Pooh" than any of the others. Mr. William Gulberson gave a most painstaking interpretation of the small part of "Pish Tush," and Mr. Harris in quantity and quality completely filled the office of "Mikado." Miss Baker again proved herself to be a thorough and satisfactory "Katisha."

Bicycle Road Rules.

The Plainfield Bicycle Club is ordered out for a drill, by its captain, for to-morrow evening at seven o'clock at the corner Park avenue and Ninth street. From the drill tactics recently compiled expressly for the use of the Club, we gather the following introductory remarks: "The members should thoroughly acquaint themselves with the different movements and when riding with the Club strictly observe the rules. They should also attend drills, as actual practice is necessary to properly execute the movements. On a Club run no member should on any account, ride ahead of the commanding officer, without his request or permission. The members should have enough confidence in the road officers to allow them to direct the movements of the Club, without too many suggestions or too much gratuitous advice from the ranks. The Captain will ride at the head of the column. The Lieutenant will ride in the rear except when riding by divisions, when he will command the second division. The Bugler and Color Bearer will ride together directly behind the Captain."

$25,000 Damages.

The suit of Mr. William Alberti of this city against the New York, Lake Erie and Western Railroad Company for $50,000 damages has been dragging itself through the Supreme Court in session at Newburgh, N. Y. Mr. Alberti is one of the best known and most popular of our young men, and his wife the talented elocutionist is greatly admired by all. While sitting up in his berth in an Erie sleeping car, on July 24, 1885, as the train was passing through Oxford the loose door of a runaway freight car on another track struck against his window and parts of it came in the car and injured him severely. His injuries, which are many and varied, are claimed to be of a permanent nature, and he is unable to appear at the trial. The best of legal talent is engaged on both sides. The Railroad company in the beginning offered to settle by paying $500, and subsequently raised to $10,000. Mr. Alberti's refusal to compromise the matter and his determination to recover more, is just. His injuries may prove fatal, and in any case he will never be fit for business duties again. On Tuesday last, the Court awarded him $25,000 damages with the usual allowance.

The Sunday School of the Holy Cross.

The Sunday School exercises in the Church of the Holy Cross, during the afternoon of Sunday last, were unusually interesting. The number of scholars was 110, which shows a continued increase over past months. These all assembled in the church at four o'clock, and were addressed by their Superintendent, Mr. Charles Wann. A certificate of honor had been promised each scholar who should not be absent a single Sunday during the year, and with many graceful and appropriate words of praise from Mr. Wann for those who had been victorious in the warm contest that resulted, the certificates were presented to these five successful ladies: Miss Lavenia Weston, Miss Lulu Abery, Miss Julia I. Philpitt, and Miss Annie and Lizzie Hasbrouck. The Superintendent then made honorable mention of those who had only missed from one to four Sundays during the year, in spite of storms and temperature; they were the Misses Annie Murphy, Edith Clapp, Cora Mooney, Ella Whittaker and Sarah Kiernan, and Messrs. Jas. Mooney, Arthur Murphy, Charley Dupee, Carl Brown, Frank Perry and George Weston. The Easter offering of the children was very gratifying and in excess of that of the year before. It amounted to $61.54, and the church offering was $314.

Our New City Directory.

Our new City Directory this year offers great inducements to our merchants as an advertising medium, as it will contain a new and choice selection of attractive cuts, representing all branches of trade. The work is to be thoroughly revised by several of our oldest citizens before going to press, and it is hoped in that way to make it the first thorough and reliable work of this kind ever presented to the people of Plainfield. Too much care cannot be exercised in giving the information to the canvasser when he calls, for we should bear in mind that it depends on us as well as the publishers to have a correct work.

Holy Cross Election.

At the annual election of the Church of the Holy Cross, of North Plainfield, held last Monday, the following officers were elected for the coming year. The only change in the list of Vestrymen was caused by the retirement of Mr. Isaac Yawger, whose place of honor was filled by the unanimous choice of Mr. Charles Wann: Wardens—W. Rockhill Potts, George Prentice Dupee. Vestrymen—Mason W. Tyler, J. J. Henderson, Judson A. Brown, Walter Scott, Chas. J. Taggart, E. C. Woltman, Charles Wann. Delegates to Diocesan Convention—W. Rockhill Potts, William J. Leonard, P. B. Matthews. Alternates—Frank S. Browne, Hill Long, A. E. Faber, jr.

Fire Board Meeting.

The Board of Managers of the Plainfield Fire Department met in adjourned meeting, Friday evening of last week; all present. In the absence of Deputy Clark Streer, City Clerk Merritt occupied such position. Engine Co. No. 2 presented a set of By-Laws that were approved by the Board. Engine Co. No. 3 applied for exemption papers for Messrs. John Schenck and John Becker, and the Board instructed its Secretary to examine the records of the applicants' membership and issue the certificates if proper. A number of bills were ordered paid when funds for the purpose should be in the Treasurer's hands. The following Standing Committees were appointed by the President: Finance—Commissioners Knowland, Cotter and Livingston. Repairs and Supplies—Commissioners Cotter, McClure and Brower. Wells—Commissioners Cotter and Brower. No. 3 reported that its suction was rotten and not fit for service, and the matter was referred to the Committee on Repairs and Supplies. The President was authorized to make the necessary repairs in No. 2's stables. He also reported that a new boiler could be put in No. 1's Steamer at a cost of $850; and on motion a Committee consisting of Commissioners Knowland and Livingston was appointed to learn at what price a new Steamer could be purchased, and what might be obtained for the old one. On motion a resolution was adopted instructing the Assessor to assess a tax of twenty-five cents on each one hundred dollars of property within the fire limits; and the President and Treasurer was authorized to borrow $3,500 in anticipation of the collection of taxes. New wheels were ordered purchased for No. 1's Steamer, and the Board adjourned.

Some New Residents.

The following are a few of the new residents that Spring has brought or is to bring to this city:

THOUGHTS OF JOSIE.

DEDICATED TO MR. AND MRS. A. L. FORCE.

The darkest hour of the morning
  Is just before the day,
And trials are sent in mercy
  To clear our doubts away.

We enter the cloud of sorrow,
  In anguish and repining,
Pass through it; and in the morrow
  We see the silver lining.

A storm sweeps over the landscape,
  And left a rainbow bright;
Live through this night of trouble,
  To-morrow it shall be bright.

Some day when the Lord shall call you,
  And the river of death be crossed,
You shall meet your darling Josie,
  The little girl you've lost.

And yet, not lost, but only
  Gone on a little before,
To wait for father, mother and sister,
  On the bright celestial shore.

—By Mrs. J. B. H.

Wedding Bells.

The marriage of Mr. A. E. Ahrens, L. D. S., of Stratford, Ont., to Miss Isabella Day, second daughter of Stanley Day, Esq., was consummated at New Market on Wednesday, April 21, and caused no small degree of excitement, especially among the fair sex. It was the topic of conversation for days and weeks prior to the event. The young lady is esteemed as a universal favorite. Her bright smile, cheerful, unaffected manner and invariable kindness of heart, has endeared her to all classes of the community. It is a pity the marriage was not solemnized in the church instead of being private. The crowded church would have shown the enthusiasm created and the popularity and esteem in which she is held. As it was they preferred a quiet wedding, only the immediate friends being invited. Showers of rice were heaped on them in token of universal benediction and good will as they wended their way to the railway station, where they took the train for Washington, to spend a brief honeymoon before returning to their future home in Canada. It is customary to say that the presents were numerous and costly. In this instance it is true that the tables and piano upon which the wedding gifts were displayed was a vision of delight. If the popularity of the bride be estimated by the number and character of the gifts, then is she indeed to be congratulated. The spread that took place after the ceremony was excellent, and the guests departed much pleased with the cordiality of the reception. The bride's dress was white satin, cut en traine, trimmed with Egyptian lace. The bride was given away by her father. The bridesmaids were Miss Lizzie Day, sister of the bride, and Miss Lizzie Thomas, of New York. The groomsmen were James and Charles Day, brothers of the bride.

Among the company present were R. Ruschman, Berlin, Ont.; C. E. Mosher, Miss Lizzie Thomas, Mr. and Mrs. S Max Ersline, New York; Miss Nellie Gale, Wm. Read, Jersey City; Prof. and Mrs. Bartow, Bound Brook; Mr. and Mrs. James Adair, Frank Adair, Somerville; Mrs. Williams, Mr. and Mrs. N. W. Pike, Mrs. Cretin, this city; Mr. and Mrs. George Tideman, Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Day, Dunellen; Mr. and Mrs James Benbrook, Orange, and Chas. Nightingale, Flemington.

Among the presents were a silver tea service from the bride's parents; an Elgin gold watch from the bridegroom; silver caster, Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Day; silver jewel casket, Miss Lizzie Day; silver cake basket, James Day; bronze clock, Chas. S. Day; call bell, S. Day, jr.; silver sugar spoon, Miss Irene Day; silver butter dish and knife, Miss Lizzie Thomas; one dozen china fruit plates, Chas. E. Mosher; colored glass hall lamp, Richard Ruschman; silver stand, with cut glass berry dish, Mr. and Mrs. Jas. McKenzie; student lamp, Milton Labaw; bottle perfume, Mr. and Mrs. N. W. Pike; pearl card case, Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Stevens; silver card receiver, Mr. and Mrs. George Tineman; plush banner, Miss Susie Cornell; silver soup ladle, Capt. and Mrs. Williams; pair hand painted brass plaques and easel, Mr. and Mrs. G. B. Smith; oil painting, Dolph and Oscar Runyon; crumb brush and tray, Miss Emma Nelson; lunch cloth and napkins, Mr. and Mrs. Max Ersline; hand painted plaques, Mr. D. H. Lawson; Dore Bible gallery, Frank Adair; half dozen towels, Mr. and Mrs. James Benbrook; Encyclopædia, C. Nightingale; one dozen china fruit plates, Mr. and Mrs. Bartow; silver pickle caster, Mr. and Mrs. James Adair; silver butter dish, Mrs. J. C. Cretin; one half dozen silver fruit knives, Mr. and Mrs. W. G. Runyon.

BY THE LOCAL SUPERINTENDENT.

"Rise up, ye women that are at ease; speak, exhort and rebuke with all authority."

Bands of Hope are petitioning the Legislature in Ohio, for protection against the liquor traffic. Truly the voice of the boys and girls, aroused to a sense of danger from this evil, should have weight with law-makers if their hearts are not soaked with alcohol.

These days of heat are so depressing that many are tempted to the cool saloon with its cool drinks to seek a refreshing influence. But beware! the relief is only temporary and must be repeated to keep up the declining vigor. Many date their downfall to the first drink taken at this season, and many reformed men have fallen by indulging at this time.

The following is taken from an old almanac of the year 1837: "Being satisfied from observation and experience, as well as from medical testimony, that ardent spirits, and drink, is not only needless, but hurtful, and that the entire disuse of it would tend to promote the health, the virtue and the happiness of the community, we hereby express our conviction, that should the people of the United States, and especially the young men, discountenance entirely the use of it, they would not only promote their own personal benefit, but the good of our country and the world."

(Signed) JAMES MADISON,
ANDREW JACKSON,
JOHN QUINCY ADAMS.

"GOOD TEMPLARS.—I congratulate you on another glorious victory over the combined forces of the drunkard-makers of the United States. Wednesday, April 7, the people of Rhode Island adopted by an overwhelming majority an Amendment to the State Constitution, forever prohibiting the manufacturing and sale of alcoholic liquors within the State. This victory is emphasized by the fact that the people, at the late election, defeated the candidate nominated by the political party in power for Attorney General, and elected an avowed Prohibitionist. This means Prohibition enforced. Templars will do well to remember that a law will never be enforced by its enemies, and in all future contests work not only for the law but for officers who will enforce it. Six of the United States absolutely prohibit the manufacture and sale of alcoholic beverages. Templars must press steadily forward to win complete victory throughout the world. Any form of legislation which permits the system of legalized drunkard-making to continue a single day is in the interests of the enemies of humanity and civilization. Templars must oppose any and all compromises, and work for and accept but one thing—total Prohibition."

MARKHEAD'S EXPLOIT.

At Bismark, (Dakota,) the mountain men often tell the story of Markhead's exploit with the Blackfeet.

It is the same Markhead who, five or six years later, was treacherously murdered by the Mexicans near Taos. At the time of his death he was not more than twenty-seven years old, and he could have been not more than twenty-two when he had this Blackfoot adventure.

The old pioneers of the upper Missouri speak of Markhead as a most remarkable boy, so muscular and of such powers of endurance, that he would run fifteen or twenty miles without apparent fatigue. Indians he held in trifling regard, and delighted in a skirmish with them; though he bore the scars of not less than a dozen of their bullets.

At the time alluded to, he had gone on a trapping excursion for beaver, up one of the head creeks of the Yellowstone; a locality not much resorted to by other trappers, on account of the deadly hostility of the Blackfeet, who were very jealous of the white hunters, and killed every hunter they could surprise.

As was his custom, he had his horse with him, for carrying traps and provisions, and at this time had his camp in a clump of cottonwoods, on the bank of the creek, near the foot of a range of bluffs which fronted the stream on the east side.

That morning—it was in the month of October—he had set off early to look to his beaver traps, of which he had a line both up and down the creek. He had proceeded but a short distance, when he found that one of his steel traps had been taken from under the bank where he had set it.

There were bear tracks in the mud about the bank, and very large ones, leading back into the cedar bushes, toward the bluff.

The trail was fresh, and Markhead followed it cautiously through the cedar.

Coming at length to the foot of the bluff, he found the animal had turned aside, and gone further up the bottom. But just at that moment he thought he heard it thrashing about in the cedar a little way ahead.

So he carefully mounted the side of the bluff, twenty or thirty feet, hoping to catch sight of the animal over the tops of the bushes. From this point he saw a large grizzly, sitting on a broad flat rock, about forty yards distant.

Watching the creature a moment, he found that it had limped painfully, and that it walked a short distance on three legs. Finally, it turned about and limped back to the stone again; and Markhead now perceived that the grizzly had his beaver trap hard and fast on one of his fore paws.

The bear was much annoyed by the trap. It sat down on the stone again, and from where it lay, Markhead could see him examining it attentively, holding it close to his nose and gravely turning his paw over and over.

Then it would tip its head to one side and look at the trap from out the corner of its eyes, in a most comical manner, as if at an entire loss to make out what the novel and painful appendage could be that had got such a fast hold of his toes.

Anon, the puzzled animal would try to step on its foot; but instantly took it up again, with a low whimper, and would then commence licking the trap, as if wishing to appease its anger and coax it into letting go its grip.

This pantomime so interested the trapper that he could scarcely take aim with his rifle. But not wishing to lose his trap, he was on the point of shooting the bear, when he was startled from it by the neigh of a horse.

Glancing out over the tops of the bushes, he saw, some four or five hundred yards down the opposite bank of the creek, a party of Indians, sitting on their ponies.

They had reined up, and stood among some little sand hillocks, looking across, directly toward where his camp was, in the cottonwoods.

It then flashed to his mind that it was his horse which had neighed. That was why the Indians had pulled up so suddenly and were staring across the creek.

Markhead saw that, even could he himself escape them, the Indians would discover his camp and capture his horse and provisions, together with all the peltries he had trapped.

That was bad. But what was worse, there was a heavy dew that morning, and his own trail through the grass, along the bank must, he knew, be as plain as a pike-staff.

He knew that the Indians would not fail to discover his trail, and that they would follow him like bloodhounds to his death. It is not strange that our hunter thought no more of the bear, and that his merriment was cut short by this no means laughable aspect.

But Markhead was a quick witted fellow, not easily alarmed, and while he lay watching the Blackfeet as they stealthily approached the place where his horse was picketed, he hit on a ruse for outwitting them at their own tactics.

Feeling sure that in a few minutes they would be on his track, he slid down from his perch on the bluff and ran back to the creek, to the point where he had left it in pursuit of the bear.

Here he resumed his way up the creek, taking care to leave a plainly-marked trail through the wet grass, with here and there a foot-print in the mud or sand, just as if he was leisurely proceeding along the bank, looking to his traps.

But he ran on fast, and never slackened his pace till he had covered a distance of at least ten miles from the place where he had seen the Indians cross the creek.

His surmise was that the savages, on discovering his trail, would pursue him, but would expect to come upon him at every trap, and hence would follow on, and at no great speed.

Having thus planned out a ten-mile chase for them, Markhead ran back across the narrow meadow, and climbing the bluffs, made a detour for his camp again, keeping a mile or over from the creek, back among the sand-hills and cliffs.

Being a fleet and practiced runner, he was not more than an hour and a half making the trip back to the vicinity of his camp, among the cottonwoods, the tall tops of which he could see at a great distance.

After taking breath a few minutes, and looking at his rifle, Markhead crept out among the boulders on the crag overlooking the camping place; for he expected the Indians would leave one of their number, and one he was prepared to deal with.

From the crag he soon saw the six ponies down among the timber. They were hitched up near his own horse. Nor was he wrong in his conjecture about the savages leaving one of their number with the horses.

The packs had been taken off the ponies' backs; and after looking a few moments, he espied an Indian sitting in the shade of a bush, on a heap of buffalo skins and peltries.

Watching the Indian a little, Markhead crept down, noiseless as a fox, to a large cottonwood, rather nearer the horses, and then, steadying his piece against the tree trunk, was just about to shoot the unwary sentinel, when the Indian turned partially, and to his surprise he saw that it was not a Blackfoot warrior, but a plump and very comely squaw.

Markhead often admitted that, for the instant, he was quite nonplussed. He did not know what to do, for he would not shoot the squaw. At length he gave a shout and rushed toward her.

The squaw bounded from her seat, and seeing the trapper close upon her, "yelled like a pig," as Markhead said, and started to run away.

But she had not gone many yards before he seized her by her long hair; at which, the poor woman, thinking, no doubt, that her last hour had come, crouched on the ground, and begged piteously, in choicest Blackfoot, for the white to spare her.

He then led her back to the ponies, and drawing his knife, intimated to her by most emphatic dumb show that her top-knot would come off if she made the least attempt to escape.

With that the squaw protested, with every gesture she could devise, that she would never try to get away. She would be like a dog and run at his heels; she would be like the pony's tail, always at his back.

Finding that her life was in no immediate danger, the squaw rapidly recovered from her fright, and in answer to signs, gave her captor to understand that the five savages had gone on his trail up the creek, just as he had surmised they would, and had been so confident that they would find him, that they had left only her to sit by the ponies.

Markhead thought over the distance, and concluding that he had full two hours start of them, resolved to take it easy.

He made the squaw unpack some cold venison which they had in one of their sacks; and the two strange companions lunched together, for the long run that Markhead had taken had given him a good appetite.

Assisted by the squaw, he next put up all the Indians' peltries, and lashed them on the ponies, making up a sort of pony train, at the head of which he placed the squaw.

Then collecting his own property, he mounted his horse and set off, driving the whole train in front of him—master of the situation—leaving, in fact, nothing of any value behind.

Once out on the plains, clear of the crags and timber, he drove his singular cavalcade on at a great pace, and traveling all the rest of the day and all that night with but brief halts, reached a trading post—Laramie fort probably—toward the end of the next day.

The feelings of the outwitted Indians on their return to the place where they had left their ponies, after their unsuccessful chase, may better be left to the fancy of the reader.

The young trapper realized about six hundred dollars from the sale of the captured ponies, peltries, buffalo robes and other property.

The squaw was some time after reclaimed at the fort by an Indian chief, whose wife she had been when captured. On Markhead being pointed out to him at the post, he said:

"He big warrior. He play beaver on Indian."

WHY IRISHMEN ARE DEMOCRATS.

William R. Grace, mayor of New York, delivered a lecture in the city of Boston, on "The Irish in America," Feb. 21, in which he explained why Irishmen and Irish-Americans are mostly Democratic in their politics. Mayor Grace said:

"I have often been asked why it is that most Irishmen are Democrats, and the answer to my mind has always seemed to lie on the surface. Immediately after adoption of the constitution there were no parties. The grounds of division had not taken definite shape, and a coherent statement of principles had yet to be made. Of course, the casting of party lines was not to be long delayed, for party organization is vital to the existence of representative government, and in the case of the United States, the direction which these lines should take, might readily have been foretold. With a written constitution, the reason for the existence of parties could only turn upon the nature of the construction to be placed upon the charter which defined the powers of the government. Questions of policy which came clearly within the limits of federal authority, would indeed become an incident of party life, and, at times, even an overshadowing incident. But the permanent, underlying principle to which either party would appeal in justification of its existence could only be, under our form of government, the looseness or strictness with which the powers of that government should be regarded. Of the then called Federal party Hamilton was the acknowledged leader, while of the Republican party, whose mantle has fallen upon the Democratic party of to-day, Segerson was the guiding spirit. The Federalists insisted upon a liberal construction of the powers ceded to the central government, while the Republicans took the opposite view."

SPRING!

Now that Nature is beginning to clothe herself in forms of beauty you will naturally be looking 'round for wearing apparel suitable for the season. A glance at our Spring offerings will save you a good deal of time and money too, for we were never better prepared to serve you than at present. For months past, long before you ever thought of the matter, we have been engaged in selecting, with the care and judgment born of a long experience, a diversity of fabrics that will not only please the eye, but render genuine service in the wear. We set the ball rolling with a Union Cass. Suit, in two shades, at $8. It is a marvel of cheapness and, if you don't give it away, the price you paid for it will never be guessed. In all wool goods we commence at $10. Nobby, stylish, durable and, remember, all wool. We guarantee this, and are not afraid to have them compared with anything offered near this price. The celebrated goods manufactured by the Sawyer Woolen Co. are too well known to need praise. The demand for and ready sale of these goods have been such as to lead to their imitation, and, so far as looks go, they have been successfully copied. But the wearing qualities of the Sawyer goods have not been, and cannot be, imitated. To protect themselves and those who have learned the value of their goods, the Sawyer Co. have issued tags to those who purchase the goods direct for manufacture, to be attached to every suit made up. We offer this Spring genuine Sawyer Suits, with the "tag guarantee" attached, for $13 and upward. We have them in Plaids, Checks and Mixtures, and in patterns both grave and gay. For real value, combined with elegance of style and good workmanship, they take—the cake, we were about to say; no, the whole bakery would be more appropriate. Our general stock is full, large, varied, all manufactured this season, and at prices beyond comparison. We invite inspection. The stock itself is our best advertisement. It is more eloquent than any description we can write.

GENTS:—I feel it my duty to say respecting Burdock Blood Bitters, that it is the best medicine I ever took. I suffered two or three years from stomach troubles and dyspepsia, as well as from liver and kidney complaint; I was not able to attend to my business. My wife was afflicted in much the same way. We read of your Bitters in the papers and made up our minds that we would try them. The result is my wife and I began to improve at once, and I am now able to do more hard work than before in ten years. It relieved my kidney troubles as well. We both wish you, the makers of it, Godspeed.

HALL'S Vegetable Sicilian HAIR RENEWER.
The great popularity of this preparation, after its test of many years, should be an assurance, even to the most skeptical, that it is really meritorious. Those who have used HALL'S HAIR RENEWER know that it does all that is claimed.
It causes new growth of hair on bald heads—provided the hair follicles are not dead, which is seldom the case; restores natural color to gray or faded hair; preserves the scalp healthful and clean of dandruff; prevents the hair falling off or changing color; keeps it soft, pliant, lustrous, and causes it to grow long and thick.
HALL'S HAIR RENEWER produces its effects by the healthful influence of its vegetable ingredients, which invigorate and rejuvenate. It is not a dye, and is a delightful article for toilet use. Containing no alcohol, it does not evaporate quickly and dry up the natural oil, leaving the hair harsh and brittle, as do other preparations.
Buckingham's Dye FOR THE WHISKERS
Colors them brown or black, as desired, and is the best dye, because it is harmless; produces a permanent natural color; and, being a single preparation, is more convenient of application than any other.

Poetry.

THE OLD HOME.

I remember an old gray farmhouse,
All mossy, and stained with time;
With a film of old age upon it,
While yet it stood in its prime.

A broad, low-browed old homestead,
Where clambering wild woodbine
Hung out its flames in the Autumn,
Like wreaths on a holy shrine.

Great, drooping elms swayed o'er it;
And blossoming lilacs tall,
Thrust their purple plumes in the windows
With the bees they held in thrall.

All under its roof so mossy,
And around its hearth so warm,
It gathered its happy children,
In a merry, busy swarm.

With the beat of rain on its shingles,
It lulled them all to rest,
When Spring brought the muttering showers,
Surging up from out the west.

As a hen soothes her sleepy children,
Beneath her wings widespread,
So we heard the soft, sweet wind-song,
Of the old roof overhead.

And now when I fall a-dreaming,
When it rains, and the wind is strong,
I hear again the deep murmurs
And the beat of the old roof's song.

And the years fall away and leave me,
A sleepy child once more;
Slow rocking on grand wind surges,
Toward some dreamland shore.

Now drifting among the tree-tops,
Now floating o'er rivers deep,
Till I sink in that rushing, sweeping sea,
Down to the land of sleep.

Miscellaneous Reading.

MR. BOLDON'S EXPEDIENT.

"I am fairly dished—ruined—done for. I had better order my coffin while I can pay for it." This was the sad soliloquy of Mr. James Boldon, solicitor and notary public, as he sat alone in his office in High street, Westborough, one October morning.

And truly Mr. James Boldon's position was not a happy one. He was a young man, lately admitted as a solicitor, and he had spent all his little capital to no purpose in trying to make a practice for himself in the town of Westborough.

He was almost a stranger in the town, and, although he had been there nearly a year, he had hardly succeeded in making an acquaintance, much less in gaining clients. The report that there was "an opening" in the place, on the strength of which he had come there, had proved to be entirely fallacious. The town was just large enough to hide him. It was in vain that he went regularly to St. Augustine's Mission chapel, in the hope of having his name put on the building committee of the new church; in vain that he frequented (at proper hours) the billiard room of the new Royal Hotel; in vain that he sedulously attended the county court and the police court with a glazed black bag which held nothing but a newspaper and one or two law books. Business would not come to him. Nobody knew him, and nobody cared to know him.

There was, indeed, one man who knew him—one who might, if he had any business whatever, have proved a useful friend—Mr. Lionel Winn, editor of The Westborough Independent. The young lawyer had made the acquaintance of Mr. Winn over the billiard table. But of what use was it to have the means of getting a flattering notice in the newspaper, when there was absolutely nothing to notice?

It was nearly 12 o'clock. Mr. James Boldon had been looking over his ledger, and even his sanguine disposition failed him, as he marked the state of things there disclosed. He rose from the table with a groan, put on his hat, and, telling his solitary office boy (who was improving his time by boring holes in the lid of his desk) that he would not be in till after lunch, he sallied forth into the street.

Not having any particular object in view, he thought he might as well go to the railway station and get a London paper, and thither he directed his steps.

After buying his paper, Boldon observed on the platform the station-master, whom he knew by sight, engaged in an angry altercation with an elderly man who looked like a farm laborer. A little crowd surrounded the disputants, and Boldon sauntered up to see what was the matter.

"A' tell 'ee a've coom from Lamborne an' a'll pay no more," said the man.

"You must pay the fare from London all the same," returned the station-master, angrily. "Here's the by-law. You can read it for yourself—that is, if you can read."

"Naw, a caan't."

"Well, it says that any one traveling without a ticket must pay the fare from the station at which the train started. How am I to know you only got in at Lamborne?"

The dispute went on, the station-master, who had been a sergeant in the Guards and had a great idea of the importance of his office and the necessity of enforcing the law, having evidently the best of it. The young solicitor ventured to say something for the man, and was roughly advised to mind his own business. This rather settled him; and as the poor man protested that he could not pay the fare from London—seven shillings and tenpence—and there was every prospect that he would be taken before the magistrates, Boldon good-naturedly paid the money for him, and the matter was at an end.

Our hero walked abstractedly back to his office, pondering over the hard case of the poor man whom he had succored; and his deliberations lasted for some time.

On the following Saturday morning Boldon omitted to shave and stayed in doors all day. After a substantial early dinner he proceeded to make some changes in his raiment. He put on an old tweed suit considerably the worse for wear, and a pair of boots that had seen better days. His hat he took from a well-merited oblivion, and finally he adorned his neck with a red and blue woolen comforter. Thus equipped, he set out for a walk to Lamborne, a small town about ten miles off.

He reached his destination about 7 o'clock in the evening, and his first proceeding was to go to an inn and order some tea. Having refreshed himself he left the inn, after exchanging a few words with the landlady, and visiting two or three shops. In each shop he made one or two small purchases, directing that the goods should be sent to him at Westborough; and in each case he was careful to take a receipt for the money he paid. Then he went to the railway station, at which he knew the London train for Westborough and the west would stop in a few minutes, made one or two trifling purchases at the book stall and managed to engage the man who kept the stall in conversation for some time. The train came in as he was still talking to the man at the bookstall, and Boldon quickly took his seat in it, without having gone through the formality of taking a ticket.

When the train arrived at Westborough, the young solicitor explained that he had joined the train at Lamborne and tendered the fare from that town. As he expected, the money was refused, and the full fare from London demanded. This Mr. Boldon refused to pay, and accordingly he was detained till the station-master was sent for.

That official, in all the majesty of gold-laced coat and tall hat, soon arrived, much annoyed at being disturbed at his evening meal.

"What is all this about?" he demanded sternly, as he came upon the scene.

"They want to make me pay the fare all the way from London, and I've only come from Lamborne," answered Boldon in a humble tone.

"Of course you must pay the whole fare. There's a by-law on purpose, made and provided."

Mr. Boldon mournfully shook his head. "Oh, no, sir," he said meekly, "I really can't do that."

"You'll have to go to the lock-up then," rejoined the station-master, roughly. "You'd best pay up."

Mr. Boldon only shook his head again and sighed heavily.

As the lawyer expected the official was exasperated by his obstinacy and encouraged in his high-handed manner by the meekness with which he was confronted. None of the railway people recognized in the shabbily dressed, unshaved individual before them the spruce gentleman who had paid a poor man's fare a few days before.

"Bonsor, go for a constable," said the station master, with the air of an inflexible judge awarding a term of twenty years' penal servitude.

"Don't do that; I'll give you my name and address, I'm known in the place—that is, I'm quite respectable, you know."

"Oh, I dare say," returned the station-master with true official superciliousness.

There was an awful pause while the porter was gone to fetch the constable.

"Don't you think," suggested Boldon, almost timidly—"don't you think it might be as well to telegraph to London for instructions?"

The station-master frowned.

"They couldn't complain of you in that case, at any rate," pursued Boldon.

The station-master hesitated.

"I'll wait in the waiting-room till you get an answer," said Boldon, as he led the way to that cheerful apartment.

The official darted a suspicious glance at his prisoner. Still, the advice was prudent and he acted upon it. In half an hour the answer came back. "The passenger without a ticket must pay the fare from London, or be charged before the magistrates."

"Just let me see the message you've got," said Boldon, when the result was announced to him. "If it is as you say I'll go quietly or else pay."

They showed him the message.

"No. I really can't pay all that money, you know," said Boldon sadly, as he read the telegram; and accordingly he was marched off to the police office, guarded by a policeman on the right and by a constable in the imposing uniform of the Great Railway Company on the left.

As it was Saturday night, nothing could be done that day and Mr. Boldon did not choose to disturb the Sabbath rest of Mr. Lionel Winn, his only available friend, by asking him to bail him out on Sunday.

On the Monday morning, however, an early message was sent to Mr. Winn and he promptly appeared and bailed out the young lawyer, who was heartily tired of his incarceration. Later in the day the case came on before the magistrates and Mr. Boldon attended with the landlady of the inn at Lamborne and one of the shopkeepers, who were able and willing to prove that he could not possibly have travelled from a greater distance than Lamborne on the preceding Saturday night. The charge was of course dismissed, one of the magistrates, a jolly old fellow named Bracebridge, remarked that Mr. Boldon, who seemed to be a respectable solicitor, had been treated shamefully, and that if he stood in Mr. Boldon's place he would be inclined to let the Great Railway Company hear of the matter again.

Next day The Westborough Independent contained a long account of the incredible "and really scandalous outrage to which one of the most respected members of the legal profession in our town has been subjected;" and it need hardly be said that, in a day or two, the course at which the worthy magistrate had hinted was adopted. Mr. Boldon brought his action against the railway company for false imprisonment and malicious persecution.

As everybody knows, Westborough is an assize town, and the case of Boldon vs. the Great Railway Company excited a good deal of public interest. Everybody wished to know how the law stood on the question, for everybody had had occasion some time or other to travel without a ticket.

Mr. Bustard, Q. C., was counsel for the plaintiff, and nobly he performed his task. He pictured his client, a member of an honorable profession, a gentleman of delicate and sensitive feelings, dragged by the ruthless hands of the police through the crowded streets on a Saturday night, exposed to the rude gaze of the jeering mob, and shut up in a cold lonely cell for the greater part of two whole days. And all for what? Because this gentleman had the courage, the public spirit, to resist an unreasonable and illegal impost. It was the interest of every railway traveler—he might, therefore, say of every man, woman and child in the three kingdoms—that the rights of the traveler and the liberty of the subject should be vindicated in the person of his client. "My client does not care for damages, gentlemen," said Mr. Bustard in conclusion. "That is not his object in coming here. His object is to expose an abuse, an illegal abuse, gentlemen, which has been too long continued—to clear his own character of the ignominy which has been cast upon it—to vindicate the sacred principle of the liberty of a free born Englishman."

As for the question of law, Mr. Lynx, who was for the railway company, hardly ventured to rely upon it. "It has been held over and over again," said Mr. Justice Fortman, "that this by-law is bad and illegal. It affects to inflict a fine of arbitrary and varying amount, where there is no breach of the criminal law; for here, as in most such cases, there is no pretence that there was any attempt to defraud. You will find a verdict for the plaintiff, gentlemen," he added to the jury, "with such damages as you, looking at all the circumstances of the case, may think will fairly compensate the plaintiff for the wrong he has suffered."

The jury promptly found their verdict—damages forty pounds. The result was received with some cheering, which became general when Mr. Bustard announced that his client had never intended to put the damages in his own pocket, and that he would send a check for the amount to the treasurer of the County Hospital.

The well-timed generosity settled the question of Mr. Boldon's popularity. The Ladies' Committee of the hospital nominated him at once as one of their male advisers, and his name was put on the life governors. The amateur dramatic and choral societies sent him tickets for their entertainments, given for the benefit of charity. The Westborough Independent printed in a prominent position the letter of the hospital treasurer gratefully acknowledging Mr. Boldon's munificent gift, and added a few laudatory words of its own.

Finally, after a pleasant little supper in Mr. Boldon's lodgings, there appeared the following paragraph in that excellent organ of public opinion:

"We have heard it rumored lately that a few of our more prominent townsmen have been talking of according to Mr. James Boldon, solicitor, a substantial mark of their appreciation of his public-spirited behaviour in a late trial, and of his disinterested conduct in handing over the fruits of his victory to one of the most deserving of our local charities. We have heard it whispered that W. H. Bracebrigh, Esq., J. P., who has already publicly expressed his sympathy with Mr. Boldon and Algernon Tracey, Esq., the treasurer to the Dalesshire county hospital, have expressed some intention of heading the subscription list. We give this to our readers with all possible reserve, but we have no hesitation whatever in saying that such conduct on the part of the gentlemen we have named would reflect honor upon themselves, and would not be wanting in appropriateness, as the names of both of these gentlemen have been associated with the public vindication of Mr. Boldon's honor. Our readers may depend upon our keeping them acquainted with the progress of events."

This promise was so faithfully carried out and the proposed testimonial was so thoroughly taken for granted that Mr. Bracebridge and Mr. Tracey found themselves compelled to take the honorable place which had been assigned to them. The mark of esteem took the form of a purse of sovereigns, which reached the respectable figure of one hundred pounds.

A dinner was held as a matter of course to celebrate the event, and the presentation was made in proper form. Mr. Jas. Boldon returned thanks with a becoming modesty, declaring with some humor that more by far then even their generous gift did he value the happy consciousness that his humble efforts in the public service had been appreciated, that he had gained the good-will of his neighbors and that he was no longer a stranger in their midst but one of themselves, a Westborovian to the back-bone, accounting the esteem and respect of his fellow-citizens his richest possession.

In this Mr. Boldon was perfectly right. Clients came in apace. He had got his name up for good.

THE RED MAN'S WIT.

Sedate as is the Indian's ordinary demeanor, he sometimes has a sense of humor which is not unlike that of the Scotch in its grimness. Red Jacket, the famous orator of the Senecas, had this grim humor, which he expressed in pithy, brief sentences.

Speaking once of an Indian chief, a weak, easy-going man, whose gluttonous habits had secured for him the name of Hot Bread, the orator said, "Big man here," laying his left hand on his stomache, "but very small here," bringing his right hand to his forehead.

An Indian, being on trial for stealing a few silver spoons, Red Jacket appeared before the white man's court to beg the surrender of the prisoner to the Indians, who would try him by their laws. The court refused the request, tried the Indian, and, on his conviction of burglary, punished him by a sentence which Red Jacket thought unnecessarily severe.

After the adjournment, the orator, standing amid a group of lawyers, expressed his dissatisfaction with the white man's justice. Looking at a sign on a printing office, whereon were the printed figures of Liberty and Justice, he asked, pointing to one:

"What him call?"

"Liberty," answered a lawyer.

"Ugh! What him call?" pointing to the other.

"Justice," replied the other.

"Where him live now?" asked the chief, with a sarcastic curl of the lips.

HOW MACARONI IS MADE.

M. E. Vandyne says in "Neapolitan Sketches," published in Harper's Magazine:

Having been convulsed with laughter one day by a sweet little American woman, who drew an immense endless attenuated pipe-stem into her mouth, and then announced, "It's peculiar, but very nice—where does it grow?" we organized a party to visit a macaroni factory. Our innocent little friend went with us, and has never eaten macaroni since. Nearly all the places where this commodity is produced are outside Naples, but a short drive brought us to a manufactory on the road toward Torre del Greco.

We were received with empressement not only by the proprietor but by the whole staff of employees. The business of manufacturing macaroni is warm work, and the climate of Naples, save for three or four months in the year, excessively hot. As a general thing there is a great indifference to the matter of clothing shown by the employees of such establishments; but on the appearance of a party of foreigners, two of whom were ladies, there was a grand scuffle for garments.

The women were most successful, having had a foundation of under-clothing to begin upon. One boy secured a full suit. After this there were various toilets conspicuous by the absence of essential garments, while one poor fellow, oblivious of our presence to the last moment, could procure nothing but a towel. In this he arrayed himself, however, and tried to make up by extra courtesy for what he lacked in the way of apparel.

The process of manufacturing macaroni is very simple. The ground meal is mixed with water, kneaded or beaten by an immense wooden beam, and then transferred to the press. A perforated plate beneath, through which the dough is forced by means of a ponderous lever, produces the article. Upon this plate depends whether the macaroni has a diameter large or small, or whether it is flat like a ribbon. The sizes and varieties are many, and each is endowed with a different Italian name. When it issues from the press it is, of course, moist and limp.

Large armfuls of it are seized by various attendants and ranged upon long poles, suspended from the ceiling to dry. It was this familiar handling of the dough and macaroni, which is flung over the shoulder, wound round the arm, and patted and adjusted by the dirtiest of dirty hands, that deprived our little friend of any further appreciation of what she had taken to be a chaste product of Mother Nature.

WASN'T WILLING TO WAIT SO LONG.

"Do you love me as dearly as men have ever loved woman?" said Mabel, finding an easy anchorage for her cheek about the latitude of his upper vest pocket and longitude of his left shoulder. "More," said George, with waning enthusiasm, for this was about the twenty-fourth encore to which he had responded since nine o'clock. "More, far more dearly. Oh, ever so much more!" "Would you," she went on, and there was a tremendous impressiveness in her voice that warned the young man that the star was going to leave her lines and spring something new on the house—"would you be willing to work and wait for me, as Jacob waited for Rachel at the well, seven long years!" "Seven!" he cried, in a burst of genuine devotion—"seven! Ay, gladly! Yes, and more! Even until seven times seven! Let's make it seventy and prove my devotion!" Somehow or other he was alone when he left the parlor a few minutes later, and it looks now as though he would have to wait seven hundred years before he saves provisions by calling to sup at that young lady's paternal board again.

WHO KILLED LOCAL OPTION?

The following very fair statement is from the Salem Sunbeam: "An analysis of the vote shows that eleven Republicans and eighteen Democrats voted to lay on the table, eighteen Republicans and eight Democrats voted nay. Three Democrats voted nay. Three Democrats and two Republicans were absent. The counties of Essex and Hudson alone did not alone kill the bill. Democratic Hudson was nearly equally divided, furnishing six votes on the affirmative and four in the negative. Essex gave eight votes in the affirmative and two in the negative, five of the affirmative eight being Republicans. Out of the thirty-one Republicans in the chamber, only eighteen could be mustered to vote for a bill which, it has been asserted time and again, was pre-eminently a Republican measure. Eleven Republican members, more than one-third, voted openly against it. The strong Republican county of Passaic gave two of its three Republican votes against the measure, while Mercer's solidly Republican delegation of three voted solidly against the bill. The defeat of the Local Option bill shows how idle is the claim of the Republican press that temperance legislation can be secured by electing Republicans to the Legislature in preference to Democrats. The party must make a better showing than the above before its organs will be allowed to make such a claim again."

WEATHER WISDOM IN NATURE.

The man who is out of doors at sunrise can form a pretty accurate opinion of what the day will be. If just before sunrise the sky—especially in the west—is suffused with red, rain generally follows in the course of the day. In Winter, often snow. If, however, it be frosty weather, the downfall is sometimes delayed.

On the other hand, if the sky be a dull gray, and the sun rises clear, gradually dispersing the vapors, it will be fine. If he retires behind the clouds, and there are reddish streaks about, it will rain. Should the sun, later in the day, shine through a gray watery haze, it will probably be a rainy night.

The sunset is very unreliable. Often a beautiful sunset will be followed by a bad day. After a rainy day, suddenly at sunset, in the far west, will appear a magnificent streak of crimson (not copper color)—this generally fortells a fine day. A tinted halo round the sun at setting occurs in long continued rainy weather. A halo round the moon, especially if some distance from it, is a sure indication of downfall at hand.

Rainbows are unreliable, except they occur in the morning, when rain may be expected. Sun dogs, and fragments of prismatic colors during the day, show continued unsettled weather. A dazzling lustre on foliage, during a cloudless day in Summer, precedes a change.

Huge piled up masses of whiter cloud in a blue sky in Winter, indicates snow or hail. If small, dark clouds float below the upper ones, moving faster than they, rain will follow, as it will if, in the morning, low hanging, pale brown, smoke like clouds, high up, at evening, are followed by wind, occasionally by rain.

Mists at evening over low lying ground, or near a river, precede fine and warm days. If a mist in the morning clears off as the sun gets higher, it will be fine; but if it settles down again after lifting a little rain is at hand.

No dew in the morning is mostly followed by rain; and a heavy dew in the evening by a fine day. Rain follows two or three consecutive hoar frosts. A shower of hail in the day time is usually followed by frost at night. If, after rain, drops of water still hang on the branches and twigs, and to window frames, the rain will return; but if they fall, and the wood work dries, fine weather is at hand.

Stones turn damp before wet; at the same time it must be observed that the fact of their doing so does not invariably indicate rain, for they will do so occasionally before heat.

Smoke descending heavily to the ground is a sign of doubtful weather.

Objects at great distances, which are generally indistinctly seen, or even not seen at all, sometimes loom out clear and distinct. When this happens, bad weather or change of wind ensues.

A well known instance of this is the Isle of Wight, as seen from Southsea. If the opposite shore is clearly seen, there is rain about. If, at night, after being blown out and exposed to the outer air, the wick of a candle continues to smoulder a long time, the next day will be fine. Green colored sky betokens unsettled bad weather, often long continued.

If, on a fine day, the dust suddenly rise in a revolving spiral column rain is near.

The howling of wind, indicates, in most houses, but not invariably, that downfall is near. In some houses, owing to their construction, the wind always moans. Wherever the wind is at the time of the vernal equinox (March 21st, or thereabouts) that will be the prevailing wind throughout the next three months.

If the stars appear unusually numerous, and the "milky way" very clearly defined, with the surrounding sky dark, or if there be but few stars, and those very bright and sparkling, in a pale, steely sky, it will be fine.

Swine, before rain, are unusually noisy and restless. Swallows in fine weather will fly high and at the approach of rain, close to the ground; but the latter does not apply if the day is cold, in which case they hawk very low.

Common sparrows washing vigorously in a puddle on the road, or at the edge of running water, is a sure sign for rain. A baker, who kept a parrot in a dry atmosphere of the bake-office, noticed that a few hours before rain the bird took an imaginary bath, fluttering, as if splashing water, and pressing her feathers.

WHY NOT.

A well-to-do farmer of Wilkes county went to Athens a few days ago to do trading, and while there he had his picture taken, and when he reached home he presented it to his wife, who, on seeing it, asked him why he was so selfish about it, why didn't he bring a picture of her also. He tried to explain, but she would not be comforted.

GLOVES AT A DISCOUNT.

The New Orleans Picayune say:—Gen. Pryor's daughter wore no gloves at her marriage ceremony. Gen. Pryor's daughter is a leader of fashion. It is proper that fashionable society should take this stand. It is awkward to keep a whole congregation waiting while a bride's hand is being ungloved to receive the marriage ring. But there is a better reason for dispensing with gloves at a wedding. If a woman expects or wants to boss a man she must handle him without gloves from the start, and not be imposed upon through the honeymoon.

SHE WANTED A DRINK.

A young lady had been spending the day with a friend of hers, and the young man who calls on her "occasionally," called for her. While they were sitting on the porch the visitor got up and said she wanted a drink, and then asked if anyone else wanted one. Nobody wishing any, she walked back into the kitchen, followed by the young man, who insisted upon drawing the water. But she declined, adding that she really did not want a drink.

"But you said you did distinctly. What possessed you to say so?"

"Well smarty, if you want to know right bad, my—my—garter slipped down and I wanted to put it in place again."

Dead silence. Smart young man feels like kicking himself.

THEY WERE NOT MAN AND WIFE.

"There are some queer couples in this world," remarked a Dearborn street real estate agent. "The other day a man and woman called to see me about renting a flat on the North Side. The woman did the talking, and turned to the man for confirmation of corroboration. He always agreed with her, and he did it very meekly.

"Well," says the woman finally, "I will give you $25 for the flat, won't we John?"

"Yes'm," replied the man.

"And I'll pay my rent promptly, too, won't we John?"

"Yes'm."

"And I'll take good care of the house won't I John?"

"Yes'm."

"But," inquired the agent, as is usual in such cases, "are you man and wife?"

"Man and wife!" exclaimed the woman sharply, "indeed we are not, are we, John?"

"No'm."

"What!" says I, "Not man and wife?"

"Not much. I'd have you know that in this family we are wife and man, ain't we, John?"

"Yes'm."

THE USE OF BLINDS ON HORSES.

The custom of putting blinds on horses indiscriminately, is a great error. Carriage horses look well in showy head-gear, and handsome blinds are a great improvement to the style and general appearance of real, well set-up carriage horses. But for buggy, car, cart, stage, wagon, truck, and general travel, they are wholly unnecessary, and as regards safety, they are a detriment rather than an advantage. What do surface car horses want with blinds? Horses, like ourselves, want to see where they are going, and the horse that shies, proves that he wants to keep out of danger, by the very fact of his shying.

We must consider that a horse leading an artificial life, like ourselves, walking in the dark in a strange place, doesn't see what is around him if he has blinds on, and is therefore naturally timid and careful. If a horse is too careful, and takes too wide a circuit in shying, it is with the best intentions from his instincts. But because he does it a little too much, and more than his driver sees necessary, he should not be abused, but spoken to softly and kindly, and encouraged, for he means no wrong. The stupid lunk-head will go so close to a hole that one wheel will fall into it, while the horse of intelligence, will keep well away from it, but not having studied geometry, he does not know the exact length of the axles, and distance necessary to keep from the danger. Man himself doesn't keep away from danger at all times, though he has the advantage of sense and reason supplied him.—Col. J. P. Battersby in American Agriculturist for May.

A note-orious affair—a concert.

A school for liars—a school of fish.

A foot rule—don't wear tight shoes.

A shocking affair—the electric battery.

A railroad striker—the man who drives the spikes.

What interjection is of the feminine gender? Alas!

A carpenter may have many virtues, still he can't get along without vices.

The green grocer in London is one who sells vegetables. In this country he is one who trusts.

A bonnet covered with birds does not sing, but it makes a man whistle when the bill comes in.

The original lapidary was presumably a man without guilt—at all events, he cast the first stone.

Coal oil has been discovered in Egypt. For a long time past that country has been the seat of turm-oil.

"Mamma," said a little Estelline girl at breakfast, "I don't like this milk—I b'lieve it 'as been skinned."

Merchants don't always give themselves away in trade, but they frequently exhibit signs of gilt outside their stores.

"Yes, things have gone hard with Tom, I'm afraid. What is he doing now?"

"He is a conductor on a parlor car."

"Poor fellow; just his luck! Why couldn't he have got a porter's position?"

"I met Squibbs, the tailor, at the labor-meeting last night, and he sat at the same table with the reporters."

"Taking notes, eh?"

"No, confound him, he wasn't. He wanted cash."

PROCLAMATION BY THE GOVERNOR.

STATE OF NEW JERSEY,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

By the authority conferred on me by Joint Resolution No. 1, passed by the Legislature of this State, approved March 18, 1886, entitled "Joint Resolution in reference to pension claims of New Jersey Volunteers," I desire to announce to all concerned that the Congress of the United States, by act approved March 19, 1886, has increased the rate of pension for widows and dependent relatives of soldiers and sailors of the late war from eight to twelve dollars per month, and that the increased allowance will be paid on the vouchers of June 4, 1886, without any application therefor on the part of pensioners.

An amendment to the pension law is now pending and will probably pass increasing the rate of pension per month to minor children from two to four dollars, I presume the same mode of payment will be followed.

A bill is also pending in Congress granting a service pension to the soldiers of the Mexican war. It will probably pass.

Any person entitled to increased pay or pension, under the above or any other acts, can obtain advice or assistance by addressing the Governor, at Trenton, in which case the Adjutant General will have the matter specially attended to at Washington without expense to the applicant.

In testimony whereof I have set my hand, and caused the great seal of the State to be hereunto affixed, at Trenton, this thirteenth day of April, A. D., eighteen hundred and eighty-six.

[L. S.] LEON ABBETT.

By the Governor,
HENRY C. KELSEY, Secretary of State.

GAS EXPLOSION.

We are promised when the tariff discussion commences in Congress eighty prepared speeches upon that much abused and misconstrued question, that football of political humbug.

Eighty speeches for home consumption, eighty explosions of concentrated Congressional gas, and the mercury among the nineties.

Awful to contemplate.

The country is strong and can survive the ordeal, fearful though it be.

Eighty harangues about the tariff and what will they amount to?

Mercenary localism and little else.

The Pennsylvanians, mounting a pile of pig iron, will cry aloud—perish credit, perish commerce, but continue to subsidize our mineral products.

The Michiganders, flourishing pine boards right and left, will defiantly shout—let us destroy American forests, but forever keep from builders' hands Canadian lumber.

The men of Louisiana, lifting high the succulent cane, will insist that fifty million of people shall pay two cents a pound additional on sugar in order to enrich a few favored planters.

The Buckeyes of Ohio, tearing their hair in wild frenzy, will decree the stoppage of every manufactory in the land rather than let go the duty on wool.

And so from one end of the line to the other will the battle rage for buncombe and special interests.

We harbor the hope that among the fourscore oratorical evaporations some may be found sufficiently imbued with common sense and justice as to advocate the general public good, including that freely talked about, but shamefully neglected item, American Labor.

The coming eighty may possibly develop a few statesmen. If so, we shall thankfully acknowledge the fact.

Let us hope and pray.

The President has appointed Frank Brown to be Postmaster at Baltimore, vice I. Parker Veazey, resigned.

Congressman R. S. Green has been appointed a member of the executive committee of the Democratic Congressional Campaign committee.

It is said that Senator Chattle, of Monmouth, will be the choice of the Prohibition convention, for Governor, which is to meet in Newark on May 28.

The new Democratic Mayor of Jersey City, Orestes Cleveland, assumed control of the city government on Monday last. His first official act was the appointment of John F. W. Mangles, Josiah Hornblower and John J. Voorhis to be members of the Board of Education.

Mr. Hoar, from the committee on the judiciary, has reported favorably in the Senate the joint resolution proposing to extend the present presidential term to April 30, 1889, instead of March 4, and providing that the term of the Fiftieth Congress be also extended to that date. The resolution was placed on the calendar.

Colonel Lamont has authorized the following statement in contradiction of the rumor that Secretary Manning intends to resign his position on account of his recent illness:—"Mr. Manning has not resigned, and there is no reason to believe he has such intentions. Such a contingency has never been hinted at in any of the conversations he has had with the President, or so far as I know, with any one else."

Forty thousand people joined on Monday last, at Savannah, Ga., to honor Jefferson Davis. He made a speech to a cheering multitude, in which he declared that the "lost cause" lived in the hearts of the people. "We are at peace with all the world and I hope we shall remain so, but to remain at peace does not mean to abandon principles or deny the truth." Mr. Davis watched from a carriage the parade of 3,000 militia from various Southern States. They bore United States flags intertwined with Southern battle flags. At night Mr. Davis attended a banquet.

The New York Star hits the nail on the head in its remarks about the recent Chicago labor riots. It says:

"The news that comes from Chicago is not encouraging to the honest workingmen who are struggling for an end which they have the right to seek. The foreign socialistic element seems to have taken possession of the eight-hour movement in Chicago, and to have introduced foreign customs in an American community with a vengeance. It is evident that these people do not desire the improvement of the condition of the workingmen, nor anything but anarchy. They flaunt the red flag and begin a riot without the slightest provocation. There is nothing so appropriate for them as the strong arm of the law."

Mr. William E. Townsend, in a speech before the Trades Assembly in Chicago on Sunday night, denounced the flying of the red flag by some of the pretended friends of labor, and said:

"An organization that cannot recognize the American flag as its banner should not be allowed to associate with a body of men who are American in principle, aiming to better their condition while upholding their national character. When the men who now carry the red flag become naturalized and adopt American ideas, it will be time enough to go hand in hand with them in the attainment of their just rights."

GOVERNOR ABBETT SPEAKS.

St. Michael's Hall in Jersey City was packed Monday evening with friends of Ireland who had gathered to pass resolutions of encouragement to William E. Gladstone and Charles Stewart Parnell. Mayor Cleveland presided. A letter from Senator McPherson and telegrams from Congressman McAdoo and Mayor Edward J. Kerr of Hoboken expressed regret at their inability to be present. Governor Abbett spoke. He said:

"I remember a few months ago standing here at a meeting of a similar nature. It was a successful meeting not only in numbers, but solid financial backing. Then there was a question to meet, and I asked for aid and encouragement in meeting that question. Since then that question has been met, and the battle is won. To-night I am here to congratulate you. Ireland is no longer standing before the world begging for justice. She is no longer trodden under the heel of a tyrant, but she stands a united people, demanding her rights, and beside her stands William E. Gladstone, the greatest and noblest statesman, the man who has laid aside the prejudice of a nation and risked his reputation as a statesman to do justice. That Ireland is capable of governing herself is shown by the calm judgment with which she holds herself. She is not revengeful. Thank God that in this hour Ireland has leaders who are able to do their work, and in whom she has entire confidence."

The following message was sent to Gladstone:

"Mass meeting now in progress to encourage you and Parnell in your great struggle for justice to Ireland. Governor Abbett now speaking.

"Mayor ORESTES CLEVELAND, presiding."

Mr. Dolph offered an amendment in the Senate on Monday last to the Fortifications Appropriation bill appropriating $10,000,000 for the construction of fortifications and other coast defenses, in accordance with the recommendation of the Board of Fortifications.

The Congressional Record of Wednesday reports two speeches of Robert S. Green, member from this District, in the Iowa and Rhode Island contested election cases. We will give them to our readers next week. Judge Green had charge, as a member of the committee on elections, of the resolution from the committee as to the Rhode Island case, which led to quite a scrimmage.

The following points of law have just been decided:

"The title to a house, or apartments therein, are vested in the tenant during the term of his lease, if the conditions thereof have been fully complied with.

A landlord has no right to enter premises, except to view waste or collect rent, and if he does so he becomes a trespasser in law."

By the action of the Knights of Labor, Jay Gould is brought in contact with the sympathy of more people than he could otherwise have hoped to be, and it is simply because the excesses committed in the name of that organization have thrust Mr. Gould forward as the representative of property rights, order, and justice. It is unfortunate that this should be so, but so it is.

The New York Times echoes the thoughts of all law-abiding citizens when it says:—"The promptest and sternest way of dealing with such outbreaks as that among the Chicago Anarchists, on Tuesday last, is the wisest and most merciful. The demand for higher wages or fewer hours of labor has nothing or very little to do with their violent demonstrations, and the sympathy and consideration which are due to honest workingmen striving by lawful means to better their condition would be worse than wasted on these ruffians. Their grievance is against society, law, order, government, and all the Ten Commandments. These cutthroats are, to a man, of foreign birth and of foreign ideas. American soil does not grow such venomous reptiles, and they must be made to understand beyond the possibility of a mistake that the American people, who listen with indifference to their wild talk, will shows very different temper when they begin to put their theories in practice as they attempted to do in Chicago last Monday night.

Fire Companies' Officers.

Monday evening was the usual date for the annual election of the officers of the respective companies of the Plainfield Fire Department. There was little competition, and the results are as given below—Zephyr H. & L. Co., however, are to hold another election for the reason stated that there was some irregularity in that of Monday evening:

WESTFIELD WISPS.

Wm. O. Peckham, Esq., has been purchasing more land adjoining his on the mountain.

The Reese Bros. from Hillside avenue, have each received a new bicycle the present week.

Samuel Godshalk renewed his license on Tuesday last to keep an inn and tavern at the old stand. There were no objections to granting the same.

The regular meeting of the Fire Department was adjourned on Wednesday evening last for one week, owing to the absence of a number of members from town.

The humorous and dramatic readings by Alfred E. Pearsall at Arcanum Hall on Thursday evening was largely attended, and the readings were rapturously applauded.

Mrs. Aaron Hatfield has purchased a lot of James R. Ferris on Orchard street, adjoining residence of George Lines. Mrs. Hatfield intends erecting a residence the present Summer.

On Saturday night last several of our residents who have been used to running the "growler" in our town, finding out that they could not get it filled at the saloon or hotel, went to Plainfield and came home in one of the late trains, indulging in a scrub fight on North avenue. Several of them received black eyes and stained faces. Give us a lock-up and have them run in.

Valentine O. Burtis has completed his barn upon his recently purchased land on the Springfield road, and his new residence is under process of construction. John N. Wilcox has the contract.

Chief Traynor has had the well on the corner of Broad street and Mountain ave., fixed up in good shape with a cast-iron top with suitable cover. There are several more that should be fixed in the same way.

Overseer of road district No. 2, wishes the residents of our town to understand that the reason for his not repairing the sidewalks as requested by a resolution at the last annual road meeting, is that he does not consider himself bound to advance the money necessary to do the work and wait for about eight months before getting it from the township, and then without interest.

The Bellerophon Wheelmen of our town intend holding a social fair on May 18th, at Arcanum Hall. A fine supper will be prepared and tables for the sale of fancy articles. A handsome gift is to be voted to the most popular young lady and also for the most popular wheelman either from home or abroad. This is the first affair of the kind that our wheelmen have held, and ought to be largely attended by our residents, which no doubt it will.

The Bucket and Engine Co. at their regular monthly meeting on Monday evening last, decided to purchase a hand engine, hose carriage and 500 feet of hose. The agent of the company was present and described the apparatus. The foreman was appointed a committee to go and see the apparatus and report at a special meeting to be called. There is no doubt that if the machine is as represented it will be purchased by the Company.

The meeting of the Town Committee on Monday evening to hear from and consult with the different road overseers of the several road districts in our township in regard to the purchase of crushed stone for our roads, was attended by all the overseers with the exception of two. The majority of the overseers favored our mountain stone instead of the stone screening from the railroad crusher. The town committee requested the overseer to give to them an order for the quantity and kind of stone they wanted, and they would see that the stone was furnished. Our town is bound to keep up its reputation for good roads. Our property owners find it a great benefit in the sales of real estate at much better prices where there are good stone roads than with mud roads.

The surveyors of highways met on Friday last to correct and amend the returns as ordered by the Court, in reference to the extension of North avenue from Central avenue to Elmer street. All the surveyors were present. The applicants were represented by Jas. C. Bolton, Esq., and the township by its counsel, Frank Bergen, Esq. The surveyors went over the proposed line and altered and changed their first report as follows: they laid the road fifty feet wide, instead of sixty-six feet as originally laid, taking off sixteen feet in width from the southerly side of line. They changed the assessment as follows: damages to Margaret Crouch, $500; to Mary C. Cox, $500; to Ezra Miller, $250; to J. Hervy Townly, $75; to Matthias Townly, $25; to John S. Irving, $500. Total damages, $1,850, which was assessed upon the township at large.

BRONNER, from his Newark office, who will again demonstrate to the ladies, free of charge, how they can restore and retain a clear, pure and spotless complexion, by the only natural and healthful method yet discovered. Also how to prevent falling and loss of hair, premature grayness, baldness, etc. "The great skin beautifier 'Gift of Beauty,'" and the wonderful "Hair Gift" for the hair, have, for more than ten years, been considered indispensable toilet requisites by elite society ladies in all the large cities. Miss BRONNER will be at her parlors, City Hotel, (ladies' entrance) five days, commencing Monday, May 10th. Positively her last visit.

A WELL REMEMBERED PROMISE—DR. ELLIOTT DURKEE, the old reliable "Painless Foot Doctor," always mindful of his duty to his many patrons, and also wishing to respond to the universal popular demand, announces a third visit to the City Hotel, Plainfield, N. J., commencing Monday, May 10th, thus effectually proving his unfailing success and ability in the painless cure of corns, bunions, ingrowing nails, enlarged and inflamed toe joints, callosities, or any other of the numerous and harassing ills that afflict the human feet, and are the cause of so much annoyance and suffering. No one who values ease and comfort in walking, will miss this last opportunity of securing the services of this famous Chiropodist, who for nearly twenty years has been spoken of as "a public benefactor" by the thousands he has made happy through his wonderful method of treating [illegible]. Physicians [illegible] his skill and gladly endorse him; clergymen and their families bear joyful witness; leading newspapers are [illegible] in giving him [illegible] praise, for Dr. Durkee is painstaking, careful and conscientious, frank in his dealings, reasonable in his prices, and successful in every case where his simple directions are followed after treatment. It is with pleasure he respectfully refers to the following well-known residents of Plainfield, all of whom he invites to call and receive further attention, if any is needed, free of charge. Dr. Durkee is proud of their patronage, and hopes all other sufferers [illegible] will call and be cured likewise. MR. JOHN HALL says: "I cordially endorse the sentiments of REV. DR. MURRAY." The latter says: "I gladly commend Dr. Durkee to all who may be suffering with sore feet, having personally tested his method of cure, with success and satisfaction. His treatment is gentle and painless. (Signed) T. LOGAN MURRAY, Rector, Church of the Holy Cross." MR. W. J. LEONARD says: "He removed my corns almost before I knew it, and without the slightest twinge." MR. CHAS. POTTER was a severe sufferer but was quickly relieved by Dr. Durkee. Also refers to MR. F. M. FRENCH, E. D. GILMORE, Esq., MR. I. BROKAW, MR. G. H. LYON, and more than two hundred others, two-thirds of whom are ladies. A notable case, referred to by permission: Miss E. [illegible] had been a constant sufferer for more than two years with a festered ingrowing toe nail, so much so as to impair her general health. Cured in one treatment by Dr. Durkee. Even little children have come. Note the following from MASTER WM. LEONARD: "Dr. Durkee removed two soft corns from my toes, without the least pain or feeling, so that they do not hurt me at all. (Signed) W. [illegible] LEONARD." Scores of like incidents could be mentioned did space permit, but no one will be sceptical after reading the above names. Dr. Durkee will be at the City Hotel, Plainfield, Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, May 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th and 14th. Positively five days only and no extension. Don't miss this last chance. Rooms open day and evening. Consultation free always.

AFTER DINNER.
Persons who suffer from Indigestion can arrest the progress of that painful malady by the use of an after-dinner pill, so composed that it will give tone to the stomach, prevent heartburn, rouse the liver to healthful action, invigorate the kidneys, and thus, through the activity of these organs, promote the natural movement of the stomach and bowels. AYER'S PILLS are so compounded that their action, though mild, effectually produces the above results. They also, in curing Constipation, remove the cause of Biliousness, Liver Complaint, Kidney Disease, Rheumatism, and many other serious ailments.
AYER'S PILLS
contain no mineral nor poisonous substance, and do not gripe unless the bowels are irritated, and even then their influence is healing. To continue their effect in constipated or chronic cases, they need only be taken in diminishing instead of increasing doses. For women, and inhabitants or travelers in sparsely settled countries where physicians are not at hand, they are of inestimable value. There is hardly a sickness they will not alleviate, and in most cases cure, if taken promptly. To young girls just entering upon womanhood, and to women whose period of maternity is drawing to a close, Ayer's Pills, in moderate doses, merely sufficient to ensure regular action of the bowels, will be found of Incalculable Value.

WE TAKE pleasure in calling attention of our customers and all interested in sanitary matters to the all porcelain "Perfection," the only square top Hopper, with trap, made.—For perfect cleanliness and simplicity of construction we invite comparison with any Closet ever manufactured, either home or foreign. It combines, with the utmost simplicity, all the points of a strictly first-class water-closet. The square top will make itself apparent to all users, in doing away with drip tray, the wash at all times thoroughly scouring all parts, whereas in the drip tray it cannot help but become foul underneath. It has a seal in Trap of 1¼ inches, and the soil pipe vent of 2 inches diameter, as will be seen in the above cut, will prevent all syphoning of Trap. The two local or vent vents of 1¼ inches diameter are intended for right or left ventilation, the one not being used to be closed. The large handhole in front gives free access to all parts of trap.

THE action of the Clerk of the weather recently, has been rather a summary proceeding.

THE Crescent will be open for a special matinee, to-morrow afternoon, with music from 2.30 to 5.30.

FISH COMMISSIONER BROWER is endeavoring to entice the trout from streams in Herkimer county, New York.

THE regular monthly meeting of the Board of Managers of the Plainfield Fire Department will be held next Tuesday evening.

THE roadway from the Netherwood station to the hotel, is being repaired and permanently improved by a top dressing of crushed stone.

AN electric lamp on the globe of which are the words "Netherwood Station," illuminates the depot and surroundings of our pretty little suburb.

IN our advertising columns to-day, appears the announcement of the sale by auction of the grounds of the Union and Middlesex Agricultural Association.

ABOUT two hundred enjoyed the programme of music and tableaux, besides the other novelties and attractions of the Park avenue Kaffee Klatsch, Tuesday evening.

IT is said that a White House Station cat has attained nineteen pounds in weight and twenty-one years in age. Jum, jum, but wouldn't he be a daisy in the newly planted garden?

ANOTHER "harbinger" is the arrival in this vicinity of that peripatetic race known as the "nobie" gypsies. They are, however, not such an emphatic nuisance as the genus tramp.

THE remains of Ruth Newhall, the little daughter of Mr. H. B. Newhall of Seventh street, who died last Thursday morning, were buried in Providence during Sunday, beside her mother.

REPORTS from every part of the county, and, indeed, from the State generally, are to the effect that Arbor Day was not allowed to pass unobserved. A great many trees were planted.

EX COUNCILMAN JOS. R. BENNETT has removed to Plainfield, with his family. The smiling face of Joe will be greatly missed by his numerous friends in Rahway.—Rahway Democrat.

THE family of Mr. Palmer Skillman of New York, which last year spent the season at the residence of Mr. Shaddle of Netherwood, has this time rented the Rutter mansion on Crescent avenue for the Summer.

THE new organ for the Crescent avenue church will be in position in six weeks. The public hope it will be dedicated with a concert, whereat the most talented organists of the profession will christen the instrument.

THE fifteenth annual meeting of the New Jersey Pharmaceutical Association will be held at the Metropolitan rink at Newark, Wednesday and Thursday of next week. Mr. R. J. Shaw of this city is the corresponding secretary.

PROF. WALSH, who is remembered as the Director of amusements and dancing at The Netherwood, is now present at the hotel every Tuesday and Thursday evening until the first of June, after which he will be in charge again continually during the season.

THE interior of the Potter residence on West Seventh street, is being decorated from designs by Bartholomew & Co., of New York, the same artists that decorated the walls and ceilings of the "sanctum" and publication office of THE CONSTITUTIONALIST.

NEWS comes to us by cablegram of the death in Baden Baden, Germany, during Monday last of Florence Schetter, the man who created Netherwood, built all its early residences, laid out its avenues, planned and projected its hotel and its station, and in fact the man to whom alone is due the credit of its existence.

A CHORUS of two or three hundred voices selected from the choirs and Sunday schools of the city, could join Messrs. Moody and Sankey in their services of praise, and lead the gatherings in their songs of joy and promise, if the meetings are held in Music Hall or The Crescent, where the wicked would not be elbowed aside or crowded out by the "few that are chosen."

SINCE the close of Lent, business has been so particularly good at Music Hall as to propagate that nuisance, the ticket speculator. But his success on "Mikado night" was overcome by his misfortunes of the following Thursday, when Modjeska appeared to a house that had been warned to purchase all the tickets necessary beforehand. He will probably try it again next week, but in time will discover he can't make a fortune in Plainfield. He never will be missed.

MR. C. H. DAVIS of Ninth street, the artist who designed the very elegant programme cover for The Crescent, has just finished an original menu folder for The Netherwood. On its front is an artistic medallion of a female head, the name of the hotel and that of its Manager, Mr. S. V. Woodruff, the words "fourth season 1886," and surrounding arabesques and graceful groundwork. On the back are both the station and the hotel perfectly reproduced. It will be retained by those who secure one, both for its beauty and as a souvenir.

THE Rahway Democrat of last week speaks as follows regarding one of Plainfield's well-known public institutions, Laing's Hotel: "This popular resort is well known to most of our readers, no doubt, and it is not necessary to enter into a lengthy history of it. It was established in 1828 by Abram Laing, and has always been the recognized favorite one with visitors. It was conducted by Mr. Laing until 1847, at which time it came under the control of his son, Mr. John W. Laing, who made many additions and improvements and enlarged the house, so that but little remains of the old original masonry, but in its place a house of magnificent proportions, having dimensions of 200x400 feet. Mr. John Laing, in 1880, retired from active business pursuits, when it came under the proprietorship of Mr. George Miller, a gentleman of many years' experience as a host, who made still further improvements and refitted and refurnished the house throughout. In 1881 the house came under the sole proprietorship of his son, Mr. Joseph B. Miller, a young man of business tact, ability and experience in catering to the public requirements, and he knows exactly how to meet in every respect the tastes of the people of refinement and discrimination, and conducts the house in the same liberal manner that has heretofore made it popular. A first-class livery is connected with the house, where stylish horses and fashionable equipages can always be had at reasonable prices."

VICE CHANCELLOR JOHN T. BIRD was in our city on Monday and yesterday on official business.

THERE will be a matinee at The Crescent, to-morrow afternoon, with music and roller skating from 2.30 to 5.30.

THE death of the little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. H. Lyon, Jr., of College place, occurred during Wednesday last.

THE Rev. W. R. Richards of this city, was elected Moderator of the Elizabeth Presbytery, at its meeting last week in Cranford.

CHAS. H. PENFIELD, M. D., offers his professional services to the people of this city and vicinity. Office and residence at No. 51 Broadway, near corner of Fifth street.

IN the Trinity Reformed church next Sunday evening, the Rev. A. V. V. Raymond will give the second of his discourses on the labor "question." He has stated the causes with much ability and interest, and will now give his ideas of the remedies.

PREPARATION is being made for the organization of a local base-ball nine from the able material at hand. A game will be arranged for Decoration Day, and possibly a permanent team may be constructed to uphold the honor of this city on the diamond field during the season.

THE Crescent avenue Sunday School is the last to give a Summer excursion, but the first to announce it. It will go to Ocean Grove and Asbury Park, Thursday Sept. 23, stopping at Long Branch, both ways. In consequence of all of which, the census of the School will begin to increase a few weeks before the date set.

IF the "private" theatricals (to be given in public) by Plainfield amateurs, of which we recently spoke, are given, it will probably be during the last week of this month, in Music Hall. Two of the principal artists, on whom so much depends for success, are as yet unable to appear, but their places will be acceptably filled.

VERY slight will be the satisfaction of the people at large, and very light will be the increase of righteousness in the community, if the Moody & Sankey meetings are to be held in church auditoriums that were shown to be too small to hold the already converted that crowded out the sinners during the late visit of Mr. Pentecost.

A SCHEME is on foot having for its object the cutting through of a new street to make a direct thoroughfare from the station to Front street, and crossing the brook to connect with another road parallel with Somerset street. The street proposed would enter North avenue a few hundred feet or so towards Park avenue from a point opposite the depot building.

THE season at The Netherwood fairly opened on Saturday last, the first of May. There are already about eighty guests in the hotel and rooms engaged ahead for as many more. The Keller brass band and orchestra of New York, that Manager Woodruff has engaged for the season, may be heard daily on the lawn in front of the hotel, or of an evening at the station before dinner.

THE sister of Mr. Corydon E. Tyler of Crescent avenue, was the wife of Mr. E. G. Halbert who was recently killed by the cyclone at Sauk Rapids, Minn. Upon the receipt of the news of the catastrophe Mr. Tyler hurried at once to the scene, and was with the grief stricken widow throughout the sad pilgrimage with the remains to their last resting place at Binghamton, N. Y.

THE property at the corner of Central avenue and Fourth street, recently purchased by Mr. J. Smith Garretson, has been so improved by the new owner as to now be one of the most charming little homes about the city. A number of the large trees that formerly darkened and dampened the premises have been cut down, the grounds have been graded and one hundred feet of new fencing surrounds them.

INTERIOR lighting by electricity is already being considered for various places, and the Trustees of the Crescent avenue church have about decided to introduce incandescent lighting inside that edifice as soon as the Plainfield Electric Light Company is ready to furnish it. The ventilation of the church is so imperfect and so unbearable (almost) that it is believed, with reason, the introduction of electric light will overcome it all.

THE ladies of Grace church spent Tuesday afternoon in The Crescent planning the arrangements for the grand fair to be given by them during Tuesday and Wednesday, the 18th and 19th insts. Of course the details of an entertainment on so large a scale can not be perfected except with the expenditure of much labor, patience, perseverance and time. Therefore nothing can be said at present more definite than that is to be the great event of its kind.

IN a city possessing such large auditoriums for the gathering of great numbers of people, as Music Hall or The Crescent, it seems absurd to hold revival meetings with Messrs. Moody and Sankey in small churches. Gather them in from all the places along the railroad as well as from the highways and the byways of our own city. But you can't expect the sinner will be coaxed to take a ticket and come into the church meetings with the intention or purpose of being voluntarily converted.

IS North Plainfield to be visited by another assaulter of women? If so, the sooner the Marshals stir around and bore the brute full of holes, the better. About ten minutes after ten of Tuesday night, a scoundrel seized a young girl near the corner of Craig place and Duer street, and succeeded in his purpose of frightening her almost to death. As she broke away with loud screams for help, her assailant fled without being identified by the scores of neighbors that are ready to swear they saw him.

THE wedding first announced in these columns of Mrs. Maria Louise Kaufman, daughter of Lawrence Myers of East Front street, and Mr. Frederick G. Mead of New York city, took place at the residence of the bride's parents, Thursday evening of last week. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. William R. Richards of the Crescent avenue church, and an entire tree was cut down to furnish the apple blossoms that decorated the occasion. Only the relatives and connections of the contracting parties were present.

MR. EDWARD BENNETT, whose wife is the sister of Street Commissioner Whitlock of North Plainfield, hung himself in his saw mill near Neshanic, during Monday last, by tying a rope around his neck and getting down on his knees. The suicide was undoubtedly caused by an attack of temporary insanity, as the victim had no financial troubles and is belived to be worth about $25,000. He had just received a large order, and having engaged his engineer had gone to the mill on Monday to get ready for starting up the next day. When the engineer arrived on Tuesday morning he found his employer dead as we have stated.

THE announcement elsewhere in this issue of one more visit of Dr. Dupree, the gifted Chiropodist, to Plainfield, is a speedy and pleasant answer to the many requests he has received urging him to do so, and his rooms at the City Hotel will have to be spacious to accommodate all who will desire to see him. A careful perusal of his references in "Want" column on second page will convince all sufferers with sore feet that they need limp around no longer, and Dr. Dupree's third and last visit will no doubt be as great a success every way as his two previous ones, and that is saying a great deal. He has been long in practice and has the confidence of all his patrons and the public generally. He comes Monday morning, May 10th, remaining five days.

THE Mayor and Council of the Borough of North Plainfield will hold their regular monthly meeting this evening.

THE Grand Jurors from this city are Gen'l Wm. H. Sterling and Messrs J. J. H. Poillon, D. J. Marshall and B. F. Coriell.

MR. J. WESLEY ROBERTSON, of North Plainfield, whose sickness we spoke of last week, died at his residence on Emily street, yesterday.

HIS Honor, the Mayor, has signed the ordinance for the assessment and collection of taxes, and the contract with the Plainfield Electric Light Co.

RICHARD A. CRAMER, an employee of Geo. Kesselring, the Park avenue barber, died suddenly from heart disease, after two day's illness, on Wednesday last.

WHAT'S the matter with the Street Commissioner? Why, Oh why, doesn't he carry out the provisions of the ordinance and see that the trees are trimmed?

BECAUSE of the illness of his wife, President Beguelin of the Common Council will not sail with her for their intended European trip until the 19th inst., at least.

THE annual election of its Directors and the annual meeting of its stockholders, will take place in the parlors of Music Hall, next Monday evening, as advertised elsewhere.

HERE'S a "tip" for the wicked ticket speculator. If Mr. Moody's sermons are to be preached in the churches with admission by limited tickets, secure all you can get—"there's millions in it."

EX-SECRETARY POUND, of the Plainfield Bicycle Club, has entered into partnership with Mr. Harold Serrell, in the sale of bicycles and bicycle sundries. Their new advertisement will appear in our next issue.

DURING the summer trip of Mr. Samuel Milliken and family, their residence on Central avenue has been rented by Mr. Charles Griffen, of Brooklyn, brother of Dr. J. F. Griffen of this city and uncle of Mr. A. M. Griffen.

MUSIC HALL has been engaged for the evening of Thursday, the 27th inst., by the amateurs of this city who are to give an entertainment of "private" theatricals for the benefit of the Church of the Heavenly Rest at Evona.

MISS LIDA AMES at Reform Hall, last Monday evening, sang in a most positive manner that she "Knew that her lover loved her." No matter, Lida, many better singers and wiser women have been just as certain and just as mistaken in this matter as yourself.

AT his greenhouses on Somerset street, just north of Johnston's drive, Mr. F. W. Miles is offering all kinds of potted plants, including all the new roses, chrysanthemums, carnations and geraniums. No such assortment has ever before been placed within the reach of the public.

THERE was some improvement in its music, Wednesday evening, but if the Music Hall orchestra doesn't learn some new ones its members will all be foully (or rather, fairly) murdered, some night, and their bodies strewn along the track between here and their homes in Newark.

FOR the purpose of securing more stable room, Mr. Endicott has bought of Mr. A. Vanderbeek, the house and lot on Fourth street next to the former's residence. The house will be rented as at present, but the stables for the Doctor's new and handsome span of greys will be erected back of it.

ACCORDING to the provisions of an ordinance published by us this week, the police are empowered to shoot every dog found running at large without a muzzle during the months of June, July and August. For each dog shot they are to receive 50 cents, and 50 cents each for burial.

THOSE of the Borough's philanthropic citizens who propose to subscribe towards the cost of the public electric lights on Somerset and Duer streets, are requested to sign the paper in Dr. Mattison's drug store at once as the work of erecting the poles and wires through the city and Borough is to commence in a few days.

WE are happy to say for the satisfaction of many ladies and children who have escaped with their lives, that the regular police are on the track of the boys with flobert rifles and ball cartridges, that we have spoken of before. We know of one or two high toned gentlemen who will be surprised when they are called upon to bail out their young heirs.

THE livery stables on North avenue opposite the station, have been purchased of the former proprietor, Mr. Frank Day, by his brother Richard. The new owner has plenty of the experience necessary to help him in continuing the stables in the same satisfactory manner as during the past, so there will be no change in any particular of fair dealing or good service.

IN the window of Green's furniture store is exhibited the celebrated "Trick Mule" bicycle that is to make its first appearance in this city upon the occasion of the Bicycle Club's entertainment in The Crescent. This (infernal) machine can be ridden, and a silk umbrella is to be given the one that does ride it—but you should see the ones that don't. It's more contrary than a woman.

DURING Saturday night of last week, Demeza's kindling-wood factory on Elm street, was burned to the ground. The building was a total loss and a cow and horse were also burned to death. A renewal of the insurance had just been effected, and although the premium had not yet been paid, the agency of Messrs. J. C. Pope & Co. adjusted the loss at once, amounting to $800 in the German American and Commercial-Union Insurance Companies.

QUITE a large audience at two-for-a-quarter, gathered in Reform Hall, last Monday evening, to hear a programme of music, literature and drama arranged by the Reform Club and carried out principally, by a family of Jones. The great feature of the evening appeared to be the singing of a song by little Minnie Jones, to whose father, Dr. Justin Fulton, of Brooklyn, is accused of saying, when he heard her sing, "Take that child away." But, then, Dr. Fulton would say most anything.

WHITE'S new store at No. 18 W. Front street, is chuck full of an assortment of dry and fancy goods that includes everything for the season that a lady can desire for her adornment or comfort. The store is well lighted and spacious, and one of the most attractive places for "shopping" in the city. The attendants are courteous, and all dealings are entirely just and fair in every particular. In our advertising columns each week, are set forth the assortment of bargains offered at the very lowest prices.

THE second appearance of Mr. Joseph Jefferson at Music Hall, was welcomed by fully as large and fashionable an audience as before. The star, with his really good company, gave an exceedingly smooth and effective interpretation of Dickens' "Cricket on the Hearth," with an amusing after-piece that showed the favorite in another distinct character. Mr. Jefferson was the same kind old kind of a fellow as "Rip," and said "My Dear" and crept into everybody's heart in the same old way. His reception was flattering in its sincerity. Mr. Edwin T. Phillips who played "John," deserves the most sincere commendation. His characterization was perfect throughout.

A Truly Good Company.

Next Tuesday evening at Music Hall, for the first time this season, a programme of truly good variety is to be given by the very best company in the country. Mr. Tony Pastor has combined a variety of talent and ability seldom equalled on the road, and those who attend may be assured of getting just what they go for. In the advertisement on the opposite page will be seen the list of artists.

The Moody Meetings.

The gospel services of which we spoke, have been arranged for under the supervision of Mr. Moody, will begin on Sunday morning at the Trinity Reformed church at nine o'clock. Messrs. Whittle and McGranahan—the latter, the singer—are the evangelists that follow Mr. Moody and finish up the work he commences, but in this case they are to precede him and begin the work here. These meetings are to continue every day, and on Wednesday or Thursday Mr. Moody will arrive and take charge until the beginning of the following week. Those who attend are requested to bring their Gospel Hymns, 1, 2, 3 and 4 combined.

As We Didn't Like It.

Ninety out of each of the six hundred present at the appearance of Modjeska at Music Hall, Thursday night of last week, were disappointed. Not that she wasn't good (in a broken-Polish way that yet has power to charm) but old theatre goers could recall so many that had excelled her in the past and remembered so many of the present who would have made more satisfactory "Rosalinds," that they were simply disappointed. To Mr. E. H. Vanderfelt as "Orlando" is due the credit of saving the play from utter desolation; and some credit is also due Miss Shaw as "Celia." The rest of the cast was composed of indifferent talent and most ordinary ability.

Kenney—Hughes.

Mr. John J. Kenney, the popular young shoe merchant of North avenue, and Miss Mary Hughes, daughter of Michael Hughes, of this city, were married on Wednesday evening at St. Mary's church, Rev. Father Smyth officiating. Mr. T. Day, of New York, was best man and Miss Mary Mullen, of this city, bridesmaid. A reception was held at the future residence of the happy couple, No. 96 East Second street, which was attended by a large number of guests, including many from Phillipsburg, Hampton Junction and Asbury, N. J.; Brooklyn and New York. A bountiful collation was served after the reception, to which the guests did ample justice, after which music, singing and dancing was indulged in until a late hour. The presents were numerous and costly, including useful and ornamental articles. Our congratulations are extended to the happy couple.

Chief of the Fire Department.

Upon the withdrawal of ex Chief Jennings from re-election to that office in the gift of the Plainfield Fire Department, the companies who had all joined in unanimously renominating him were at a loss for a successor; and a sort of a go-as-you-please election took place during Monday evening. The candidates were Foreman Mumford of Zephyr H. & L. Co. and First Assistant Chief Saltzman, with the following result:

FOR CHIEF.
A. Saltzman	112
S. A. Mumford	56
Saltzman's majority	56
FIRST ASSISTANT.
J. Erwin Waters	142
A. Saltzman	28
Waters' majority	114
SECOND ASSISTANT.
Thos. J. Lynes	135
J. Erwin Waters	36
Lynes' majority	99

Total number of votes cast, 172.

The Last of the Vocal Society.

The final preparations for the grand concert which has been promised us by the Vocal Society, are almost completed. The members have been working faithfully in order to retire in a blaze of glory and the concert will probably be the best of the season. The first part of the programme will consist of soli, part songs (including one of Mr. Fitzhugh's male quartettes), and, as we have been promised, the reading of Meredith's "Aux Italiens," by Chas. Roberts, Jr., accompanied by a string quartette. The masterpiece of the evening is, however, to be Mendelssohn's "Athalia," with full orchestral accompaniment, which, although it has been given several times in this city, is always very enjoyable. The soloists of the evening are Mrs. Grant, who assisted the society last year, Mrs. T. W. Davis of this city, soprano, and Mrs. Cannon of Newark, contralto. The society will be obliged to dispense with the services of their usual piano accompanist, Miss Fitzhugh, as she is to take a prominent part in wedding festivities about the time of the concert. They will, however, be assisted by Miss Jessie M. Utter, who has, during past years, kindly lent her services at the rehearsals, and who is equally well fitted for the position.

Somerset County Teachers' Association.

The annual meeting of the Somerset County Teachers' Association was held in the Public School building at North Plainfield, Saturday, May 1st, an unusually large number of teachers being present. The meeting was called to order at 10 o'clock, by Vice President Hoffman of Bound Brook. After devotional exercises, an interesting and practical paper on Advanced Reading was given by Mr. W. A. Coddington, of Bound Brook, followed by an essay on "The Teachers' Trials and Triumphs," by Miss VanKirk. The close attention given the reader throughout showed how thoroughly all present enjoyed the article, which was brought to a close with an original poem, which we regret not being able to give in full. Miss Roome then presented in a very able manner the "Advantages of Studying History." After which County Superintendent announced that the Teachers' Institute for Somerset and Hunterdon counties, would be held at Somerville, May 17, 18 and 19. Noon recess was then taken, when all present adjourned to the basement of the building for lunch. On reassembling at 2 o'clock, President Keenan took the chair, having arrived during the morning session. The first for the afternoon was a class exercise on botany by Miss Corwin. The prompt answers given by her pupils showed how thorough must be her class-room work. Mr. J. S. Haynes, of Somerville, gave a very interesting account of the beetle, after which Miss Wyckoff favored those present with recitation. Mr. Frank Stryker then spoke on electricity, showing how with very simple apparatus, electricity may be generated and many interesting experiments made. The programme was brought to a close with a recitation by Mr. W. L. Voorhees. The association then proceeded to the election of officers for the ensuing year, which resulted as follows: President—Miss E. R. Ginn, of North Plainfield; Vice President—Mr. W. A. Coddington, of Bound Brook; Secretary—Mr. N. Y. Dungan, of Somerville; Treasurer—Miss M. Purdue, of North Plainfield. The Committee on Resolutions reported the following which was adopted.

Resolved, That the thanks of the association be tendered the teachers of the North Plainfield Public School, for their bountiful collation and kind attention, also to the trustees for use of building. The next meeting of the association will be held the first Saturday in November, at Raritan.

NEW YORK, April 13th, 1886.

To His Honor the Mayor and the Honorable members of the Common Council of the City of Plainfield, New Jersey:

GENTLEMEN:—We desire to call your attention to the fact that we are largely engaged in building and operating systems of Water supply for many cities in different parts of the United States, notably Paducah, Ky., Sharon, Pa., Vincennes, Ind., Pensacola, Fla., Denison, Tex., Corry, Pa., etc., to the authorities of any and all of which places we respectfully beg leave to refer you as to our manner of conducting such business and the benefits resultant to them respectively.

Male, esq., President Union National Bank, N. Y.; Wm. G. Hopper & Co., Philadelphia, Pa.; Wilson, Colston & Co., Baltimore, Md.; Bradstreets or R. G. Dun & Co.'s Commercial Agencies, as well as to all manufacturers of cast iron pipes, steam pumps, hydrants, etc., in the United States.

We have for a long time been considering the feasibility of providing an ample supply of pure, wholesome water for your city, sufficient for domestic, manufacturing and fire extinguishing purposes, but have refrained from making any direct proposition to you, until we could ascertain that such opening of negotiations on our part would receive the consideration which, in our opinion, the importance of the subject demands.

Having understood that several parties who are, have been, or hope to be engaged in a similar business with ourselves, had approached you upon this subject, we beg leave to say to you, that we would feel honored and pleased at any time to meet any or all of you at such time and place as your wishes and convenience dictate and briefly present the more prominent features of the method proposed for accomplishing our object in your city.

As an earnest of our good faith in the matter we will agree should you consider our proposition favorably to deposit with your City Treasurer, upon the passage of an ordinance satisfactory to yourselves and us, our certified check on the First National Bank of New York for five thousand dollars, said check to be returned to us, if within sixty days from passage of ordinance we shall have furnished material and performed work in double the amount of said check, otherwise check to be forfeited to the city.

Mr. E. Woltmann, who is in our employ and who has been a resident of your city for about five years, has power to act for us and any and all acts which he may perform in the premises are fully sanctioned by us. Hoping to have the honor of communicating personally with your Honorable Body, we remain, gentlemen,

Your obedient servants,

SPORTSMEN'S CORNER.

Over a thousand choice dogs have been occupying the attention of the public the past few days at Madison Square Garden.

The return team match between the Middlesex Gun Club and the Jersey City Heights Gun Club, will take place on the grounds of the former at Dunellen, N. J., on Wednesday, May 12th. In the first match shot at Marion, N. J., between these two clubs two weeks ago, the Jersey City's were victorious by a "small majority" of seven birds. They are the crack club of the State but will need bring their best shooters to win the coming match. The Middlesex Gun Club is a new organization, composed of about one hundred gentlemen, among whom are some good shots. The club has fine enclosed grounds near Dunellen station, and a comfortable and commodious Club House. Next Wednesday's match will attract a large attendance of sportsmen from all parts of the State.

THE FACT OF THE MATTER.

"That will never do, Miss Josie. Your work does not improve much, I observe," said a chunky individual with a sleek, coppery head, a sombre visage, and a marvelous cravat.

He had just entered the long work-room, and he was critically examining an elaborately braided jersey, completed at the moment.

"Is there something wrong with the braiding?" asked Josie, an uncommonly pretty girl, with large brown eyes and a delicate lily face.

"The braid does not follow the lines of the pattern, and you are using thread much too coarse," the chunky young man said, as he still inspected the work, and still with the air of an experienced authority.

"You instructed me yourself, Mr. Hunt, to use none other than that particular thread," Josie said with spirit, but not uncivilly.

"I think not, Miss Josie. Very likely you have forgotten what my instructions really were. The fact of the matter is, our manufactory is not quite the place for you. I am not blaming you, Miss Josie; you are willing, no doubt, but you are not strong enough for such unremitting labor; and you cannot help being remiss when you are weary and worried," Mr. Hunt returned in his slow, sleek, insinuative fashion.

The girl lifted her tired, pale face, and for an instant she attentively regarded him.

Certainly he was not eminently prepossessing, with his chunky frame, his shambling gait, his dull and shifting eyes. She had never felt the smallest liking for him; she hated the sound of his grandiloquent and unnaturally smooth tones; she detested the sight of his bloodless and Ishmaelitish visage.

She did not know precisely how much authority he really had in the manufactory; he was always shambling and prying about the building when the superintendent chanced away, and she had decided that he must be a moneyed member of the new firm. He did not come infrequently to that department, and he always came with the air of a master—with an air of superior discrimination and absolute authority which was obviously meant to be very impressive.

"I try not to be remiss at all," Josie said somewhat impatiently and with a prompt motion to change the spools of her braiding machine.

He moved a little more nearer to her side; he bent so closely over her that his bloodless visage almost touched her brown pretty head.

"We are sure of that, Miss Josie," he said in a smooth whisper close to her dainty ear. "You try to do everything that is correct and agreeable! But the fact of the matter is you are too delicate and sensitive for our coarse and noisy factory. But you know I am ready to take you away—you know I am ready to make you my wife."

With that extraordinary declaration he stepped back, seemed profoundly occupied with the animadverted jersey, and awaited her response.

But the girl looked neither flattered nor conciliatory; her spirited face crimsoned and whitened again; her large eyes blazed like flames.

"You would do me too much honor," she said with an unmistakable undertone of contempt in her civil voice.

"The fact of the matter is you cannot afford to refuse me," he pursued, with the suggestion of a threat in his sombre, shifting eyes. "You are so incompetent, you know, that your work is not valuable to us. We—"

She interrupted him by a gesture of ineffable scorn.

"I can maintain myself—and elsewhere," said she, abruptly putting down her spools, and hastily arising from her seat.

"O, just as you please! We can easily obtain somebody for your place, you know. You can come to the office for the trifle due you," the interesting young gentleman said with a change of aspect and with his most insolently autocratic air.

As he shambled away, she became conscious of another presence—the presence of a stalwart and plainly dressed young fellow, who occasionally came there and who always had a genial smile or a bit of courteous commendation for the pale little braider.

There he stood, beside a great square column, his hands full of orders, his pen thrust behind his natty cloth cap, his steady blue eyes fixed somewhat knowingly upon her agitated countenance.

The knowing look did not lessen her agitation; she felt he had witnessed the whole little scene and that perhaps he might not pleasantly judge her. And, after all, perhaps she need not have been so precipitate—perhaps she need not have felt so affronted just because a detestably sniveling and domineering individual had criticised her braiding and then wanted to marry her!

"I need not have left the factory; Alf Kamaron will consider me silly for that—I am certain he will," she sighed as she glanced after the stalwart young fellow, who just then moved from the column and went toward a busier division of the department.

Josie did not go in quest of the trifle due her. She donned her neat hat and trim jacket and went straightway from the big and noisy building, where she had been employed only since the beginning of the season.

The early dusk was already darkening in the snowy Winter street, and the tall lamps, like huge orange sparks, glimmered along the pavements. Again she sighed ruefully. She was going home sorrowfully and alone, as she had never done since she had known Alf Kamaron—the always plainly dressed and always genial Alf, whose gentle courtesies had brightened and gladdened her monotonous life and irksome labor.

"He will be sorry I have gone—I am certain he will," she thought.

And at this instant the steady and familiar footstep sounded behind her, and the vigorous and plainly dressed figure was beside her.

"What was the trouble?" he inquired in his gentle and direct way. "Did that Hunt make himself offensive?"

"He has never made himself anything else," said Josie, ready to cry.

And then with girlish diffidence, and in a pathetically depreciatory way, she narrated what he had already sufficiently comprehended.

"You are a brave little working girl," Mr. Kamaron commented with a peculiar smile. "You would never profess to honor a person you deem despicable—not even when a bit of deceit might be an advantage to you."

"But I should always like to honor an employer," she ingenuously replied, as she paused before the entrance of her own house.

"Your employer!" Mr. Kamaron repeated, with a peculiar little laugh, as he held her hand for a second and then reluctantly let her go. "Well, you may learn to honor him, Josie. And you are to come back to the shop in the morning—I am authorized to assure you of that."

Josie fancied he looked oddly amused and provokingly mysterious, but she ventured no questions. She was gratified to feel that she was really going back to the noisy old shop and to the pleasant companionship of the considerate young fellow who was always so merry and gentle, and who wore his unpretentious working garb with such royal dignity and kingly grace.

And so she went back to the factory—but not to resume the irksome braiding.

Half-way down the work-room she was confronted by a chunky personage, resplendent with a gorgeous cravat, a wonderful pin and a conspicuously immense watch-guard.

"We have filled your place," Mr. Hunt grandiloquently announced, with his shifting eyes wandering to everything except the attentive face before him. "The fact of the matter is, we want only skilled labor. We cannot afford to keep working-women who spoil our goods and who are prone to a most reprehensible insubordination."

"And the fact of the matter is," began the quiet voice of Mr. Kamaron, who had suddenly become visible, his hands full of papers, the familiar pen thrust beneath the natty cloth cap—"The whole fact is, that you have no authority whatever here. When our superintendent wishes a holiday henceforth, he must employ a less presumptuous substitute. We have had quite enough of your officious instructions and unauthorized ordering. We do not want you in the building, sir! Is that sufficient?"

The substitute superintendent shambled backward, and so obsequiously that the irreverent Josie actually and unblushingly laughed, despite her sore bewilderment.

And Mr. Kamaron, noting the troubled and bewildered look, smiled only roguishly.

"Your mistake was not so singular, though, he explained. "The name of the firm has not yet been altered, although the firm itself was dissolved some time ago. I happen myself to be the proprietor and master here, Miss Josie, and you can resume work whenever you like."

But Josie was not destined to resume the tedious braiding. As she turned toward her old place, he rather hesitatingly detained her.

"Josie," he began, with tenderest deference, "can you not honor your employer sufficiently to give your sweet self to him, to become the mistress of his home, the sovereign of his heart? My dear love, how shall I be answered?"

Her answer was not audible; but, all the same, he knew her innocent, girlish heart was entirely his own. Master or workman, rich or poor, she loved and honored him.

"And that was the fact of the matter," he used to mischievously remind her when she had become his proud and joyous wife.

Read what the people say concerning the ability of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil, to cure asthma, catarrh, croup, colds, etc. Mrs. Dora Koch of Buffalo, says: "For croup it is decidedly efficacious." [Mrs. Jacob Mallinger of Marion, Ohio, says the same thing.] S. S. Graves, Akron, N. Y., writes: "Had asthma of the worst kind, took one dose of Thomas' Eclectric Oil and was relieved in a few minutes. Would walk five miles for this medicine and pay $1 a bottle for it." Druggist C. K. Hall, Grayville, Ill., says: "Cured an ulcerated throat for me in twenty-four hours." "Sat up in bed and coughed till the clothing was wet with perspiration. My wife insisted that I use Thomas' Eclectric Oil. The first teaspoonful relieved me." E. H. Perkins, Creek Centre, N. Y. NOTHING HIDDEN

THE MANUFACTURERS OF CLEVELAND'S SUPERIOR BAKING POWDER HAVE FOR MANY YEARS MADE KNOWN TO THE PUBLIC ALL THE INGREDIENTS OF THEIR POWDER.

In these suspicious times it is not enough that manufacturers of food preparations base their claims for patronage on the simple statement that their goods are "absolutely pure." The absolute purity of a poison intensifies the baneful effects of its improper use. The absolute purity of ammonia, a drug often used in the manufacture of baking powder and in some of the powders most largely advertised, greatly increases the force of the objection made by the most eminent scientists of our day to the use of ammonia in food. This protest of the medical and chemical professions is due to the fact that ammonia—a product of decomposition—when taken into the stomach with our daily meals is exceedingly injurious.

Hence the public should insist upon knowing what all food compounds contain and ALL that they contain. Let the edict go forth that no article intended for use in the preparation of our daily bread shall receive public support unless the manufacturers' formula be published. Then shall we have less imposition practiced upon a confiding public, and as a result less injury to the public health.

Cleveland's Superior Baking Powder is made only of strictly pure Grape Cream of Tartar, Bicarbonate of Soda, and a little wheat flour, the latter to preserve the strength of the powder; nothing else whatever.

Now that Nature is beginning to clothe herself in forms of beauty you will naturally be looking 'round for wearing apparel suitable for the season. A glance at our Spring offerings will save you a good deal of time and money too, for we were never better prepared to serve you than at present. For months past, long before you ever thought of the matter, we have been engaged in selecting, with the care and judgment born of a long experience, a diversity of fabrics that will not only please the eye, but render genuine service in the wear. We set the ball rolling with a Union Cass. Suit, in two shades, at $8. It is a marvel of cheapness and, if you don't give it away, the price you paid for it will never be guessed. In all wool goods we commence at $10. Nobby, stylish, durable and, remember, all wool. We guarantee this, and are not afraid to have them compared with anything offered near this price. The celebrated goods manufactured by the Sawyer Woollen Co. are too well known to need praise. The demand for and ready sale of these goods have been such as to lead to their imitation, and, so far as looks go, they have been successfully copied. But the wearing qualities of the Sawyer goods have not been, and cannot be, imitated. To protect themselves and those who have learned the value of their goods, the Sawyer Co. have issued tags to those who purchase the goods direct for manufacture, to be attached to every suit made up. We offer this Spring genuine Sawyer Suits, with the "tag guarantee" attached, for $13 and upward. We have them in Plaids, Checks and Mixtures, and in patterns both grave and gay. For real value, combined with elegance of style and good workmanship, they take—the cake, we we were about to say; no, the whole bakery would be more appropriate. Our general stock is full, large, varied, all manufactured this season, and at prices beyond comparison. We invite inspection. The stock itself is our best advertisement. It is more eloquent than any description we can write.

An Efficient Remedy

In all cases of Bronchial and Pulmonary Affections is AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL. As such it is recognized and prescribed by the medical profession, and in many thousands of families, for the past forty years, it has been regarded as an invaluable household remedy. It is a preparation that only requires to be taken in very small quantities, and a few doses of it administered in the early stages of a cold or cough will effect a speedy cure, and may, very possibly, save life. There is no doubt whatever that

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral

Has preserved the lives of great numbers of persons, by arresting the development of Laryngitis, Bronchitis, Pneumonia, and Pulmonary Consumption, and by the cure of these dangerous maladies. It should be kept ready for use in every family where there are children, as it is a medicine far superior to all others in the treatment of Croup, the alleviation of Whooping Cough, and the cure of Colds and Influenza, ailments peculiarly incidental to childhood and youth. Promptitude in dealing with all diseases of this class is of the utmost importance. The loss of a single day may, in many cases, entail fatal consequences. Do not waste precious time in experimenting with medicines of doubtful efficacy, while the malady is constantly gaining a deeper hold, but take at once the speediest and most certain to cure,

"ELIZA."

BY HELEN FOREST GRAVES.

"She makes a perfect picture, out there in that tropical sunshine," said Mr. Villiars. "Look at her, with that scarlet ribbon at her neck and those coils of hair waving blue-black in the intense light! It is like a dream of Italy?"

"Yes," said Mrs. Leeds, "she is very pretty, but that don't signify so much. She's a good, smart girl, and don't loose any time looking at herself in the glass, like some I've had."

"Where did you pick her up?" asked the young clergyman, carelessly drawing the newspaper from his pocket as he sat down on the carpet of pine needles under the big evergreen tree.

"Didn't pick her up anywhere," said Mrs. Leeds tartly (for this was a part of the transaction that had never been quite satisfactory to her business-like soul). "She came along."

"Came along?" (with a slight accent of surprise).

"Yes—looking for work."

Mr. Villiars lifted his eyebrows.

"Then how do you know who she is?" he asked.

"I don't know!" retorted Mrs. Leeds, unconsciously betraying her weak point by this irritability of manner, "but I know what she is, and that's more to the purpose. She's the best washer that ever crossed my threshold: as docile as a kitten, and as smart as a cricket; does twice the work of anyone else that I ever had; and if she's ever tired, she don't say so."

Mrs. Leeds bustled off to interview Farmer Parks for more Alderney cream for the summer boarders, now that the house was beginning to fill up.

Mr. Villiars improvised a pillow out of his coat folding it cylinderwise and placed under his head, and closed his eyes in a sort of summer dream among the pine boughs and butterflies.

And Eliza, spreading out blackberries to dry on the board platform that had been erected along the garden fence, began to sing softly to herself. She was very silent ordinarily, but somehow it seemed as if the sunshine had thawed out her heart to-day.

Mr. Villiars had been right. There was something of the atmosphere of Italy about Eliza—her eyes were so deep and dark, her hair so glossily black, her cheek stained with such a rich olive.

Moreover, she did not move like the girls of rock-bound New England. There was subtle, gliding motion—a languor of gracefulness in her gait—which was foreign to all her surroundings.

The girls of the vicinage did not fraternize with Eliza when, at rare intervals, she accompanied Mrs. Leeds to church, sewing circle, or village gathering; for in Stapleville the employer and employed occupied one all comprehensive social platform.

They said she was "odd;" they looked at her askance; and Eliza, always very quiet in her ways, made no effort to insinuate herself into their good graces.

Why should she? What did it signify, one way or the other, whether Deborah Smart, and Keziah Hayes, and Abby Jane Clark liked her or not, as long as Mrs. Leeds was pleased with her?

But the village girls made one error in their calculations. They had not intended, as the time crept on, to emphasize their antipathy to Mrs. Leeds' Eliza so strongly as to awake a partisan feeling in Mr. Villiars' breast; but they did so, unconsciously to themselves.

"Why do they neglect that girl so?" the the young clergyman asked himself. "Can they not see how infinitely superior she is to them? It's a shame!"

And so Abby Jane Clark, the Deborah Smart, and Keziah Hayes sealed their own doom, so far as Mr. Villiars was concerned.

There was not one of them but would have been delighted to win a smile, a glance, a pleasant word from the young man who was summering at the Leeds farm house.

But, alas! like the priest and the Levite, he passed by on the other side; and when the village girls in their afternoon muslins and ribbons sat at their windows and wondered why "he came not," he was, in nine cases out of ten helping Eliza to gather peaches for tea; standing beside the brook, while she spread out towels and pocket handkerchiefs to bleach, or even explaining to her the difference between the notes of the thrush and the woodlark, the speckled eggs of the robin and the pearl gray treasure of the whip-poor-will.

"He seems to be taking a notion to her," said Mrs. Leeds to herself, as she eyed the pair shrewdly from her milk-room window. "Well, why shouldn't he? It's true he's a minister, and my own nephew; but in my mind Eliza is good enough for any man. My sakes! won't Abby Jane Clark be mad? If ever a girl wanted to be a parson's wife, Abby Jane does!"

Thus things were progressing, when one day a smart young tradesman from an adjoining town came to board out his fortnight's vacation at Deacon Clark's.

The Clarks were a well-to-do-family; but the deacon was a little close in his financial administration, and Mrs. Clark and Abby Jane were not averse to earning a new dress now and then out of the rent of their big spare-room. And Mr. Trudkins brought a letter of recommendation from a friend in Packerton, and he dressed in the latest fashion, and had a big black mustache that overshadowed his upper lip like a penthouse.

"Oh, me, how very genteel he is!" said Abby Jane, all in a flutter of admiration.

"A very nice young man, indeed," responded the deacon's wife.

And the very next week Abby Jane came down to the Leeds farm house.

"Have you heard this news about your Eliza?" she asked of the farmer's wife in a mysterious whisper.

"Eh?" said Mrs. Leeds.

"She's nothing but a play actress!" said Abby Jane, nodding her head until the stuffed blue bird on her hat quivered as if it were alive. "Mr. Alphonso Trudkins saw her himself in the Great New York Combination Troupe. She was acting a woman who was married to a Cuban and lost her pocket handkerchief, and was afterward choked with the pillows off the best bed. Desdemonia her name was, I think."

"Well, and suppose she was?" said Mrs. Leeds, who was too good a general to let the enemy see what havoc had been carried into her camp. "What then?"

"What then!" echoed Abby Jane. "Well, I do declare, Mrs. Leeds, I am surprised!"

"I don't believe a word of it!" said Mrs. Leeds, defiantly.

"But Mr. Trudkins saw her with his own eyes!" cried Abby Jane, flushing scarlet with indignation. "He knew her the minute he looked at her yesterday in church. Elizabeth Ellesmere her name was, he says, in the advertisements, and she danced a dance, with a yellow scarf and a lot of roses, between the pieces, making herself out to be a spanish mandoline player. It's enough to make one's hair stand on end to hear Mr. Trudkins tell about it."

"It don't do to believe all one hears," said Mrs. Leeds, losing all count of the eggs she was breaking into a china bowl, in her consternation. "And Stapleville does beat all for gossip."

"Well, you can ask her yourself, and see if she dares deny it!" said Abby Jane, exultantly. "Here she comes now. Ask her—only ask her!"

And Eliza came into the kitchen, with the spice box in her hand. Mr. Villiars followed close behind, fanning himself with a straw hat.

"I have come from the men in the hay-field," said she. "They want another jug of cool ginger and water, with plenty of molasses stirred in, Aunt Leeds. Good morning, Miss Clark! I hope the deacon is quite well this morning?"

Abby Jane turned pink, and smiled her most seductive smile.

"Oh, quite so," she simpered. "I—I only came be—"

"Is it true, Eliza?" Mrs. Leeds asked, sharply. "Have you been deceiving me? Are you a play actress all this time?"

Eliza's large eyes turned slowly first to one, then to another of the little group. She did not blush—it was not her way—but the color ebbed slowly away from her cream pale cheek.

"I have been deceiving nobody," said she. "I am not an actress now. I have been one. But I did not like the life, and so I left it. If any one had asked me, I should have told them about it long ago."

Mr. Villiars came forward and stood at the girl's side, as he saw his aunt shrink away.

"Well," he said, "even taking it all for granted, where is the harm?"

"Charles! Charles!" cried Mrs. Leeds, putting up her hands with a gesture of warning. "Remember poor Avice!"

"It is because I remember her that I speak thus," said Mr. Villiars, calmly. "I had an elder sister once," he added, turning to Abby Jane Clark, "who ran away from home and became an actress. She had talents far above the average, but my parents were old-fashioned people, and their ideas ran in narrow grooves. They disapproved of the stage, so Alice left us. Whether she is dead or living we know not, but wherever she is, I am sure that she can not but be good and true and pure."

Abby Jane's eyes fell under his calm glance. She was a little sorry that she had chosed to come hither and bear the news herself.

Somehow, Mr. Villiars had taken it in a different spirit from what she had anticipated. And Eliza's soft, languidly-modulated voice broke on the constrained silence like drops of silver dew.

"I have been an actress and perhaps I should still have been, upon the stage," she said, "had it not been for circumstances. My father dealt in stage properties, and I was brought up in the business, but still I never liked it. But one can not easily step out of the path where one's feet have been placed, especially if one is a woman.

"However, the turning point came at last. Our leading lady fell sick with a contagious fever, at a lonely village in which we had stopped to play one night. The manager packed up everything in a panic, and bade us all be ready to go. I told him that I could not leave Mrs. Montague alone. He said if I left the company thus I should never return to it.

"Well, what could I do? The stage was my living, it is true, but our leading lady had no friends. It would have been inhuman to desert her. She died, poor thing, and it swallowed up all my earnings to bury her decently.

"And then I tried here and there to earn my living as best I could. I was not always successful. More than once have I been hungry and homeless; but, heaven be praised, I have always found friends before the worst came to the worst. Now you know all," she concluded quietly, leaning up against the door, where the swinging scarlet beans made a fantastic background for her face.

Mr. Villiars had advanced a step or two towards Eliza as she spoke, his gaze had grown intent.

"This—this leading lady of whom you mention," said he, with an effort. "Do you remember her name? Her real name, I mean."

"They called her Katharine Montague on the bills," said Eliza. "If she had any other name, she never told me what it was. I say if because—because—Oh, Mr. Villiars, I never quite understood it before, but there is a look in your eyes that reminds me of her! I have been startled by the familiar expression many a time, but I never could convince myself where the link of association belonged. And—and I still keep a little photograph of her that I found in her Bible after she was dead, I kept them both. Wait; and I will bring them for you."

Mr. Villiars gazed at the picture in silence. Mrs. Leeds uttered a little cry of recognition.

"Heaven be good to us," she wailed; "it is our Avice, sure enough."

For the leading lady in Mr. Roderick Applegate's Great Combination Troupe, the poor soul who had died and been buried away from all her friends, had been Alice Villiars.

The sequel of this little life idyl is simple enough. Any one may guess it. Charles Villiars married Eliza. And even the most fastidious "sisters" of her husband's flock can utter no word of reproach against the minister's wife, even though she makes no secret of the fact that she was once an actress.

And poor Abby Jane Clark is chewing the bitter husks of disappointment. For even Mr. Trudkins has gone back to Packerton without declaring himself.

"There's no dependence to be put upon men," says Abby Jane disconsolatory.

ACROSS THE MERIDIAN.

Kortlandt drew his horse to a halt as he breasted the brow of the hill, and lifted the cap from his head that he might enjoy to the full the soft, delicious breeze.

Perhaps only one who like himself had newly come from the crowded amphitheatre of the lecture room of a medical college, and from daily witness of mental and physical sufferings by the bedsides of its hospital wards, could have felt, as he did, intensified by powerful contrast the stillness, beauty and peace of what he looked on.

It was the field of one of the great battles of the late war, ground made holy by heroic blood—heroic, whether the hearts which throbbed it forth were bursting with triumph or breaking with defeat.

So thought the young physician as his eyes wandered over the scene, discovering few marks to indicate that once this valley had seethed with fire and smoke and struggling forms, and the whole air had been a shriek of agony and pain.

Twenty years had done their work, and nature, which permits no desolation, had sowed the furrowed land with grass and blooming flowers, which swayed and swung in the spring air as if in unison with the humming of the bees above them.

But as he dismounted and led his horse down the hill he discovered traces of the battle which had escaped his eye from above.

Now and then his horse's hoof struck the rusty metal of a dismantled gun, buried beneath its brambles, and further on he found himself in a wilderness of little mounds marked here and there with a wooden slab, its inscription effaced by the rains of years.

As Kortlandt rose from a vain attempt to decipher one of those a figure appeared from the woods near by, and, after the momentary pause of the first surprise of seeing him, continued steadily to advance along the path which led within a few yards of his side.

The figure was that of a woman, poorly clad, but tall and graceful, and moving with peculiar strength and freedom of motion. Kortlandt waited until she was near him and then said:

"I beg your pardon, but can you inform me what graves are these?"

The woman stopped abruptly as the tones of the clear northern voice reached her, and suddenly turned upon him her face, until then concealed beneath the broad brim of the coarse straw hat which she wore.

It was that of a girl, brunette and brilliant, illuminated with a pair of glowing eyes, which now fixed themselves upon him.

"You must have come from very far away not to know whose are the graves that you are standing on," she said, in a voice which did not owe its peculiar intonation to the Southern dialect in which she spoke.

"You are right," he replied, surprised at her beauty and manner. "My home is as far away as the snows of winter from these Southern flowers."

A look of intense bitterness entered the girl's face.

"You are from the North," she said.—Her eyes flashed. "I will tell you whose are the graves upon which you are treading. They are those of the rebels you hated," proudly; "they are those of the martyrs, the heroes, who starved and froze, who gave up home, family, wealth and life in attempted protection of their rights and freedom, and whom you of the North in your overpowering strength of wealth and numbers conquered and killed. Yonder upon the hill are those of my father and mother—he killed by your bullets and she by the agony of his death. And all these are mine, mine, since I own the sacred earth in which they rest. O? that I possessed the power to protect their resting place from the insult of a Yankee's presence!"

Kortlandt looked into the girl's flushed and flashing face in a very maze of astonishment. But her concluding words aroused his anger and he drew himself up with the color mounting to his brows.

Controlling himself with an effort he lifted his cap, and, bowing, said with cold courtesy:

"That being the case, Mademoiselle, I shall not linger to bid adieu. But permit me to assure you you possess power to protect your hero's resting place—in a two edged sword."

And, with another bow and straight look into her angry eyes, he drew his horse's bridle over his arm and led him back to the road.

As he mounted and rode on he found to his surprise that his hand was shaking with excitement. He was very angry.

He had never before been insulted by a woman, and the feeling of helplessness with which it affected him was irritating in the extreme. He felt this to be a weakness and endeavored to throw it off.

But that evening at supper he could not resist giving a crisp little description of his late encounter on the battle field to his neighbor, ending with an inquiry if such violence of feeling and expression were usual.

"Hardly, now," was the reply, excepting among the most ignorant and prejudiced. But the girl's is a peculiar case. Her name is Ellen Evreestt. Before the war her father was the richest planter in the State.—He put every dollar he could command into the cause, and finally was killed on the field over there fighting for it. They carried him to his house which stood on the hill above, where his wife, who had remained there despite everything that could be implored or commanded, received his body and tended it. While she was doing so the house was fired by a shell and burned to the ground. She had her husband's body carried to the quarters, and there that night her baby was born and she died. Before she died she gave the child to the old house stewart, having him solemnly swear that he would never forsake it."

"Did he do so?"

"No; he stuck to it through every thing, and when the other slaves left the plantation, he and his old mammy staid and took care of it down in the quarters."

"Did none of the relatives claim the child?"

"There was none who could. Unlike most Southerners, Evrestt had no connections, and his wife few. These were so impoverished that they were glad to escape the burden."

"How did the negro do so?"

"Oh, by cultivating as much of the most fertile land on the place as he said his mammy could manage. But here comes the most interesting part of the story to you as a physician. Three years ago the old man, who is over seventy, became so crippled by rheumatism that he could not work, and what does Nell do but work the place herself."

"Do you mean with her own hands?"

"Yes, by Jove! and handsome ones they are, too, though they are hard and brown as nuts."

"Why didn't she teach?"

"She had no education."

"Or sew?"

"She might have done that, but she is proud as Lucifer, and said that she was willing to work for herself and mammy and Uncle Jake, whom she adores, but would not consent to be a servant to any one."

This account of the girl's history affected Kortlandt powerfully. He no longer wondered at the intensity of the hatred with which she regarded all those of Northern blood.

How could it be otherwise, when every day of her life she had read afresh this story in those graves, those unplanted fields and the charred ruins among the cedar trees?

The anger which had moved him passed away in wondering admiration when he pictured to himself that strong, beautiful young figure, which had appeared and confronted him so defiantly, taking upon itself and performing, in its pride of independence, the labors of a field hand on the land where her forefathers had commanded in absolute supremacy the labor of hundreds.

The weeks passed by, and Kortlandt found his health, which had been somewhat impaired by his professional labors, and which he had come to the South to recuperate, entirely restored.

Yet he was in no haste to return to the work which he had been so loth to leave. Indeed, the heat of the summer was upon him in its utmost intensity, and yet he could not break the spell which held him to the South.

What was the spell? Was it the occasional glimpse he caught as he rode by of a girl's figure at work in a strip of cotton or corn down in the rich bottom land?—Or the glances he had two or three times received from a pair of defiant eyes under the brim of a broad straw hat as he encountered their owner in the road?

At any rate, he said to himself one night as he entered his room;

"You are a fool; this has got to end; and you start North to-morrow."

He had passed the old Evrestt plantation returning from his evening ride; the night was brilliantly moonlight; he had left his horse in the shadow of some trees and walked up the long cedar-shaded drive which formerly led to the house.

A shorter, shaded path led to the quarters, and this he had followed till he came where he could see the door of one of the cabins, and before it in the light of the moon a young girl seated at the feet of a white haired old negro, against whose knee she leaned her head while they sang together—she in a fresh, sweet contralto, he in the quavering tones of age—an old plantation ditty, simple and plaintive.

He had stolen away unnoticed, and had ridden slowly home, with a feeling in his heart that was something like despair.—It was the consciousness of this feeling which had elicited this sudden exclamation and resolve.

It was near daybreak when a knock at his door aroused him, and a frightened prayer took him to the bedside of one of the servants of the house. It was yellow fever.

That settled the question of his departure for him. He remained where he was, and in the terrible days that followed no help that he could give was withheld.

So faithful and efficient was he that soon the "Yankee Doctor's" was a name on the lips of everyone, and never uttered without a word of commendation and gratitude.

Alone—for the old physician who had long held the practice of the little place in monopoly had early succumbed to the fever—he fought the terrible disease, battling with a courage which inspired others and kept them from despair through all.

One rainy night after the epidemic had passed its crisis Kortlandt, returning from a visit at a distance, and dismounting from his weary horse at his door, found a woman's figure standing by his side, which he knew even in the dim light. The voice which addressed him was so stifled as to be almost inaudible.

"Forgive me," it said; "I was insane—I did not know you; you are noble and good.—They have the fever—Uncle Jake and Mammy. Oh, for God's sake, come!"

Kortlandt's heart throbbed so violently that it was a moment before he dared trust his voice to speak. Then he said, quietly:

"I will go at once," and remounting, he rode away with as much speed as he could get from his jaded beast.

But she was at the cabin almost as soon as he, eagerly and efficiently helpful, despite the agony of sorrow and helplessness which possessed her as she saw how little science and love could prevail against the relentless death that was fighting for possession of the poor old black bodies she loved so well.

It was in vain that he expended all his knowledge and she all her tender care; the second morning, with a last faithful, loving look from his dim eyes and a last gentle murmur of "Good-bye, little Missy; don't you go to cry for me." Uncle Jake had fallen asleep, and a few hours later old Mammy, too, had passed away.

That evening Ellen Evreett stood before four graves, two of them freshly made; for she had laid the bodies of the old blacks here, "beside her other parents," as she said.

In the utter stillness which falls with the setting of the sun, she could hear, far down the road, the departing footsteps and voices of the men who had borne her only friends to their last resting place.

She listened to them until they had faded away, and then stood listening still—for one more sound. No; they were gone; and she was alone, alone forever.

So she cried, wildly, as she threw herself down among the graves, casting to the winds the self control which had never wavered until now.

But she was not alone, for hands stronger than her own took them and held them in a close, steady grasp, and, in a frightened glance, she saw the strong sympathy in the manly face which she had learned to trust and turn to in the last two days.

As naturally and thankfully as a child she accepted it, and laying her face on his arm wept out the bitterness of her grief there.

It was not long before she wept herself quiet, but she did not raise her head for some time, and when she did so perceived that the night had almost fallen.

Gently disengaging her hands from his she rose to her feet, then again extending them to him as he stood by her side.

"Good night," she said. "You cannot know how I bless and thank you. Good night."

"Oh! child," he cried, retaining her, as she would have turned away. "I cannot leave you here. I cannot let you go back to that lonely cabin."

"I must," she said, sadly; "I have nowhere else to go."

"Nell," he said, eagerly, "if you will have it so you need never return there—you and I need never part, if you will be my wife."

She uttered a low cry, and drawing her hands away buried her face in them and turned from him.

"Oh!" she cried bitterly, "you say that because you pity me. You never would have said it else."

"I say it because I love you. I would never have said it else."

"But you are so wise, and good, and great."

"And you are so brave, and beautiful, and true. You asked me the other night to forgive you. How can I, if you trample on my heart and make it of such a wreck of words and desolation as the Northern soldiers never made of that field below there? How can I if you refuse the prayer that a man's heart never but once makes to a woman—a prayer for the completement to his being which her love alone can give! Nell, there is but once chance of happiness in this world for me, and it is that which I am asking of you now."

He saw her face in the clear light of the rising moon as she turned it toward him, and it gave him all the answer that any man's heart should have required. But he waited for her words.

"There is nothing of which my life has been deprived," she said, slowly, "of which it is possible to read in these trampled fields or in those graves before us that your words have not repaid to me a hundred fold. And I—I give you all I have to give. I love you."

CONTESTED ELECTION CASES.

Congressman Green on the Contested Election Cases—Campbell vs. Weaver, Iowa—Page vs. Price, Rhode Island.

The following are the remarks of Congressman R. S. Green in the House of Representatives, Wednesday, May 5th, on the Iowa contested election case of Campbell vs. Weaver:

"MR. SPEAKER:—It is conceded that this case turns upon the disposition that is to be made of the ballots of the unregistered electors cast in this district. It is not denied that every one of these voters was a duly qualified elector under the constitution of the State of Iowa. The votes were received by the judges of election; they were counted and properly returned; and it is now gravely suggested by the minority of the committee that the right of the sitting member to his seat shall be denied, and the contestant given the seat, by striking from the returns of the sitting member the votes of these duly qualified electors cast in this manner and duly returned for him. This extraordinary proceeding is sought to be enforced because it is claimed that the election law of Iowa has not been strictly pursued. The code of Iowa provides for a board of registry, composed of the trustees of the township and the clerk, and it is made the duty of that board, thus composed, to make a register of all qualified voters in that township. They are to make this list from the assessor's books, from the former poll-lists, and from any legal evidence at their command, but it is their duty to see that every and all duly qualified voters are registered upon that list. After it has been completed it is to be exposed for inspection as provided in the statute, and it is then made the duty of the board, one week before the election, to meet for the purpose of revising and correcting the list. But the law provides that no name shall be added to the list within five days of the election; there are in most cases, therefore, but two days given for adding of names to the list. Now, Mr. Speaker, the law provides that no man shall vote whose name is not upon the register, unless at the day of the election he furnishes certain evidence to the judges. The failure to register does not disfranchise the citizen. It was not the intention of the law of Iowa, as it is in some other States, to disfranchise a man if his name is not put upon the register, but it makes a provision for the reception of the vote even if his name is not placed there originally by the board or afterwards by correction. These provisions are, in substance, as follows, that when the voter offers to cast his ballot he shall furnish to the judges of election his affidavit that he is a duly qualified voter, and the affidavit of at least one other person establishing the fact that he resides in the district, and also, in the words of the statute, shall also furnish to the judges a satisfactory reason for not appearing before the board at the time of the correction of the register. Now, this provision is twofold in character. It provides that the voter, although not registered, may vote if he produces evidence on the day of the election that he is a qualified voter, including the question of his residence; and also another point that he shall give an excuse to the judges of election why he did not appear and have his name placed upon the register. Why, Mr. Speaker, the merest glance at the provisions of the statute shows that one of these provisions is a matter of substance, the other is not; that he shall be required under oath to show that he is a qualified voter is right and proper, because as his name is not upon the register the presumption is that he is not a duly qualified voter, and hence it is right and proper that he should make that proof; but as to the other provision, what is it? Simply an excuse to be furnished the judges showing why he did not appear and have his name placed upon the register. I do not propose, Mr. Speaker, to go into the discussion as to whether the statute of Iowa is this respect is mandatory or directory. I do not propose to go into the discussion of the question as to what would be the effect if no affidavit had been presented at all, because in this case the affidavits were presented, and there is no pretense but that the affidavits showed these men to be qualified voters, and the only proposition is that these affidavits do not show a sufficient excuse why these men did not go before the board the day the register was corrected and have their names placed upon it. I take the ground that it was not required by law that the reason be included in the affidavit. That excuse might be otherwise furnished to these judges. But the law makes the election board the sole judges of the sufficiency of the excuse; and when they have passed on the question that is an end of it. They are public officers charged with judicial functions to settle the existence of a fact on testimony which is satisfactory to them; and their judgment can not be attacked or impeached or questioned in any collateral proceeding as this is. For these reasons the majority of the committee respectfully submit that no ground for unseating the sitting member has been shown by the evidence."

Also his remarks the same day on the contested case of Page vs. Price, from Rhode Island:

"The Committee on Elections have reported this resolution giving the contestant and contestee in this contested-election case further time to take testimony. The committee have not considered or reported the case on its merits. They come here simply for the passage of a resolution; in the nature of an interlocutory order, granting to these parties farther time to take testimony. The committee retains jurisdiction of the case, and the simple question here is whether this further time shall be granted? The sitting member has a majority of sixteen, and the law of Rhode Island requires a majority to secure an election. In the testimony taken in this case on the part of the contestant there is disclosed by the evidence of the thirteen witnesses a case of open corruption at the polls, some of these witnesses implicating personally the sitting member. The testimony, if true, shows open, bare-faced corruption, the marshaling of men in files from the ballot-box and taking them down to the tavern to be paid the price of their corruption. We say in our report that if this evidence be true this House, in justice to its own dignity, must take notice of this case. But, Mr. Speaker, the testimony has not been taken by the contestant within the time prescribed by the statute; and the contestee, taking advantage of that fact, as he had a right to do, claims not to have been represented at the time these witnesses were examined, and to have abstained from cross-examination of them, and also from producing witnesses to show that he and his friends have not been guilty of the corruption charged against them. This being the case, the majority of the committee have done—what? They have reported a resolution that the contestee should be allowed thirty days further time; and this time, let me say, has been fixed after consultation with his counsel; that is, I understand his counsel stated this time would be more than sufficient. We propose to give him thirty days within which to re-summon these witnesses, cross-examine them, and to present any testimony that he may be advised it is necessary for him to produce in his behalf. We recognize that if the testimony already taken be true, notice should be taken of it, but do not wish that he shall be condemned unheard. On the other hand, the minority of the committee do what? They report two resolutions. In the first place, a resolution that Mr. Page, the contestant, is not entitled to the seat; and I propose, if necessary, to raise a point of order on that resolution that it is not before the House, that the question is still before the committee, that the case is not here for a decision on its merits. But they further say that although this testimony was not taken in time, although the contestee had the right to pay no attention to it, still they must regard it; that evidence of corruption is brought here, and that we must take notice of it. Therefore they recommend that a sub-committee of the Committee on Elections be directed to go to the State of Rhode Island and take testimony upon this question. Thus, Mr. Speaker, there is presented on the part of the majority a proposition that this matter shall be sent back in order that these gentlemen may take testimony themselves; and on the other side we have a proposition that a committee or sub-committee of this House shall go to the State of Rhode Island and take testimony there. Having thus stated the case, as it strikes me, I reserve the residue of my time, giving notice that I propose to move the previous question."

PROCLAMATION BY THE GOVERNOR.

STATE OF NEW JERSEY,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

By the authority conferred on me by Joint Resolution No. 1, passed by the Legislature of this State, approved March 30, 1886, entitled "Joint Resolution in reference to pension claims of New Jersey Volunteers," I desire to announce to all concerned that the Congress of the United States, by act approved March 19, 1886, has increased the rate of pension for widows and dependent relatives of soldiers and sailors of the late war from eight to twelve dollars per month, and that the increased allowance will be paid on the vouchers of June 4, 1886, without any application therefor on the part of pensioners.

An amendment to the pension law is now pending and will probably pass increasing the rate of pension per month to minor children from two to four dollars. I presume the same mode of payment will be followed.

A bill is also pending in Congress granting a service pension to the soldiers of the Mexican war. It will probably pass.

Any person entitled to increased pay or pension, under the above or any other facts, can obtain advice or assistance by addressing the Governor, at Trenton, in which case the Adjutant General will have the matter specially attended to at Washington, without expense to the applicant.

In testimony whereof I have set my hand, and caused the great seal of the State to be hereunto affixed, at Trenton, this thirteenth day of April, A. D., eighteen hundred and eighty-six.

RALLY TO THE STANDARD.

Democrats of to-day have an important duty to perform, a plain and positive obligation to both country and party, and that is to eradicate every species of internal discord, to treat with marked disfavor all selfish personalisms, and to avow united and determined allegiance to fundamental principles.

What are those principles?

Fidelity to the letter and spirit of the Constitution, and to the Union of States established with reserved powers of sovereignty thereunder;

Obedience to all duly enacted laws and until they are legally altered or repealed;

The right of every individual to freely enjoy life, liberty, and the pursuit of business and happiness;

Legislation based upon rigid equity and designed only for the general public good;

No special favoritism of any kind;

The raising of sufficient revenue to meet the practical needs and legitimate expenses of government economically and honestly administered, but not a dollar for doubtful or corrupt purposes;

Taxation, whether direct or indirect, to be levied and collected with even handed justice;

Intelligent and ample protection to every department of industry and enterprise, and to labor fully co-equal with capital;

A currency uniform in value and convertible on demand into the legal tender of the Constitution;

Unrestricted freedom of religious belief and form of worship, of speech and of the press, but nothing intolerant, disloyal or licentious;

Development of natural resources and industrial occupations, not alone for home consumption, but for the supply and command of world-wide markets;

Prohibition of grasping monopolies, and every other mercenary scheme that tends to make the rich richer and the poor poorer;

Public office to be held and executed as a sacred trust for the people, and character and ability to be the accepted credentials for every official place.

The foregoing hastily sketches thirteen of the cardinal principles of Democracy. They correspond in number with the original States of the American Union when the Constitution was formed, and with which illustrious charter of freedom the Democratic party dates birth.

These grand principles of Democracy gave vigorous growth to the young Republic and they remain to be the sole guarantees of future health and prosperity.

They aim to advance the immediate welfare of all classes, and at the same time to perpetuate and make renowned a representative government of the people.

Principles are every way superior to men.

Make loyalty to sound principles the test of party loyalty.

Sweep aside personal ambition and animosity as obstacles to victory.

Democrats!

Rally to the political standard Jefferson unfurled and Cleveland upholds. Do your whole duty, do it boldly, without fear or favor, and a conquering sign will lead you onward.

John H. Patterson, the newly appointed Prison Keeper in place of Mr. Laverty, deposed, moved his family to their new quarters at the State Prison, Trenton, on Monday last. His commission is for five years. The position is said to be worth a $10,000 public office at Washington.

* * *

It is now reported that one of the convict witnesses for the State in the trial of Laverty, the New Jersey State Prison keeper, has confessed that the charges made against Laverty were the result of a conspiracy. A hemorrhage and an accusing conscience are said to have been the motives which inspired the confession.

The State Capitol Rebuilding Commission met at Trenton Tuesday and reorganized for active work. Governor Abbett presided. It was decided that a light-colored stone should be chosen for the body of the building, and a committee to select such stone was appointed. The Commission also directed that the old dome be taken down, work on which was begun Thursday.

In this issue will be found the remarks of Congressman R. S. Green in the House of Representatives on the contested election cases of Rhode Island and Iowa, which came before that body recently. The remarks are taken from the official minutes of the Congressional Record. Judge Green was appointed by Speaker Carlisle a member of the Committee on Elections, and has proven his worth and ability as a representative of the people by his sound reasoning and logical sense in arguing for the right in the contested election cases above alluded to. In fact, members of Congress of both parties express themselves in hearty commendation of Congressman Green's impartiality and fairness in arguing on these cases, and in his ability as a legislator generally.

* * *

The annual election of directors of the Central Railroad of New Jersey took place last week in New York, and resulted in an almost complete change in the management of the company. The new board of directors are as follows: Henry S. Little, John Kean, John S. Kennedy, Henry C. Kelsey, James A. Roosevelt, George C. Williams, Samuel Sloan, R. S. Hayes and George R. McKenzie. Of these gentlemen Messrs. Kelsey and Sloan are the only ones who have been long identified with the management of the affairs of the company as directors, ex-Judge Little's connection being of a different nature and growing out of the legal complications. The total amount of stock issued is 185,632 shares, two-thirds of which were voted upon by the owners either in person or by proxy.

* * *

The following from the Washington correspondence of the Jersey City Argus shows that Judge Robt. S. Green is doing effective work in Congress:

"Congressman Robert S. Green, of New Jersey, as a member of the house committee on elections, had charge of the contested election case of Frank T. Campbell against James B. Weaver, the present incumbent, when the matter came before the house. Campbell is a Republican. Weaver was elected by a coalition of Nationals and Democrats in the Sixth Iowa district. The report stated that Weaver was entitled to retain his seat. Judge Green supported the report in a speech which is characterized by his colleagues in Congress as a very able legal effort. During the contested election case of Page vs. Price, of Rhode Island, Congressman Green spoke favoring the report, which proposed to give the contestee and contestant more time to secure testimony in their respective cases. During the debate on the report Judge Green had a short bout with Reed, of Maine, and it was generally conceded that the judge successfully held his own against the 'big man from Maine.'"

* * *

The Elizabeth Herald thus echoes the sentiment of a "large majority" of the people of the Third Congressional District, in replying to uncomplimentary remarks of the Newark Press on the possible candidacy of Hon. Robert S. Green for Governor of New Jersey:

"The reference to Judge Green is a deliberate falsification of the facts connected with the mention of his name for the Democratic nomination. We have stated, with the particularity that a way-faring man could not fail to clearly comprehend, that Robert S. Green has made no move himself to secure or influence others to secure for him the nomination, and it is not known now by his most intimate friends whether he would consent to bear our standard if called upon by the Democratic State convention. That is Judge Green's exact relation to the nomination. There is no combination between him and Miles Ross or anybody else. The Judge stands on his own legs, and they are pretty strong abdominal supporters in a political point of view. His record as a Democrat and as a man of unstained integrity is beyond the flight of the arrows of defamation. His whole political and social life is proof as strong as proof can be that Judge Green is not and never has been the creature of any cabal or the mouth-piece of any faction in the Democratic party, and therein is his great strength as a candidate. With Joel Parker out of the contest, there is no prominent man in the party who is more acceptable both to the leaders and the rank and file than Judge Robert S. Green of Elizabeth. He has never descended to the small tricks and questionable methods of ring politicians, has kept himself free from all contaminating connections, eschewed taking sides in demoralizing factional fights and always sacrificed his private for the public good. His refusal to take the congressional nomination in this district because of some slight irregularity and his insistence that the convention should be reconvened to remove all semblance of irregularity shows that Robert S. Green is a man who despises honors that do not come to him by the voluntary act of the representatives of his party. But the gubernatorial nomination is not within our gift. It must come from the Democratic party in convention assembled, and there is no doubt that the man thus selected, whether he be on the list which the Press gives or not, is next Governor of the State of New Jersey as sure as the sun shines or the winds blow. Money is, we know, a potent factor at the polls; but it never has yet seduced the freemen of New Jersey, though it flowed free as water when Blair, Walsh and Potts ran for the chief magistracy of the commonwealth and were inglorious ly beaten. By the past we judge the future."

Effect of Cleveland's Reform.

During the first nine months of the present fiscal year ending June 30th, 1886, there was an increase of over $7,000,000 in revenues of the Government as compared with the corresponding period of last year, and the expenditures for the first nine months of this year were over $16,000,000 less than the expenditures for the same period of last year, making a net gain of over $23,000,000.

Of Interest to Labor.

The Labor Arbitration bill passed by the Governor, is a measure of great importance, providing for a commission of five, who shall sit as a court, hear both sides in labor disputes, and decide finally in every case except where railroad interests are concerned. Two of the commission are to be appointed by the employer. The employees shall have the right to appoint two of the State labor inspectors to act for them. These four shall name the fifth.

AYER'S Hair Vigor cures baldness. Hair Vigor restores youthful freshness and color to faded and gray hair. It attains these results by the stimulation of the hair roots and color glands. It rejuvenates the HAIR and cleanses it. It restores to the hair that, either by reason of age or diseases of the scalp, has become dry, harsh and brittle, a pliancy and glossy silken softness of extreme beauty. There is no dye in Ayer's Hair VIGOR and the good it does is by the vigor it imparts to the follicles, and the cleanliness and healthfulness of the condition in which it maintains the scalp.
AYER'S Hair Vigor renews the hair. Hair Vigor is the best cure known for Brashy Hair, Scald Head, Itching Humors, Tetter Sores, Torpid Follicles, and all other diseases of the scalp that cause the falling of the HAIR and its fading. Nothing cleanses the HAIR of the nuisance of dandruff so perfectly, and so effectually prevents its return, as AYER'S HAIR VIGOR. In addition to the curative and restorative virtues peculiar to Ayer's Hair VIGOR it is a toilet luxury. The Hair VIGOR is by far the cleanliest hair-dressing made. It causes the hair to grow thick and long, and keeps it always soft and glossy.
Ayer's Hair Vigor
Contains no deleterious ingredients. Its use prevents all scalp disease, secures against the hair growing thin or gray, and surely cures all baldness that is not organic.

THE new advertisement of Watson & Co., the celebrated Newark clothiers, should be read by all persons who want to wear the correct styles of Spring clothing.

THE first to announce his readiness to furnish his old customers and the public at large, with pure spring-water ice, is Mr. John Morton, whose ice cannot be excelled in quality.

THE only electric baths this side of New York are those offered at the establishment of Dr. J. T. Griffen, No. 63 East Second street. The advertisement appears in our "Want" column.

AN examination is still going on in the matter of the foreclosure suit brought by Mr. M. E. Jones, the former proprietor, against Messrs. Dennis and Wogiom, the late owners of the Casino rink.

A PERFECTLY insulated copper wire has been strung by the telephone company, connecting this city direct with Long Branch, over which the voice is marvelously distinct and recognizable.

FRIDAY of this week is positively the last day of Dr. Dupree at the City Hotel. Have you had your sore feet cured? A happy hundred acknowledge the efficacy of the painless "Dupree Method."

OUR popular station agent, Mr. Joseph Haynes, is the latest expert on the bicycle. He now rides it as well as possible, but denies that he walked with a crutch recently because he was just learning.

TONY PASTOR'S road company played to about "half-a-house" in Music Hall, Tuesday evening. The Tissots and the Dare brothers were rather pleasing, but the majority of the talent presented was far below Plainfield's taste.

JUST now is the time when everybody is [illegible] to secure a new suit for summer wear, so the First National Bank building is rather rushing the season by coming out in a new coat of pure white from the hands of Mr. W. F. Adams.

ON Thursday of last week, Mrs. Fanny G. Foster and Miss Charlotte Groendyke, daughters of Mr. D. N. Groendyke of North Plainfield, left for an extended trip through California and the Yellowstone Park.

IN deference to the wishes of a large number of people who desire to hear both Mr. Moody and Dr. Hasbrouck, the latter has changed the dates of his illustrated lectures on the Orient, at Music Hall, to the evenings specified in the advertisement on the opposite page.

DURING Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday evenings of next week, the streets about The Crescent will be illuminated again from its tower. The entertainments to take place in the building during these evenings will necessitate the burning of the electric lights once more.

THE meetings addressed by Mr. Whittle, and sung to by Mr. McGranahan, that are being held in the First Baptist church preparatory to the coming of Mr. Moody, have been largely attended. A special feature of the greatest interest to those present, is the choir singing under charge of Messrs. C. W. McCutchen and M. M. Dunham.

AT No's 7 and 9 East Second street, is the establishment of Mr. Charles Bock, who is a wholesale and retail dealer in imported and domestic wines and liquors. He keeps all the best brands of these articles by the large or small quantities, and retails them at wholesale prices. The goods he bottles for domestic use are the very finest and at the very lowest prices.

BEING determined to clear out the gang of tramps that infested the Borough, Marshals Weaver and Becker had spent many an hour in tracing their location. Saturday evening, however, the nuisances fell into the officers' hands. Three were captured, and four escaped, but as the nippers were put on the former and they were sent to Somerville jail, it will serve as an example and a warning for all others to keep away.

IN the case of W. R. Coddington, assignee for Isaac Melbourne, against A. DeCamp and others accused of disposing of certain property of Melbourne's by conspiracy amongst themselves, Vice Chancellor Bird decided that DeCamp be held for the difference in the price received at the auction, and that which another party present at the sale was willing to swear he would have given for it. As to the question of conspiracy, he stated it was not necessary for him to rule.

THE "Tricky Mule" bicycle, which may be seen quietly standing in Frank Green's window, and which will be no small part and parcel of the exhibition at The Crescent, on Monday night, is a harmless looking freak. It greatly resembles the "bone-shaker"—the old velocipede of our youthful days—and, as the card pinned to its back seductively says, "perhaps we are the man who can ride it." At all events, we are strongly tempted to risk our graceful editorial neck in the endeavor to obtain that silk umbrella which is offered as a prize. Should there be anything dislocated in our remarks next week, our readers will accept the foregoing as an explanation.

A CORRESPONDENT in another column seems to put the blame of the untrimmed trees on the Mayor.

THE rite of confirmation will be administered by Bishop Scarborough of this diocese, at Grace church, Sunday morning, the 23d inst., and at the church of the Holy Cross in the evening of the same day.

FROM all appearance, there's going to be a great abundance of strawberries, and the church festivals are hopeful. A good strawberry crop always betters the financial condition of churches that avail themselves of the opportunities they afford.

AT the new residence of ex-Councilman Wadsworth, on Central avenue, last Saturday afternoon, a Tea was given by Mrs. Wadsworth, assisted by Miss Tiffany, Miss Thomas and other young ladies. A large number of invitations were issued and accepted.

MR. LAWRENCE KANE, for many years a driver for the firm of Messrs. Scheffin, Baldwin, Tweedy & Co., but recently in the employ of the Potter Press Works, died suddenly on Sunday. Subscriptions are being received at a number of places about the city, for the benefit of his widow.

THOSE in charge here voted, Wednesday evening, to allow Mr. Moody a rest and not to insist on his coming to Plainfield at once. Consequently a telegram was sent to the great Evangelist to that effect, and should it reach him he will not appear before a Plainfield audience until Sunday evening.

"THE last Grand Ball of the Season" is announced to be given at the Casino rink, Friday evening, May 28th. There will be fine music, and Ramonetti is the caterer who will furnish an abundance of refreshments. A ticket at fifty cents will admit a gentleman and his lady to all the attractions of the evening.

THE court has set aside the will of Israel Coon, which left his property to his sister-in-law, Mrs. Levi Coon. Messrs. Jackson & Codington who represented the contestants, the brothers of the deceased, deserve great credit for their victory. There is just about enough property to cover the costs of the suit.

THE second race between George, of England, and Myers, of New York, was run in Madison Square Garden, New York, on the evening of May 8th. The distance was three quarters of a mile. Myers won in 3 minutes 15 3-5 seconds, beating George by 1 2-5 seconds. He thus wins the world's championship.

THE return team match between the Middlesex Gun Club and Jersey City Heights Gun Club which was announced to take place on the 12th inst., has been postponed to May 19th, when the match will be shot on the grounds of the Middlesex Club at Dunellen. A team of 20 from each Club will then shoot at eight live pigeons each.

AND now we are to have a stage line. Already four handsome new stages have been ordered and almost completed, and in a few days our streets will be traversed by public vehicles of credit to the city and accommodation to the community. We understand they would run over-the-brook also, if the license in the Borough did not make such a difference.

DURING next Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, fellow gentlemen, stop at The Crescent and have your High Tea served by the fascinating ladies that will preside over that department of the Grace church Kirmess. Then call in again later and bring your wife, or best girl, buy her something for her own sweet self, and treat her to an ice or a cup of chocolate.

BLATZ'S Hotel, on Somerset street, North Plainfield, has recently been thoroughly renovated and greatly improved in its interior appointments, and now offers excellent attractions for transient guests and summer boarders. This hotel is finely situated and efficiently managed, and is daily becoming more popular with the public, under the proprietorship of Mr. Joseph Blatz.

To show the superiority of Ballentine's lager beer, bottled by Wirtz & Co., Mr. E. P. Thorn, of No. 17 Park avenue, will on Saturday next, between the hours of 2 and 4 p. m., open and present the contents to the public, of a number of bottles of the above beer, which have been standing in the show windows of the establishment exposed to the rays of the sun for over one year. Where other beers would sour under this test, Ballentine's improves.

AS Decoration Day draws near preparations are being made at different places in the county for appropriately observing the beautiful custom of strewing the graves of the dead heroes of the rebellion, with flowers. Arrangements are already being made by our Plainfield Post for a fitting celebration. Committees have been appointed to secure music and speakers. North Plainfield has appropriated $25 for the purpose, as authorized by a law recently passed.

MANY editors are well acquainted with the man who "gets more papers than he can read," and consequently has no use for his local paper. He takes the Family Journal, published at Portland, Maine. It contains all the news about the "Smuggler's Last Cruise," and while he is storing his mind with such useful information, his wife is eagerly perusing the back number almanacs. He is also the same man who wants fifteen line local notices in your paper, just "to fill up, you know."—Washington Review.

Plainfield Amateurs at Music Hall.

On the evening of the 27th inst., at Stillman Music Hall, an entertainment will be given for the Church of the Heavenly Rest, by a number of Plainfield's best known amateurs. The bill promised for the occasion, which will hereafter more definitely appear in the advertisements, will include a half hour or more of parlor minstrelsy, in which Messrs. Fred S. Green, P. S. McIntyre, Robert Rushmore, James M. Whitfield, jr., and others, will appear as the exponent of burnt cork comedy; J. Madison Morton's two-act comedy of "Woodcock's Little Game," which will be interpreted by a cast including Messrs. D. Edgar Anthony, Fred S. Green, Robert Rushmore, and Charles W. Marquold, Misses Anna D. Cooper, Ethel B. and Maud Agnes Bowers, and Mrs. Fred S. Green. By special permission of Dion Boucicault, Esq., his one-act comedy drama of "Kerry," which will be rendered by Messrs. Francis K. Harte, Ernest Knauft, D. Edgar Anthony and A. W. Mackintosh, and Misses Ethel B. and Maud Agnes Bowers. The music will be a special feature of the programme, being furnished by an amateur orchestra of eight pieces, under the leadership of Mr. Albert Ferguson, of New York. The several parts of the entertainment are in active rehearsal, and unusual care is being taken to render the performance highly creditable. Tickets will be on sale in a few days, and may be obtained of any of the participants. Seats in the orchestra and front two rows of the orchestra circle will be 75 cents, and elsewhere 50 cents each. As the entire house will be reserved, and a large audience seems probable, tickets should be secured at an early day.

The Post Office.

The public are anxiously awaiting the day when needed repairs will be made in the Post Office building and the apartments thoroughly renovated. Mr. Schorb, the lessor of the building, has estimates as to the cost of certain work, and will shortly commence the same. When that is finished the cleaning process will commence. Have a little more patience, dear public.

The Elizabeth Taxes.

Governor Abbett on Tuesday last appointed the three commissioners to act as Tax Commissioners for Elizabeth. They are Henry R. Cannon, Fred. D. Burdette and Richard Frohwein. They are named under an act of the Legislature passed to meet the difficulty arising from the resigning of the whole Elizabeth city Council some years ago. Owing to this general resignation, no one was left to administer municipal affairs, and commissioners had to be appointed to collect taxes.

The Editorial Excursion.

The route of this year's State editorial excursion will probably be to the Thousand Islands. The proposition is to leave Jersey City on Monday, June 28, at eleven a. m., via the West Shore Railroad, and arrive at Utica, N. Y., about seven p. m. Next morning proceed to Alexandria Bay, St. Lawrence River, where the party will remain until the following day. Thence by steamer down the St. Lawrence River, through the "Thousand Islands," and the Lachine Rapids, arriving at Montreal in the afternoon. Here the party will spend two nights and a day. Then proceed by rail to the foot of Lake Champlain and up the lake by steamer and rail to Saratoga. The next day the party will return home by the West Shore Railroad, arriving at Jersey City about 3 p. m., on Saturday, July 3.

Chosen Freeholders.

The new Board of Chosen Freeholders of Union county, organized at Elizabeth on Wednesday last, by the re-election of all the past officers as follows:

Director—C. W. La Martine.
Clerk—John L. Crowell.
Collector—Patrick Sheridan.
Attorney—Fred C. Marsh.

The Board stands 9 Democrats to 8 Republicans. It is needless to say that the new officers are capable men, and will serve the county in the future as they have in the past, with credit and honor.

The Board of Chosen Freeholders of Somerset county met at Somerville on Wednesday and organized by the election of Wm. E. Jones of North Plainfield as Director, and A. F. Sutphen, Clerk. The Board stands politically, 6 Republicans to 3 Democrats.

One Church's Charity.

A statement of the "systematic beneficence" of the Crescent avenue church for the year ending March 31st, 1886, shows the collection and distribution of over $9,000 for charity. Of this the special collections were, $5,582; individual contributions, $350; ladies societies, $2,601, and from the Sunday School, $718. To the "causes" at home the following amounts were donated: Muhlenburg, $543; Children's Home, $337; Relief Association, $385; Bethel Mission, $339; Warren Mission $283; Temperance, $125; Union Work, $180; and for general benevolence, Deacon's fund, etc., $795. Outside the city—Home Missions received $2,587; Foreign Missions, $2,175, and for educational and other purposes was contributed about $1,500. No other church in the Presbytery, without a cent of debt, and under such heavy running expenses, can equal such a showing.

The Bicycle Exhibition.

Encouraged by the patronage and the success of its last entertainment, and at the urgent request of a large number of our citizens, the Plainfield Bicycle Club will give another exhibition of the enjoyable features and fascinations of bicycling, at The Crescent, next Monday evening. Combined with the best amateur talent and the modest efforts of its own members, will be presented other charming spectacles in the way of expert riding and marvellous manœuvres. The performers have never before exhibited in this city, and only by a liberal expenditure of money has their presence been secured. In the advertisement published elsewhere is given the list, by which our readers can judge of the excellence of the show. There will be roller skating from seven to eight, and from ten to eleven, the programme of the entertainment occupying the intervening two hours. Reserved seats may now be secured at the drug stores of Mr. H. P. Reynolds and Mr. W. H. Voorhees.

The Minstrels at Music Hall.

"People stood in the aisles and back of the orchestra circle, in the doorways and wherever there was a foothold, at Ford's last night. Those that came late could not get in. Those that did get in laughed till their sides ached, and applauded until their hands were sore. McNish, Johnston & Slavin's Refined Minstrels captured their audience last night. The introduction was up to the highest minstrel standard of refined fun. The jokes were mostly strangers, with an occasional old acquaintance dressed in new clothes, but they were all heartily welcomed. The singing was first-class. The boxing burlesque was intensely funny. The clog dancing was good, the solo of Mr. Doyle being one of the most artistic performances ever given here. The specialities of Johnson, Slavin and McNish, need no praise. Their parts are recognized each as distinct and personal creations." The above is what the Washington Post says of the minstrels to appear at Music Hall to-morrow evening.

Fire Board Meeting.

All the members were present at the regular meeting of the Board of Managers of the Plainfield Fire Department, Tuesday evening, with the exception of Commissioner Cutter. The election of Chief Saltzman and his assistants Waters and Lyness, was announced and the new officers were presented with their badges. A number of bills were read and ordered paid, and by reason of the emphatic objections by Commissioner McClure against the unnecessary delay in the settlement of other claims, they will be promptly attended to. Reports of numerous repairs that were needful were received, and referred to the President for attention. Estimates for the reconstruction of the boilers of No. 2 Engine were talked over, but nothing in relation thereto was done. A representative of the firm of Samuel Eastman & Co., of East Concord, N. H., was present as the exhibitor of the "Improved Standard Hose." It was manufactured of leather, and before he was through his explanation of its advantages over all other hose, almost everybody present was convinced that it was the Plainfield Department's "long-felt-want." The Board then adjourned for one week, after confirming the following as the newly elected officers of Zephyr H. & L. Co., in spite of all protest by some members of the company:

ZEPHYR H. & L. CO. NO. 1.

Foreman, Jos. Coney; 1st Assistant, E. H. Sebring; 2d Assistant, Charles A. Westerfield; Rec. Sec., A. Love; Financial Sec., E. Crater; Treas., A. D. Dunavan; Representatives to the Fire Board, W. W. Coriell, C. L. Davis; Investigating Committee, W. W. Coriell, James Armstrong, T. Fahey; Auditing Committee, A. D. Mallinson, E. Crater; Trustees Relief Association, N. W. Conway, S. J. Robinson; Janitor, C. L. Davis.

Grand Commandery.

The Grand Commandery, Knights Templar, of the State of New Jersey, met Tuesday last in annual conclave at Masonic Temple, Trenton, N. J. R. E. Sir Ackerman, Grand Commander, presided and delivered the annual address. During the afternoon officers as follows were elected: Grand Commander, Isaac S. Roberts, of No 14; Deputy Grand Commander, Edward W. Price, of No. 9; Grand Generalissimo, Isaac C. Githens, of No. 7; Grand Captain General, Charles Bleo, of No. 2; Grand Senior Ward, Albert D. Winfield, of No. 13; Grand Junior Warden, Leonard C. Grear, of No. 13; Grand Treasurer, Frederick G. Weiss, of No. 11; Grand Recorder, Charles Bechtel, of No. 4; Grand Standard Bearer, John O. Hudson, of No. 11; Grand Sword Bearer, Joseph G. Felmer, of No. 6; Grand Warden, Wm. F. Muchman, of No. 12; Captain of Guards, Samuel G. Bennett, of No. 4. On Wednesday the Grand Chapter Royal Arch Masons met in the same place.

N. P. Borough Meeting.

The Mayor and Council of the Borough of North Plainfield, held their tenth regular meeting, last Friday evening. All were present as usual, and the meeting was called promptly at eight o'clock. Requests were read from Messrs. Leow of Kingston, and Bullock & Co., of New York, for meetings with any or all the members of the Council for consideration of the subject of water works and sewerage in the Borough. These were referred and the Committee requested to give the petitioners a hearing. The G. A. R. Post of this city extended an invitation for the Mayor and Council to take part in the observance of the ceremonies of "Decoration Day," the 31st inst; also asking for such appropriation as the Council choose to make towards the expenses of the occasion. Councilman McCutchen expressed his willingness to contribute from his own pocket toward a sum for the purpose, but he was opposed to appropriating anything from the depleted treasury of the Borough. A motion by Mr. Arnold, seconded by Mr. Weaver, was carried, donating $25 as requested. A number of applications for licenses as truckmen, peddlers, scavengers and expressmen, were received and granted, and the claims presented were referred and subsequently ordered paid. The Corporation Counsel reported the abatement of the nuisances in Manning avenue; also the declination of Mr. J. B. Miller to accept the check tendered him by the Council in settlement. On recommendation of the Streets Com., the acceptance of Manning avenue, one block from Westervelt to Franklin avenue, was ordered. The committee was instructed to ascertain whether a certain water course at the foot of the mountain had ever existed, and, if so, by whom closed and by what procedure its re-opening could be secured. The Committee so empowered, reported the making of a loan in anticipation of taxes, of $800 for use on the streets. Ordinances amending the sidewalk ordinance, and to regulate the laying of pipes in the streets were presented. Permission was given for the dumping of ashes to fill in the washouts at Madison street, and the sum of $20 was appropriated for the cleaning of Green brook provided the Plainfield Council would act in a like manner.

Music-Hall Financial Deficiency.

By reason of the by-laws of the Music Hall Association, it is impossible for the stockholders to hold a meeting for the purpose of transacting business because of the impossibility of securing a personal representation of a majority of the stock, and for the same reason it is impossible to change the by-laws so that a meeting would be possible either with the necessary stock present by proxy, or with less required for a quorum. In consequence there was no meeting of the stockholders during Monday evening, the date of the annual election for a Board of Directors. The polls were open, however, and a total of 361 shares was voted in person or by proxy, and the old Board re-elected as given below. There were present during the evening: Messrs. O. T. Waring, W. R. Potts, J. B. Dumont, E. R. Pope, J. Kirkner, E. T. Low, B. A. Hegeman, S. Milliken, A. Gilbert, B. O. Bowers, G. W. Rockfellow, W. Thompson, C. A. Marsh, F. O. Herring, J. W. Yates, W. H. Voorhees, R. H. Cook and B. F. Coriell. The three last named acted as tellers, and announced the vote at the closing of the polls to Messrs. Waring, Potts, Gilbert, Marsh and Rockfellow, who alone remained.

The Board of the past year as follows, was re-elected: Messrs. M. W. Tyler, O. T. Waring, C. A. Marsh, L. V. F. Randolph, A. Gilbert, G. H. Chapman, J. B. Dumont, C. Tweedy, W. R. Potts, J. W. Murray and B. A. Hegeman. The printed statements of the Treasurer and Agent, showed the receipts and disbursements for the past year to be as follows:

The above shows that although during the latter part of the season (when it is alone possible to secure the "great" attractions) the receipts have been most favorable, yet for the year is apparent a deficit of $719.66, without mentioning the loss of interest on the investment. But all of this is the fault of no one concerned in the management. It simply can't be helped. If the stockholders will be satisfied with a small interest on their investment in the shape of rent from some of the many managers who have a large number of theatres on their lists (and thus form circuits for attractions that they control for long seasons) then will a return instead of a yearly outgo, result. As it is now, the cost of producing any income at all is so out of proportion to the result, that a deficiency is bound to arise in spite of the earnest and gratuitous efforts of the able Board of Managers to overcome such effect. The expenses incident to entertainments and their management, were $1,875.88, and the gross receipts from the same were $4,399.54—in other words it cost little less than two thousand dollars to produce little more than four. The average net earnings from each entertainment during the year was $53.70, but even this small profit was wiped out by the cost of coal, gas, and the other expenses of running the building.

"Excelsior."

MESSRS. EDITORS:—The people of Netherwood are noted for being progressive. Indeed, they are considered an example by the sister villages along the route of the Central Railroad. If evidence were required, other than has been from time to time furnished as to the truth of the foregoing statement, it has recently been forthcoming in the form of a genuine, healthy, unadulterated brass band at the depot. Now some unsophisticated people, accustomed only to the discordant notes of a piano or parlor organ, and who visit the western end of Coney Island once a year, imagine there must be a beer saloon or dime museum in the vicinity, as only that class of paying institutions could support such a volume of classic sound. But such is not the case; it is merely another evidence of our onward march. It may be only a question of time when the State of New Jersey be considered a part of Netherwood, and the whole admitted to the Union of States.

EXCELSIOR.

North Plainfield's Progressiveness.

Washington Park, North Plainfield, is so much improved within the past year that one would hardly realize it was the Washington Park of old. Handsome residences have been erected, grounds laid out equal to any in the country, and such a thing as a bill on a house with the "To Let" on it, cannot be found anywhere in the Park. Vacant lots that were offered for $3 000 a year ago cannot now be bought for less than $3,500, and others in proportion. The streets and avenues are in excellent condition. Trees have been trimmed in the thoroughfares, to make way for the rays of the electric light that is soon to add to the attractions and residences now in process of erection, easily rent before completion. Within a few weeks ground will be broken for others. Mr. James McGee has added 60 feet of lawn to his already handsome residence, having purchased the ground from Mr. Aug. Van Deventer. Mr. J. M. Bettman is adding an extension to his beautiful home, which will add much to its beauty. Mr. B. A. Hegeman is occupying his new residence in Sycamore avenue, which is of the most modern pattern, and adds largely to the beauty of that handsome thoroughfare. Next to him again is the handsome residence of Miss Roome, which is almost ready for occupancy. Mrs. Hegemen is also erecting a lovely cottage next to her own residence. The vacant lot at the intersection of Myrtle and Willow avenues, will soon be built upon. One house has already been erected, and has been recently sold to Mr. Aleck Milne, formerly of Jackson avenue. Rockview avenue is probably one of the handsomest avenues to be found in either Plainfield or the "Borough." Here are the beautiful residences and grounds of Mr. Martin I. Cooley, Morgan S. Taylor, A. E. Faber, J. J. Henderson, Geo. P. Dupee, Benjamin M. Day, I. W. Pangborn, E. Loomis, R. H. Cook and others. The improvements that have been made by Mr. William McCutchen about his handsome residence on Rockview avenue, and those adjoining of his son, Councilman McCutchen, and his grandson-in-law, Mr. E. St. John, are among the most attractive features of the Borough. Another son, Mr. C. W. McCutchen, has almost completed his elegant home at Sycamore and Washington avenues, and there is to be erected each side of it, an electric lamp.

Y. M. C. A. Notes.

The best and most successful Convention of the Young Men's Christian Associations of New Jersey, and one looked forward to with hope and expectation—is a thing of the past, but the fruits will stay with the delegates for a long time. All who attended the Convention were greatly helped and blessed, and a grander work will be done in this State this year than has ever been done before, as a direct result of the Convention. The General Secretaries and some of the State Committee gathered in the Burlington Y. M. C. A. rooms on April 30, at 7 p. m., for an hour's conference. At 8 o'clock a young men's meeting was held in the City Hall. Subject—"Is The Young Man Safe?" Remarks were made by E. P. Holden of Madison, E. Drake and H. Conzens of Newark. Saturday the Convention convened in the rooms at 10 a. m., E. P. Holden as President of the last Convention presiding. The chair was instructed to appoint a committee on organization. Messrs. Barker, Miller and Rice were selected and immediately retired. While waiting for the committee, Rev. Mr. Hancock of the Broad street M. E. church was introduced, and the delegates warmly welcomed, in behalf of the local associations, the churches and the people of the city. The committee on organization reported as follows: President, Prof. Wilbur of New Brunswick; 1st Vice President, H. Churchman of Burlington; 2d Vice President, W. D. Murray of Plainfield; Secretaries, V. S. Walsh of Newark, and W. S. Davis of Hightstown. After the report of the State Committee, J. E. R. Folsom of Bridgeton, read a paper on "What Are The Best Secular Agencies of the Y. M. C. A." The afternoon session was held in the rooms, G. L. Barker of Camden conducting short devotional exercises, after which brief reports from delegates was given, concerning the work in the different associations. The discussion of topic, "Boys' Work, What It Is And Its Practical Results" was introduced by F. L. Willis of Plainfield. "The Question of Finance" and "How Shall We Meet It" was opened by H. Conzens, Financial Secretary of the Newark association. Miscellaneous business was the next item and adjournment made at 5 o'clock. The evening session was held in the Broad street M. E. church, and opened at 7:30 o'clock with a short Praise Service, led by F. L. Willis. The following topics were then taken up and discussed: "College Work, What Has Been Done And What Can Be Done," opened by Mr. Robinson of Princeton College. "The General Secretary—His Office And The Needed Qualifications For It," opened by E. N. Voorhees of Orange. "Young Men's Bible and Training Class," opened by C. T. Kissam of Plainfield. The first meeting on Sunday was one of the best; a consecration meeting in the rooms at 9 a. m. led by E. N. Voorhees of Orange. At 10:30 the delegates attended Divine Service in the churches, and at 2:30 Sunday School Services were addressed by a number of delegates, Mr. Moore of Plainfield addressing the Union M. E. school at 3:45 p. m. An Evangelistic Service for all was held in Buch's Opera House, conducted by Rev. W. H. Geistweit and G. L. Barker of Camden. About 1,000 people were present. Appropriate music was rendered by a male quartette, consisting of Messrs. Newman of Orange, Willis and Miller of Plainfield, and Peck of Morristown. At 6.45 p. m., a young men's meeting was held in the Presbyterian church, led by F. L. Willis. At 7.30 Church Services were held as follows: In the Baptist church addresses were made by F. J. Miller of Plainfield, and S. F. Dudley of Orange. In the Union M. E. church W. D. Murray and C. T. Kissam of Plainfield, addressed the congregation. A large crowd gathered in the Broad street M. E. church, and listened to the animated and interesting discussion of the topic: "The Salvation of Young Men; The Primary Object of the Association. How Can It Be Promoted?" At 9 o'clock a farewell meeting was held in the same church, and many testimonies given by the pastors and members of the Burlington association, of the broader view they had of the work and the great good received, after which many delegates testified of the blessing they had received, and the impetus they hoped to give when they returned to their associations.

Hourly Trains.

MESSRS. EDITORS:—Can you not get the Railroad Company to give us hourly trains from eight o'clock to midnight? It would only require them to run one more train from Roselle to Dunellen, and shifting the 8.15 to 8, 9.30 to 9, 10.30 to 10, and 11.30 to 11—extending its trip to Dunellen.

Yours truly,

Trim the Trees!

MESSRS. EDITORS:—Your efforts to have the trees in our streets trimmed are most commendable, but you seem to put the whole responsibility for the non-enforcement of the ordinance "made and provided" in such cases, upon the Street Commissioner. It is true the ordinance in question provides that the Street Commissioner shall cause the ordinance to be carried into effect, but such provision is in conflict with the charter, and therefore null and void. By Section 4, of the amended Charter of Plainfield, approved April 4, 1872, the Mayor is made the official whose duty it is to see that all ordinances are enforced; said section reads as follows: "And be it enacted, That the Mayor shall be the chief executive officer of the city, and shall see that the laws of the State and the ordinances of the city are faithfully observed therein." It is hoped that the Mayor will at once enforce the following Section (8) of the ordinance relating to streets and sidewalks and encroachments thereon, which reads as follows: "All trees standing along the public streets of the city, whose branches extend or shall extend over the sidewalks or roadways shall be trimmed from the main trunk to a height of not less than ten feet from the surface of the ground, so as to prevent injury to the public health, impediment to travel and obstruction to street lights, unless the Street Commissioner shall otherwise direct or permit." You will observe that the Street Commissioner is (by the last clause of the above quoted section of the ordinance) clothed with authority to give permission that the ordinance be violated, and in the following Section (9) these words occur: "The Street Commissioner shall cause this ordinance to be carried into effect." It would seem from this jumbled ordinance that it is intended to leave the enforcement of said ordinance entirely discretionary with the Street Commissioner; such power the Common Council has no authority to grant. The Mayor is the official whom the Charter makes the sole executor of ordinances, and no ordinance can change the organic act. Therefore I claim that so much of the ordinance as makes the Street Commissioner the Mayor is inoperative. It is desired that you keep up your "Oh, for the trees to be trimmed," until the work is done, so that our electric lights (when they are established) will have a fair chance to show what a wonderful improvement public demand has accomplished in the way of street lights, and demonstrate how desirable it will be to have said lights all over our fair and delightful city, which will be made more delightful than ever by the introduction of electric lights, and the trimming of the trees (when it is done.)

"Rise up, ye women that are at ease; speak, exhort and rebuke with all authority."

On Tuesday, May 4, we held our monthly business meeting. We would heartily urge each member of the Union to make it her pleasure as it is her duty to attend these meetings, the first Tuesday in each month. The reports of the different committees are always interesting.

On Wednesday, the 5th, a Young Woman's Christian Temperance Union was organized, with a most promising outlook. Fifty-six of our brightest and most earnest young women pledged themselves to support the case of temperance. None who listened to the words of Mrs. Francis G. Barnes could help feeling the responsible position held by each young woman in society, and every girl in the Home toward the cause of temperance. The officers elected for the ensuing year were as follows: President, Miss Hattie Burnett; Vice President, Miss Lilian Paul; Corresponding Secretary, Miss Lillian Dorman; Recording Secretary, Miss Carrie Lowrie; Treasurer, Miss Helen F. Waring, and one manager or Vice President from each church represented. The first meeting will be held on Wednesday, May 19, in the Congregational church.

William Edgar is very busy attending the lawns of our residence. He understands how to put them in good shape.

The auction sale of the personal property of the estate of Mary Allen was largely attended on Tuesday last, and everything brought satisfactory prices.

The new addition to the store corner of Broad and Elm streets, is rapidly approaching completion. The upper part of the building will be occupied after June 1st as the Town Rooms.

Thomas H. Love has purchased the house and lands of H. Fergerson on Broad street. Mr. Love intends repairing and rebuilding the buildings and make first-class stores of them.

The adjourned meeting of the Fire Department was held on Wednesday evening, May 12, at the truck house. The Empire Engine Co., No. 2 and Bucket and Engine Co., No. 1, reported through their representatives that they declined to turn over their apparatus to the Department. The Hook & Ladder Co., No. 1, were in favor of it.

If the owners of the land corner of Broad and Elm streets, would put a neat fence around it the street would be more attractive. It is now used as a commons for cow pasture, ball playing, etc. Mr. Traynor, on the opposite side, has made a decided improvement by putting up a neat picket fence around his lot and sowing the same with grass seed.

The fair and festival of the Bellerophon Wheelmen, to be held on May 18, at Arcanum Hall, from the preparations that are being made, is deserving of the support of all our townsmen. It is the first affair of the kind that the Wheelmen have held, and should be liberally patronized. The proceeds are to be devoted to the refitting of the club rooms.

At the convention of the W. C. T. U., held at Rahway on Tuesday last, the following ladies from our town, connected with the organization as superintendents, made their reports in connection with others. Miss Mary Townley, on "Lessons in School;" Mrs. William H. Cooney, on "Legislation;" Mrs. Harriet Manning, on "Unfermented Wine." There was a large delegation from the branch of the union in our town present, and took part in the deliberations of the convention.

Mr. Adam Hoffman yesterday purchased a stone crusher and engine, which he intends locating on our mountain, at the head of Ackerman avenue, where there are plenty of stone, and of good quality for the building of roads. Mr. Hoffman expects to be able to have a supply of the crushed stone of all sizes on hand to meet all demands. He has orders enough at this time for about 2,000 cubic yards, for the use of the overseers of our roads, and no doubt when he gets his crusher at work a large number of residents will purchase the stone for drives and walks around their residences. At the point on the mountain where Mr. Hoffman has located his crusher, there is an inexhaustible supply of stone, said by good judges to be of the best quality for building roads.

Everything is now "progressive," and if you do not have that word attached to a party or sociable you are not au fait. The way they work it, is this: The party take lunch with them and visit a friend's house, and enjoy the evening pleasantly. The old way was to eat everything up in the house, but the new is a decided improvement.

VINDICATED AT LAST.

In 18—the streets in the lower part of New York city were as they are to-day, narrow and dirty, while the houses were then, as now, in keeping with the streets.

In a dilapidated dwelling, in a poverty stricken quarter lived an English family by the name of Marston.

Robert Marston was a lawyer who had emigrated to this country with his family, about two years before the time our story opens.

The Marston family consisted of four persons, Robert Marston, his wife Kate, and two sons, Arthur and Richard, or Dick as he was more generally called.

Robert Marston was a man of medium height, slenderly built; his face, a very expressive one, was somewhat pale at times; his hair had become prematurely gray—from want, people said, for the Marstons were very poor.

Mrs. Marston was a quiet person, tall, of the brunette type; and her forty years of life had only slightly tinged her hair with gray.

Kate Marston bid her age well; she was a woman who looked at life from a philosophical point of view, and if Robert Marston did not worry himself into an early grave, it was his good wife who prevented it.

Arthur Marston, the elder of the two sons, was twenty-one years of age, tall, with black hair and eyes. He was a very counterpart of his mother.

Dick, the younger of the two sons, was unlike his brother both in appearance and disposition; he was tall, but his shoulders were much broader, and his form showed unmistakable signs that he would be a man of extraordinary physical strength and activity.

His features were regular, with the exception of the nose, which was slightly prominent. His hair was dark brown, as also were his eyes, which were bright and penetrating.

Both young men had received a liberal early education in England, where the Marstons had seen better days.

Shortly after Robert Marston came to this country he had been admitted to the American bar, and with the aid of some gentlemen, who saw in him a man of superior legal qualifications, for a time, fortune favored him.

He rented a comfortable house in a respectable part of the city, and began to lay by some money for a rainy day.

Arthur was studying law under his father's supervision, but Dick, although the family urged him to choose some profession, remained inactive without any apparent notion of what course he would take in life.

About this time there was a lawsuit going on in the courts, and the defendant in the case had secured the services of Robert Marston. There was a fortune involved in the case, and, by some trickery on the part of the plaintiff's counsel, Mr. Marston lost the case.

Two days later the bank in which he had deposited his hard-earned savings, failed. Robert Marston was virtually a ruined man.

To add to his misfortune several parties who had engaged him to look after their interests notified him that they no longer desired his services.

He was obliged to leave the comfortable abode in which he had hoped to live so happily, and take his family to the miserable dwelling in which we find them.

Robert Marston was without a single brief, while young Arthur had obtained a third-rate position in a banking house; the salary was small, but it was all the family had to live on.

Dick was the same easy going individual he had always been. Of late, however, his mother had noticed that he was frequently absent from home in the evenings, and sometimes it was quite late when he returned.

She made up her mind to speak to him on the matter, and find out, if possible, the cause of his conduct.

One evening, as she sat alone in the house—her husband and two sons were absent—a feeling came over her that something dreadful was about to happen. Mrs. Marston was a strong-minded woman, and sensations such as she now felt were altogether foreign to her nature.

She had been laboring under this strange impression for upwards of an hour, when suddenly her husband rushed into the room, his face haggard and a wild look in his eyes.

"My God, Kate, Dick has been arrested for murder!" he exclaimed.

Mrs. Marston, who had risen from her seat at the first intimation of her husband's approach, fell to the floor in a death-like swoon when she heard him utter those terrible words.

Robert Marston stood for a moment like a person in a dream; then, as his troubled mind grasped the situation, he rushed after some water which he dashed on his wife's face; after the lapse of a few minutes she regained consciousness.

As the poor woman opened her eyes the terrible truth came before her, and she cried:

"Oh! my son! my son! Why did I not warn you?"

"Kate!" said her husband, as he knelt by her side and supported her head on his arm, "calm yourself; our son is incapable of committing such a crime. I will prove his innocence; I will get others to help me."

As the afflicted man uttered these last words Arthur entered the room.

"Father," he exclaimed, "I know all; it is dreadful, but you know our Dick would never be guilty of such a crime; the murder was indeed committed, and if we would save Dick, we must find the real assassin."

"Arthur, my boy," said his father, help me to place your mother in the easy chair; she has received a terrible fall and is very weak; this terrible news has been too much for her; I should have known better than announce it to her in the manner I did."

When the two men had placed Mrs. Marston in the easy chair and made her as comfortable as possible, Arthur imprinted a kiss on his mother's cheek and silently motioned his father to follow him into the adjoining room. The two quietly withdrew.

"Father," began the son, "do you know that the murdered man was Nathaniel White, of the banking firm of White & Long?"

"Why, Arthur, is not that the firm for which you work?"

"It is," replied the son, "but I am working for them no longer. This evening Mr. Long informed me that in future my services would not be needed."

"Oh!" exclaimed Mr. Marston, "it is indeed dreadful; worse even than I expected."

"And those people," he continued, "believe my son guilty. They have money and I have none; but we will prove his innocence."

The papers next day gave full particulars of the crime, stating that the murderer, Richard Marston, was a prisoner in the Tombs.

Of the different accounts published concerning the murder the following is the substance of that which was supposed to be the most correct.

It is stated that on the previous evening about half-past five o'clock, Nathaniel White, of the banking house of White & Long, had been foully murdered in front of his own home; that he had been struck on the head with some blunt instrument, and that Richard Marston, son of Robert Marston, the lawyer, was under arrest for the murder; it further stated that the friends of the murdered man were in possession of evidence which would convict young Marston.

Robert Marston and his son visited the Tombs, but were informed that they would not be allowed to see the prisoner. They had expected as much. They returned home from the prison with heavy hearts. Mrs. Marston was informed of their unsuccessful attempt to see Dick.

That evening the family sat down to their frugal meal in silence.

When it was finished Mr. Marston put on his hat and coat and went out in search of former friends whom he determined to ask for aid.

He secured the services of two able lawyers. Both were under obligations to him for favors he had rendered when his circumstances were good.

Each of those men was convinced of the innocence of Marston's son, and they assured the father that they would request a hearing in the case immediately, and that before many days his son would be a free man.

This was encouraging to the afflicted parent. He accepted their generous offers with heartfelt gratitude, and returned home full of hope; this hope the family shared in common.

Two days later the trial began. It lasted one week. Richard Marston was convicted of manslaughter on the evidence given by one Kent, a coachman in the employ of Horton Long, the partner of the murdered man.

Kent swore that on the evening of the murder, he had been sent by his master with some papers which White had forgotten to take home with him from the bank. White had left the bank at five o'clock; he, Kent, had left at ten minutes past five.

The clerks employed at the bank, and Long also, corroborated this part of the coachman's testimony.

The man further testified that he had hurried in order to overtake White before the latter reached his home, which was a good half hour's walk from the bank.

White was a bachelor, kept no horses, and but one servant. He did not catch sight of the murdered man until he reached the front of his home; it was getting dark; the street lamps were lighted, and, when Mr. White reached the front of his house, some person rapidly crossed the street, knocked Mr. White down, and came hurriedly along the sidewalk towards the witness. As the assassin passed him he caught a glimpse of his face. It was Dick Marston.

The witness was cross examined repeatedly, but nothing could shake his testimony. On being questioned as to how he came to know young Marston, he replied that the prisoner was in love with Mabel, Long's daughter, and visited the house when her father was absent; Long had told young Marston that his daughter's hand would never be given to a pauper, and warned him to keep away from his house.

This, with some corroborative details, was the testimony on which Richard Marston was convicted of murder in the second degree.

His parents were heart broken. The only consolation they could offer their darling boy was their firm belief in his innocence.

What made the coachman's testimony the more acceptable was the fact that Long's daughter was confined in her home with a raging fever, caused, it was said, by the terrible shock she received when she heard that her lover was arrested for murder.

Arthur Marston was distracted. He was powerless to help his brother. He visited Dick in prison and was surprised to see how well he looked.

"Come, cheer up, old boy," said Dick, "The murderer will be discovered sooner or later."

"Oh, Dick!" said his brother, "how can you talk that way. Your position is worse than you suppose. Mother may survive the blow, but I am afraid father will not."

"Yes," replied Dick, "father takes it dreadfully to heart. Mother was here this morning. I told her of my engagement to Mabel Long, and how Mabel's father had threatened me if I did not keep away from the house. I have not seen Mabel since the evening before Nathaniel White was murdered."

"I saw her yesterday," said Arthur; "she is confident that your innocence will soon be proved."

The two brothers embraced each other and Arthur left the prison. No day passed without some member of the Marston family visiting the prisoner.

Two weeks after his conviction Richard was sentenced to imprisonment for life. The Marstons received this last blow with heroic fortitude.

Dick seemed unconcerned about his fate; but he hoped. Would his hopes be realized? When the time arrived for him to depart to prison his friends were at the Tombs to bid him farewell, and a single tear rolled down his cheek as he embraced his mother.

"My son," said his father, as he took his hand in both his own, "this blow will be the death of me."

"Oh! father," replied Dick, "bear up; I know it is hard, but let us hope."

"Yes, my boy," said his father, "that is all we can do now."

Arthur now approached his brother to bid him farewell. As he embraced Dick, he whispered something in his ear; the prisoner's face brightened.

As his friends left the Tombs, the brave manner in which their boy acted brought a ray of consolation to their hearts.

* * * * *

A year passed by. Robert Marston was but a shadow of his former self; his wife had changed but little.

The family heard occasionally from Dick. Arthur held a position as clerk in a hotel; his earnings supported the family.

One evening as the young man was seated at his desk in the hotel, leisurely turning over the pages of the register, a man entered who appeared to be under the influence of liquor.

The individual approached young Marston. Arthur recognized him; it was Kent, the coachman, who had testified at the murder trial.

"Say, young fellow," Kent began, "ain't your name Marston?"

Arthur replied that it was.

"Can anyone overhear us?" continued his interrogator.

"No," replied Arthur, "not if you speak in a low tone."

"Well, then," said Kent, "you just listen to what I'm about to tell you. Your brother was arrested for murder, but he never committed it, and I am the man that knows who did commit it."

"What!" exclaimed Arthur, "you knew the real assassin of Nathaniel White and yet you testified against my brother?"

"Hush!" said the man, "I was paid handsomely for swearing as I did. The deed was committed by Horton Long, and it was he who gave me the money for swearing against your brother. Old Long and I were pretty thick; and I knew a great deal about his private affairs that other people did not. Two days before White was murdered the two partners had signed a paper to the effect that in the event of either's death the other should have full control of the bank.

"The day of the murder White left the bank at five o'clock; I left at ten minutes past five. I swore to that at the trial and it was true; but before I started after White I delayed a moment to secure Long's team, which was standing in front of the bank.

"While I was doing this Long had left the bank on foot. It was he who had crossed the street, struck White on the head, and came rapidly along the sidewalk.

"We recognized each other. Long grasped my arm. 'For God's sake, Kent!' said he, 'keep quiet. Young Marston passed this way not five minutes ago; swear that he murdered White, and your fortune is made.' I told him I would keep quiet, but said I did not like the idea of accusing young Marston with the murder.

"Long placed a roll of bills in my hand. I agreed to everything. He told me that his reason for fastening the crime on your brother was to prevent him from marrying his daughter Mabel.

"To-day I asked Long for money, but he said I bothered him too often for cash, and he refused to give me any more. He got very much excited, and threatened to have me arrested as accomplice of your brother. I told him I would fix him, and I've done it."

"Well," said Arthur, "I believe your story. Will you make the same statement on oath to-morrow?"

"Yes, I will," replied Kent, "if I am alive when to-morrow comes."

"Why, you do not intend to commit suicide, do you?" inquired Arthur.

"No," replied the man, "but, you see, I have been drinking pretty hard during the past year, and I feel as if I may 'cave in' at any moment."

"Remain here to-night," said Arthur; "I will give you a warm room and something to quiet your nerves, and to-morrow you will be all right."

Kent agreed to the young man's proposition. Arthur had the man taken to a comfortable room, and as soon as the night clerk arrived he hurried home with the good news to his parents.

Robert Marston and his wife could hardly contain themselves, so great was their joy at the prospect of their son's release from prison.

The next morning Arthur and his father went to the hotel. Kent came down stairs as they entered. He was perfectly sober, but appeared to be very nervous. Arthur's father approached him and held out his hand.

"Robert Marston," said Kent, "when your son is a free man I will take your hand. Come, we must put Long in the hands of the law before he is aware of it."

"But, my friend," said Marston, "you must eat something before you go out; the morning is chilly."

"No," replied Kent, "let us go; I seldom eat anything in the morning."

Arthur's father left the hotel with the man and he remained to relieve the night clerk.

The two men went to police headquarters where Kent made a statement on oath, of all that he had told Arthur. The man had received, in all, about seventeen thousand dollars from Long; he had squandered every cent of it.

The news that his coachman had declared him to be the murderer of his partner and that Dick Marston was innocent, reached Long five minutes before the officers arrived to arrest him. They found only a corpse. Long, as soon as he heard the news, retired to a private office and killed himself.

This act of the banker's, together with Kent's statement, fully proved Richard Marston's innocence. He was soon released from prison, and restored to the bosom of his family.

A week following the day on which Kent had made his statement, he died of delirium tremens, brought on by over indulgence in strong drink.

Mabel Long was prostrated with raging fever, caused by the terrible shock she received at the news of her father's tragic death. She finally recovered.

A will was found, in which all that Long had possessed was left to his daughter. Dick visited her frequently; the young couple were just as madly in love as ever. Eventually they got married, and that was how Dick Marston got his pile.

THE English jockeys, Archer and Wood, made last year respectively $50,000 and $45,000.

THE Morristown Chronicle gives "an old conductor" as authority for the following: "If you are in a railway car and your head gets tired and wants a rest, take a newspaper, fold it up, tuck one end down the coat collar, and let the other project up against the back of the head. You cannot imagine what a rest it is and how comfortable the head will feel, even if the passengers do laugh at you a little." Oh, newspaper, how great is thy mission! Every day dost thou develop some new christianizing and humanizing feature!

THE new Common Council of Rahway organized on Monday May 3d, and elected B. F. Crowell President, Edmund Brown was chosen Receiver of Taxes, and Garret Berry City Attorney. Mayor Daly sent in a spicy message concerning city affairs in general and the refunding of the city debt. The City Attorney has obtained from Judge VanSyckle, of the Union County Circuit Court, a rule to show cause, directed against the Mayor, as to why a mandamus should not be issued to compel him to sign the much disputed warrant of $512 47, which is required by the City Treasurer to balance his accounts.

THE Flemington barbers have decided to close their shops at 8 o'clock each evening, Saturday evenings excepted. It is not surprising, says Runkle, of the Flemington Democrat, that the barbers are "striking" for an earlier closing hour. We have often thought that their hours in the shop were much longer than there is any reason for. From seven o'clock in the morning until nine or ten at night in an over-heated and badly ventilated barber shop, to say nothing of the large amount of gossip and small talk the hair artists are forced to listen to and take part in, is enough to kill any one else. Let them close their shops at eight, or better yet, at seven o'clock.

SPRING!

Now that Nature is beginning to clothe herself in forms of beauty you will naturally be looking 'round for wearing apparel suitable for the season. A glance at our Spring offerings will save you a good deal of time and money too, for we were never better prepared to serve you than at present. For months past, long before you ever thought of the matter, we have been engaged in selecting, with the care and judgment born of a long experience, a diversity of fabrics that will not only please the eye, but render genuine service in the wear. We set the ball rolling with a Union Cass. Suit, in two shades, at $8 It is a marvel of cheapness and, if you don't give it away, the price you paid for it will never be guessed. In all wool goods we commence at $10. Nobby, stylish, durable and, remember, all wool We guarantee this, and are not afraid to have them compared with anything offered near this price. The celebrated goods manufactured by the Sawyer Woollen Co. are too well known to need praise. The demand for and ready sale of these goods have been such as to lead to their imitation, and, so far as looks go, they have been successfully copied. But the wearing qualities of the Sawyer goods have not been, and cannot be, imitated. To protect themselves and those who have learned the value of their goods, the Sawyer Co. have issued tags to those who purchase the goods direct for manufacture, to be attached to every suit made up. We offer this Spring genuine Sawyer Suits, with the "tag guarantee" attached, for $13 and upward. We have them in Plaids, Checks and Mixtures, and in patterns both grave and gay. For real value, combined with elegance of style and good workmanship, they take—the cake, we we were about to say; no, the whole bakery would be more appropriate. Our general stock is full, large, varied, all manufactured this season, and at prices beyond comparison. We invite inspection. The stock itself is our best advertisement. It is more eloquent than any description we can write.

Surface Indications

What a miner would very properly term "surface indications" of what is beneath, are the Pimples, Sties, Sore Eyes, Boils, and Cutaneous Eruptions with which people are annoyed in spring and early summer. The effete matter accumulated during the winter months, now makes its presence felt, through Nature's endeavors to expel it from the system. While it remains, it is a poison that festers in the blood and may develop into Scrofula. This condition causes derangement of the digestive and assimilatory organs, with a feeling of enervation, languor, and weariness—often lightly spoken of as "only spring fever." These are evidences that Nature is not able, unaided, to throw off the corrupt atoms which weaken the vital force. To regain health, Nature must be aided by a thorough blood-purifying medicine; and nothing else is so effective as

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

which is sufficiently powerful to expel from the system even the taint of Hereditary Scrofula.

The medical profession indorse AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, and many attestations of the cures effected by it come from all parts of the world. It is, in the language of the Hon. Francis Jewett, ex-State Senator of Massachusetts and ex-Mayor of Lowell, "the only preparation that does real, lasting good."

CONSTIPATION!

There is no medium through which disease so often attacks the system as by Constipation, and there is no other ill flesh is heir to, more apt to be neglected, from the fact material inconvenience may not be immediately felt from irregular action of the bowels. When there is not regular action, the retention of decayed and effete matter, with its poisonous gases, soon poisons the whole system by being absorbed into it, causing piles, fistula, headache, impure blood and many other serious affections. MISCELLANEOUS READING

THE OLD LOVER AND THE NEW.

"How I should like to elope," said Silvestra Grey, sitting under the crimsoning maples, with an open book in her hand.

"To—what!" said Jack Leonard, who had been leaning against the trunk of the nearest tree, partially whittling out a set of silk-winders and waiting for some visible sign or token of Silvestra's notice.

"To elope," repeated Silvestra, with a little frown; "like Lady Geralda Fitz Gerald in this book."

"What did she elope for?" asked honest Jack. "Why didn't she get married like other girls, with a regular lot of bridesmaids, and wedding presents, and all that sort of thing?"

"Jack, what a goose you are," said Silvestra, serenely scornful.

"Yes, I know I'm a goose," admitted Jack; "but—"

"There you stand," said Silvestra, arching her pretty, scornful brows, "a great, overgrown lubber, whittling away just like the Yankee on the stage—"

"I won't whittle if you don't like it, Silvestra," said Jack, guiltily thrusting his knife into his pocket.

"Like it! What difference does it make whether I like it or not?" flashed out Silvestra. "Whittle if you please—it's only a part of your character—and go on asking ridiculous questions. "Do!"

"I was going to say, Silvestra," pursued Jack, mildly accepting her shower of peppery words as a matter of course, "that if you preferred eloping to the regular thing, I'd elope with you any time."

"You!" cried Silvestra, bursting out into a merry peal of mocking laughter.

"Yes, I," said Jack. "Why not? I'm sure I love you, Silvestra, just as much as the hero loved Lady What's-her-name Fitz-what-do-you-call-her in the story. And if you'd only marry me, Silvestra, I shouldn't care if it was an elopement or a regular church affair, with carriages and cards."

"Jack, leave off talking nonsense, and go along," said Silvestra, peremptorily.

"Dear Silvestra, won't you say that you will marry me?" he humbly pleaded.

"No!" cried the little beauty, stamping her foot. "I won't marry you, and I've told you so a thousand times before. And if you dare to ask me the question again, I'll—I'll never speak to you as long as I live."

So Silvestra went away, her pretty head erect in the air, her hazel eyes sparkling with displeasure. And Jack looked after her like a big, loving, wretched Newfoundland dog of a man as he was.

"She's such a little darling," he mused, sadly. "And I'd give the world for one of her sweet looks; but somehow I don't seem to suit her, let me say or do what I will."

And Jack went home to his maiden aunt, a jolly old lady, with a fortune to leave, who was a great reader, and hugely interested in love affairs of every kind and description, and told all his troubles to this affectionate old confidante.

"She's an angel, Aunt Sadie," he declared.

"Pooh! pooh!" said Aunt Sadie. "No more an angel than I am. I've seen her. A pretty, sunburned little thing, with a pair of sparkling eyes, and something of a lisp. So you like her, do you?"

"I love her, ma'am!" declared Jack fervently.

"And you'd like to marry her?"

"I shall be wretched forever if I cannot win her," he protested.

"Very well," said Aunt Sadie. "I can tell you how to gain her affections."

"Dearest Aunt Sadie, if you will only help me to obtain this prize!"

"Leave off protesting," said Aunt Sadie, "and listen to me. Go away. There's your cousin Herbert Wayatt going to the Mediterranean in his steam yacht. There are the Folliott Friscoes just starting to look up the sources of the Nile. Or if you prefer moose-hunting in Maine, or salmon fishing in Tadousac—"

"But, Aunt Sadie—"

"And then grow a heavy beard," added the old lady, imperiously; "wear broad-brimmed sombrero hats; study up the matter of costume; read poetry and romance."

"But I always go to sleep over it, ma'am," said honest Jack.

"No matter for that," pronounced Aunt Sadie. "Wake up, and begin again. Never despair. Model yourself over again. Don't you see that this Jack Leonard doesn't satisfy our little queen of coquettes? Let's see if we can't re-build him to suit her royal majesty."

Jack listened, comprehended, eagerly assented, and whether he went to Tadousac, the sources of the Nile, the Bay of Naples or the Rangely Lakes, he disappeared without even bidding farewell to Silvestra Grey.

"How very eccentric of him," thought Miss Grey. "But, after all, it's just like dear funny old Jack."

And then she forgot all about him.

When Aunt Sallie Leonard opened her little brown-stone house on Linden Park to society the second winter, she had several unusual attractions—Lady Rosetta Amyliard of Busset Park, in Dorsetshire, who was writing a book about the Americans; Sir Hardy Hardiland, of Australia, and Captain Giacopo Leonardi, of Venice—to introduce to the world. And as Miss Leonard held in her white, wrinkled little hand the golden key which unlocks the gates of society, the distinguished foreigners had a very pleasant time.

The captain was tall and dark, not unlike what poor Jack Leonard had been two years ago.

"Yes, I think it's like there is a resemblance," calmly observed Aunt Sadie, when Silvestra Grey noted it. "The Leonardis are distant relatives of ours. Poor Jack! I wish he was here to-day."

"Yes," said Silvestra, slightly softening. "Jack was very nice—very, only a little outre !"

So the brilliant winter days and evenings, full of music, charades, operas and carpet dances, glided along, and Captain Leonardi became a constant attendant on Silvestra Grey. A handsome couple they made, and people began to whisper at the possibilities of an early wedding.

"Now I wish," said Silvestra, enthusiastically one day, "that you could have known my cousin Jack! Dear old Jack! You remind me of him, Capt. Leonardi."

"I shall be jealous of this Jack, if you rave about him any longer," said the captain, smiling.

"Poor Jack!" sighed Silvestra; "I think he liked me."

"And did you like him?"

"Come," said Silvestra, "that is scarcely a fair question. Of course, I liked him—a little."

"Miss Grey!"

"Yes, Captain Leonardi!"

"Suppose I were to say that I liked you a great deal—that I loved you—"

"Oh, Captain Leonardi!"

"Would you say me 'no' or 'yes?'"

"Yes," she whispered. "A score of times—yes!"

"Do you really love me, my darling?"

"You know that I love you, Giacopo," (with soft, reproachful eyes.)

"If I were a poor beggar in the Via Marina, would you love me still?" he catechised her, with tender earnestness.

"Yes!" she answered, steadfastly.

"For myself only?"

"Oh, Giacopo, how can you ask those cruel questions!"

"I like to be sure," said the captain serenely. "Come here, little one, and kiss me, and let me slip this circlet of diamonds on your plump finger. Ah, here comes Miss Leonard!"

Silvestra ran to her, with eyelashes wet with sunshiny tears.

"Oh, Miss Leonard," she sobbed, "I am engaged!"

Aunt Cadie lifted her eyebrows.

"To—Jack?" said she.

"To Giacopo," corrected the beauty—"to Captain Leonardi."

"Well," said Aunt Sadie, "he's Jack." Silvestra turned around, with a face of pretty puzzlement.

"Jack!" she repeated—"Jack!—"

"Say it again, sweetheart," caressed Captain Leonardi, tenderly imprisoning her hand in his. "You don't know how sweet it sounds. And, Silvestra—"

"Well?"

"If you would rather our marriage ended in an elopement than a regular church wedding—"

Silvestra gave a little comprehending cry; the scarlet blood suffused her face; she clasped both hands over her eyes.

"Oh!" she cried, "I see it all now. Oh, Jack! Jack! how could I have been so blind—how could I?"

But in vain she strove to draw her hand away. Captain Leonardi held it fast.

"You have promised me, my dear," he declared; "you have promised, and I shall not let you go."

"And I don't want you to," whispered Silvestra. "I—I think I always loved you, Jack, even when you were a great awkward boy. But now—"

And her bright shy eyes, timidly lifted to his, told the rest of the tale.

Aunt Sadie smiled to herself as she crept away.

"My little plan has succeeded," said she, "as I thought it would!"

IN THE JURY ROOM.

The case seemed clear enough to a boy ten years old.

The plaintiff sued the defendant for a debt. The defendant admitted that he contracted the debt, and that he had never paid it. He tried to show, as an offset, that he once lent plaintiff some money, but he failed to even establish the date of the transaction. The amount sued for was $400, and the Judge charged us to return a verdict in favor of the plaintiff.

When we got settled in the jury-room and elected a foreman he said:

"Well, I suppose we must return a verdict for the full amount?"

"Well, I don't!" replied one of the jurors—a man whom I had selected as an honest, conscientious juror.

"But isn't it a plain case?"

"No, sir! The plaintiff had two lawyers, while the defendant had but one. There was nothing fair about that!"

"But the Judge charged us to return a verdict for the amount," observed another juror.

"'Sposing he did!" exclaimed an old man on his left; "If the Judge knows more about the case than we do then what are we here for?"

"Which of 'em was the plaintiff, anyhow?" solemnly inquired a solemn juror, whom I had seen sleeping through most of the trial.

"The red headed man, of course," replied a young man who wore very tight pantaloons and chewed plug tobacco with great ambition.

"Was it! why I thought it was the fat man!" exclaimed juror No. 6.

The foreman suggested that we mark on slips of paper the amount each juror thought the plaintiff entitled to. His suggestion was followed, and the amounts run from fifteen cents to the $400.

"It seems to me," he reflected, "that the defendant either owes him $400 or nothing."

"I don't believe he owes him nuthin'," replied one of the twelve.

"But you heard the evidence."

"Hang the evidence!"

Some one suggested that we add up the sums marked and strike an average.

Another suggested that we return a verdict for the defendant.

A third offered to flip a cent and head or tail for the $400 or nothing.

A fourth wanted some one to tell him if the debt hadn't been outlawed.

It was finally discovered that we stood five for the plaintiff and seven for the defendant and the foreman wanted to know what he should do.

"Well," said one of the seven, "if we agree with you in this case will you agree with us in the next?"

He couldn't promise, and the leader of the dissenters declared that he would remain in that room a life time before he would agree with the five.

At the end of an hour there were eight men willing to return a verdict for $75.

At the end of two hours there were seven men who didn't care a cent and five who were in favor of the defendant.

At the end of three hours six men were in favor of $400, and the other six were playing poker.

In another hour two of us favored $400 and the other ten had made up their minds that at least two out of the three lawyers out to go to jail. We finally marched in with the announcement that we couldn't agree, when the juror who didn't know plaintiff from defendant arose and protested:

"Judge, we could have agreed all right if anybody told us what the case was about! I think we orter be furnished with diagrams!"

The Iron Era speaks intelligently on the law about pickerel. "The question has been frequently asked whether there is any law protecting pike and pickerel in this State, and most persons who have any knowledge of the game laws generally answer this question by replying candidly that they do not know. Some people contend that there ought to be a law on pickerel during their spawning months, but others contend that the sharks of the fresh water need no protection whatever and that they are fully able to protect themselves. Others, however, inclined to the belief that there is no such law. There is no doubt that the Legislature in 1874 passed a law protecting pike and pickerel, and that the Legislature in April, 1878, at least made an attempt to repeal this law, and that this attempt went so far as to pass a bill, which was subsequently signed by the Governor. The original law protected bass, perch and pickerel, and the alleged repealer re-enacted the same law but left out the words perch and pickerel. Whether this law acted as a repealer is the question. The proper answer to the question whether it is unlawful at present to catch pickerel would be that although it is not clearly unlawful it would not be better to do so."

THROUGH THE MAIL.

LETTER FIRST.

BUTTERFLY COTTAGE, May—

DEAR NANNIE:—I write to you at the dead of night. Every one is asleep in the house.

Shall I ever be happy again? I do not believe I shall, for all that made me glad has passed out of my life. I could write it in these words:

"He came, he saw; he conquered."

Just a few visits; just a few pleasant walks; three sweet kisses—only three, Nannie; I shall treasure them all my life—and then a dreadful scene, and mamma said I must never speak to him again. Just think of it; never speak to the man you love better than your life again! But one must obey one's mamma. I wrote him a little note and begged him not to call again, and told him why, and it was all over.

That was six months ago; I haven't had the heart to write since; but I must tell you what has happened. They have engaged me to some one else. He is a foreigner—a count. He is rich, and has a castle and family jewels. He asked mamma. Mamma said "Yes," and told me. I don't care what becomes of me. I am always unhappy.

If you ever see Charles—that is, if you see him when all is over—tell him the truth; tell him I never changed.

I read once of a bride who knelt down at the altar a living woman. She was dead when they lifted her up. And of another, who, on the morning after her wedding, was a corpse. Ah, well—if I could only hope that this would happen to me, but I have lived through so much.

We loved each other, Charles and I. Oh, how cruel it seems that such love cannot make people happy forever!

In a few days it will be wrong even to speak of him—wrong to speak of Charles.

Adieu, darling! Pray for me; I need your prayers. Your friend,

EVELINA.

LETTER SECOND.

BUTTERFLY COTTAGE, Monday, June 9.

DEAR COUSIN MAUD:—It is long since I wrote to you, but a growing family absorbs one's attention, and a country lady cannot expect to be without household cares.

When pleasant things happen in the family one naturally thinks of those who would like to hear good news of one; and when Evelina came to me with her cheeks as red as any rose, and said: "Mamma, he would put this upon my finger," I thought of you, and how you showed me Mr. Portchester's ring before any one else had seen it.

To be sure he is a foreigner, and that is an objection to anybody but a count.

I don't know when they will be married; but it will be charming to know that my dear Evelina is a countess.

His father's estates are on the Rhine, and I believe they are very wealthy. The ring he gave Evelina is a very fine emerald, and he has a miniature of his estimable mother on a snuff box.

I remain, with regard, yours truly,

MARTHA BAMBRIDGE.

LETTER THREE.

No. — FIFTH AVE., N. Y., June 12.

DEAR COUSIN MARTHA:—I felt very much pleased to hear from you the other day.

I laughed over your reminiscence. Well, I and Portchester have got along well enough. We don't see very much of each other. Wall street is so engrossing; but we never fall out. You know I never had a child. I'm so glad, when I see how other people's turn out.

Delighted that Evvy should be so likely to do well. I shall send her a wedding present when the affair comes off.

I suppose you've seen in the paper how our German butler has gone off with silver and some jewelry, and, above all, poor Portchester's snuff-box, with a portrait of Madame Pompadour on the lid. So I won't bore you with that. The detectives are after him. Portchester quite raves about the snuff-box.

Yours, MAUD PORTCHESTER.

LETTER FOURTH.

BUTTERFLY COTTAGE, July 4.

DEAR COUSIN MAUD:—I write again to let you know that the wedding of my dear Evelina is close at hand.

My dear girl's dress is superb.

They are going to Saratoga for a month, and will then live with us a year or two. We feared Alphonse would take Evelina at once to his palace on the Rhine; but he feels for us.

Dearest Maud, will you not grace the nuptials with your presence. We shall arrange a room for yourself and Mr. Portchester. Do come.

Mr. Bambridge is a kind husband. But he does not admire our Alphonse as I do. Mr. Bambridge said the other day that Alphonse "put on airs."

"My dear," I said, "that is only natural in the aristocracy. Who should put on airs if not they?"

Come and judge of my son-in-law for yourself. Yours, MARTHA.

P. S.—I trust you have found your things. It is so aggravating to be robbed.

M. B.

LETTER FIFTH.

NEW YORK, July 8.

DEAR MARTHA:—Yours received. I'll try to come. Mr. Portchester can't leave the city. Besides, he is furious about his Pompadour snuff-box and the rest of the stolen goods. The detectives are at a standstill.

I send a bit of silver for Evelina by express.

Men are always jealous of each other, but, my dear, don't make a mistake. Genuine aristocracy never "puts on airs." The Mushrooms do that. Hans Plack, my dishonest butler, put on more than any one else I ever met. He was quite overwhelming. Yours,

MAUD.

LETTER SIXTH.

BUTTERFLY COTTAGE, July 14.

DEAR PORTCHESTER:—I'm grieved and you'll rejoice. Your Pompadour snuff-box is found.

The fellow who had passed himself off as a German count on these simple Bambridges turns out to be our Hans Plack. I've had to do dreadful things. Think of poor Evvy having my jewelry on! I knew it at once. I knew who the count was before I cast eyes on him. Come down at once. Of course, it is terrible, but it would have been worse had Evvy married the wretch.

Old Bambridge has some sense. He thanks me heartily. As for Martha, she will hate me for life. Hans is safely locked up. Your affectionate wife,

MAUD PORTCHESTER.

LETTER SEVENTH.

BUTTERFLY COTTAGE, July.

DEAR NANNIE:—Come to me, my darling, and let me tell you all. The strangest things have happened. Our count has proved an imposter. I am free of him; and dear papa has sworn that he will see me married to an honest man before he dies, and has forgiven me about Charlie. I told papa how we loved each other, and he clasped me in his arms and swore an oath that he would stand between me and my true love.

He came last night. Darling, I do not count three kisses in my memory now. I do not know how many he gave me. Nannie, darling, I am almost too happy to live. Your loving friend,

EVELINA.

WAS IT A RAPID TRANSIT TRAIN?

As the car reached Westville an old man, with a long, white beard, rose feebly from a corner seat and tottered toward the door. He was, however, stopped by the conductor, who said:

"Your fare please."

"I paid my fare."

"When? I don't remember it."

"Why, I paid you when I got on the car."

"Where did you get on?"

"At Fair Haven."

"That won't do," said the conductor; "when I left Fair Haven there was only a little boy on the car."

"Yes," answered the old man, "I know it. I was that little boy."

THE GROCER'S BOY.

A Park avenue grocer took on a new boy the other day, and when it came noon he catechised the lad as to the price of butter, sugar, eggs, clothes pins and other articles which might be called for and went home to dinner feeling that the boy was all right. When he returned, after an hour, he missed a barrel of flour and asked what had become of it.

"Sold it?" was the proud reply.

"For cash?"

"No; the man said he had an account here."

"The dead beat! He took advantage of you?"

"Oh, no, he didn't. He said he couldn't wait for us to deliver it, and he rolled it out the back way and went after a wagon to take it off. Oh, no—he didn't beat us any."

"But the flour is gone."

"Yes, but while this fellow was after a wagon another man came along and stole the barrel and got away with it! I'd like to see anybody take advantage of me!"

HIS THOUGHT WAS ON THE PIPE.

Peter VanDewhackle and Timothy Gilligan, both inveterate smokers, worked on the farm of old Haggit. Being out of pipes one night, they started a search about the premises for some. After looking around awhile, Peter's sharp eye happened to light upon one of the desired articles.

"Dat was mine!" he exclaimed, suddenly snatching it up.

"That's a lie!" cried Tim. "By the powers, I've smoked in that same pipe fur more'n a wake."

"I tells you its mine," persisted Peter.

"Are ye giving it to me?" yelled Tim, in anger.

"Nix."

"Be jabers, I will have it this, whether or no."

Upon this they both clinched and engaged in a regular rough-and-tumble fight. Tim, though having the best of it, could not get the coveted pipe. Angered at last at his unsuccess, he raised the Dutchman with the intention of hurling him on to a pile of stones, when he was interrupted by Peter breaking out with:

"Timothy—Timothy!"

"What?"

"Trow me mit a soft place, so you won't prake the pipe."

SHOWING THE BOY OFF.

The hearts of many parents have been saddened by having their children obstinately refuse to "show off" their mental attainments in the presence of visitors. It is always a parental delusion that this display of Johnnie's or Sally's accomplishments cannot but be a source of infinite joy to all beholders, whereas the victimized visitor is simply enduring in enforced silence to torture forced upon him. Jenkins, a friend of mine, has a son three years old, supposed by the Jenkins family to be an infant prodigy, a future President and all that. The friends of the Jenkins family have different sentiments, which I will here expose because of my regard for Jenkins. I called at Jenkins' house the other evening when the phenomenon of the family was fairly overflowing with smartness. He came into the room with a whoop and a yell combined with a hop, step-and-jump movement that plunged him headlong into my lap, where he lay burrowing his head into my stomach and screaming frantically.

"There, there," said Mrs. Jenkins, "you didn't hurt yours if much, I guess. Stop crying and speak your new piece for the gentleman."

"I won't."

"Why, Johnnie, is that the way to talk to mamma?"

"Yes-s-s!"

"No, it isn't. If you'll speak your piece I'll give you some candy."

"I want it first."

"No, dear, speak your piece first."

"I shan't!"

"The gentleman wants to hear you."

The "gentleman" didn't want anything of the kind, but he said he did, and finally Johnnie consented to stand up in a corner, give his head a jerk and begin:

"Twinkle, Twinkle, little star,
How I wonder what you are,
Up above the——"

Here Johnnie suddenly breaks off and goes racing and tearing around the room, upsetting chairs, snatching at tablecloths and shouting like a young Indian.

"Don't," said Mrs. Jenkins; "that isn't half of your piece."

"It's all I'm going to say," and the mad race is resumed.

"Johnnie! Johnnie!" interposes Jenkins, Sr.

The infant Jenkins is now standing on his head in a corner, kicking out his heels and laughing. This interesting pastime is soon abandoned for the more exhilarating one of prancing around the room on his hands and feet and imitating the "woof, woof" of a bear.

"You're too noisy," says Mrs. Jenkins.

"Ain't!" briefly retorts Johnnie.

"You are," says Jenkins, Sr.

"I a-a-a-n't!" shrieked Johnnie.

"You John Henry Jenkins!"

Ire is in the father's face and voice, but Johnnie doesn't care for ire or anything else.

The result is a sort of pitched battle, in which the combined forces of Pa and Ma Jenkins are sufficient to drag Johnnie out by the heels. His mother returns, red and mortified.

"Children will never show off when you want them to," she says, sadly.

It seems to me that Johnnie was "showed off" to perfection.

HE TALKED TOO MUCH.

"These building associations may be good things," said a man loafing about the station, "and they may teach a man to save his money, and enable him to get something ahead, and to build a house of his own, but I don't think I need any building association in mine. A year ago last August I took my present position. I hadn't a dollar to my name, then. Now I have a nice house and lot, all paid for, and money in the bank, and I haven't been very economical either."

"And what position do you hold?" inquired a solid-looking man.

"My position? Oh, I'm a conductor on this road. You say you're in the railroad business too, eh? Conductor?"

"No."

"Engineer?"

"No?"

"What then?"

"Oh, I'm one of the directors of this company. Your name, please."

NEVER FORGETS A FACE.

The passenger who was never known to forget a face sat down beside a freckled young man with a sandy moustache.

"Seems to me I've seen you before," said the never forget-you passenger.

"Possibly," said the freckled young man, "my name is Smith, of Jonesville, Michigan."

"What! Smith of Jonesville?"

"Yes, John Smith, of Jonesville. Did you ever live in Jonesville?"

"Should say I did. Lived there ten years. Knew I had seen you somewhere before. I never forget a face. I knew you as soon as I sot eyes on you. Never forgot a face in my life."

"How long ago since you left the old town?"

"Let me see; it was twenty-seven years last June. That's a long time, isn't it? Hain't been back there since, but your face is as fresh in my mind as if it were only yesterday."

"Now this is odd," said the freckled young man; "you haven't been in Jonesville for twenty-seven years. I haven't been out of it for twenty-seven years, and I'm just twenty-seven years old. I must have been born the year you left our town. Do you still think you remember me?"

"Remember you, lad? Why, I knew you the second I saw you. I was your godfather at your christening, and do you think I would forget a face that was impressed upon my mind in so solemn a ceremony as that? No, siree. I never forget a face, young man, never."

W. C. T. U. COLUMN.

BY THE LOCAL SUPERINTENDENT.

"Rise up, ye women that are at ease; speak, exhort and rebuke with all authority."

In the Kitchen Garden Department the earnest work of the teachers was successfully shown, in the entertainment given April 13, and none who enjoyed the exhibition could fail to see the benefit it must be to those who are taught in so pleasing a way to do the most useful household duties, with neatness and dispatch.

Every two weeks the Flower Committee carry flowers to the hospital, and oftener to other sick and suffering ones. Through these bright tokens of God's love, they spoke words of cheer and comfort to sorrowing hearts, and adding helpful sympathy. The temperance flower mission sow their seed. What the Band of Hope is doing is also pleasant to know. The Blue Ribbon Sociable, announced from time to time, are pleasing evidences of advancement in this department.

The Literature Committee have contributed leaflets and papers amounting to about two thousand pages. I quote from this report: "So much there is to learn, so much to know in these days when our own homes, as well as our neighbors, are endangered by the insidious foe. We realize that the command of our Savior—'Go preach my Gospel, go tell my brethren' we should, not pass by." The visiting committee always make interesting reports. Many sick and poor are called upon and helped, and then are led to better living, through gospel temperance influence. One woman has been taken to the hospital while her two children are boarded at the Home till their mother shall be restored to health and them.

The Constitutionalist.

ANARCHISTS.

The recent riots in Chicago and Milwaukee have taught the people of this country a useful lesson by exposing to public view the evil actions of a set of unprincipled mischief makers called Anarchists.

The real workingmen of America are not responsible for the dastardly designs and doings of the Anarchists, who, taking advantage of temporary misunderstanding between the employer and the employed, under the fraudulent pretext of defending the rights of labor, rush in to vent malignant passion and to ply red-handed destruction.

The Anarchist is the deadly enemy of honest labor, as he is of law and good order.

Fortunately, having shown his true colors in the United States, where liberty does not mean licentiousness, popular sentiment urgently demands that he be here effectually and forever suppressed.

Down with him.

A CALL.

The Democrats of Maine in calling their State Convention speak as follows:

"All electors of the State who are in sympathy with the principles of true Democracy;

Who have faith in Jefferson and his doctrines of a simple, pure, and economical Government, and desire to see them carried out in the State and the nation;

Who oppose monopolies, and privileged classes, and the tyranny of grinding corporations and accumulated wealth;

Who respect and honor labor, and would place it in such a position that it shall receive its just share of all profits which are the joint products of capital and labor employed in the enterprises of industry;

Who would reduce the revenue of the Government to such a point that there shall be no surplus to tempt a facile Congress into its annual enactment of logrolled river and harbor bills, and other wasteful appropriations;

Who are opposed to an increase of the army, but favor a liberal expenditure for a judicious system of coast defences, and for rebuilding a decayed navy,

Are invited to join in selecting delegates to said Convention."

DUTY AND HONOR.

Nothing elevates a public officer higher and more justly in popular favor than the fearless and efficient discharge of official duty.

The people like a man of that stamp, because they can trust him when emergency arises.

We have a recent marked exemplification of the fact out West.

The Governor of Illinois, during the late riotous demonstrations in that State, instead of at once exerting his given authority and influence for the preservation of order, and the protection of life and property, as the law required, assumed a compromising attitude and apparently shirked duty.

Public opinion at home and abroad treats him with deserving contempt.

On the other hand, the Governor of Wisconsin boldly and promptly left the State Capitol, and proceeding in person to the scene of disturbance at Milwaukee, energetically called into requisition powers legally vested in him as Chief Magistrate and made short work of the Anarchists.

Public opinion very properly applauds the Wisconsin Governor and links his name with honor.

He dared to do his duty.

Such a man will ever win popularity from those whose approval is worth having—honest and intelligent citizens of all parties.

The Spanish Queen, Christina, on Monday last gave birth to a male heir to the throne.

Judge VanSyckel has appointed ex-Governor George C. Ludlow, Elias D. Smith and J. Williams Crabe, Commissioners of Adjustment of Taxation for the City of Elizabeth.

Alderman Jaehne, one of the "boodle" takers of the Broadway railroad franchise, has been found guilty by a jury. He is likely to take up his residence in Sing Sing for a term of years. Next.

In the recount of votes before Judge VanSyckel, in the contested Freeholder election case of B. Frank Crowell and George Wright of Rahway, on Tuesday last, it was found that Wright, Republican, had a majority of ten over Mr. Crowell.

Judge Joel Parker, in a letter to the Monmouth Democrat, declines being a candidate before the Democratic State Convention for Governor, saying that he is not and will not be a candidate, and that should he be nominated, he would under no circumstances accept.

A daily one cent newspaper to be devoted to the interests of workingmen, is about to be established in New York City. As a general thing their interests have been fairly dealt with by the entire press of the country; whether this will be more faithfully represented by an exclusive organ is among the doubtful things.—Camden Democrat.

The contest between gas and electricity has been of great benefit to Atlantic City financially. The price of lighting the street lamps with gas has been reduced from twenty-five to fifteen dollars per year, and the arc lights have been reduced from ninety to fifty cents per night. The Edison Company is putting in its plant and will be in operation by June 1st.

A decision in the Court of Appeals in New York may prove of value in New Jersey in the future. It is that the constitutional amendment limiting the bonded indebtedness of cities to ten per cent. of the assessed valuation of their property does not contemplate that the sinking fund accumulations shall be counted in as part of the indebtedness. The decision is a common sense one; since the sinking funds are held in extinguishment of the debt and are really assets.

The success of Democratic administration is mathematically demonstrated. During the first nine months of the present fiscal year, ending June 30, 1886, there was an increase of over $7,000,000 in the revenues of the government as compared with the corresponding period last year, and the expenditures for the first nine months of this year were over $15,000,000 less than the expenditures for the same period of last year, making a net gain of over $21,000,000.

SCOTCH PLAINS SCRATCHINGS.

The township committee of Fanwood held a meeting in Excelsior Hall on Saturday evening, May 15th, at 7 o'clock. All members present. Minutes of the preceding meeting were read and approved. The treasurer reported balance as stated at meeting of April 3d, $952 14. Received of L. Borgmeyer for redemption A. Q. Keasby's property, sold for taxes, $11.28; paid out by order of committee, $170 50; leaving balance on hand, $793 12. Mr. L. W. Miller, committee, reported he had given Mr. A. Q. PYÆMIA
Is the most virulent form of blood-poisoning. Less speedily fatal, but not less certainly so, is the vitiation of the blood of which the first symptoms are Pimples, Sties, Boils, and Cutaneous Eruptions. When the taint of Scrofula gives warning of its presence by such indications, no time should be lost in using AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, the only perfect and reliable medicine for the purification of the blood.
SCROFULA
Is a foul corruption in the blood that rots out all the machinery of life. Nothing will eradicate it from the system and prevent its transmission to offspring but AYER'S SARSAPARILLA. This preparation is also the only one that will cleanse the blood of Mercurial poison and the taint of Contagious Diseases. Impoverished blood is productive of

A wretched condition indicated by Pallid Skin, Flaccid Muscles, Shattered Nerves, and Melancholy. Its first symptoms are Weakness, Languor, Loss of Nerve Force, and Mental Dejection. Its course, unchecked, leads inevitably to insanity or death. Women frequently suffer from it. The only medicine that, while purifying the blood, revitalizes it with new vitality, and invigorates the whole system, is

WE TAKE pleasure in calling attention of our customers and all interested in sanitary matters to the all porcelain "Perfection," the only square top Hopper, with trap, made.—For perfect cleanliness and simplicity of construction we invite comparison with any Closet ever manufactured, either home or foreign. It combines, with the utmost simplicity, all the points of a strictly first class water-closet. The square top will make itself apparent to all users, in doing away with drip tray, the wash at all times thoroughly scouring all parts, whereas in the drip tray it cannot help but become foul underneath. It has a seal in Trap of 1½ inches, and the soil pipe vent of 2 inches diameter, as will be seen in the above cut, will prevent all syphoning of Trap. The two local or seat vents of 1½ inches diameter are intended for right or left ventilation, the one not being used to be closed. The large handhole in front gives free access to all parts of trap.

FOUR DON'TS.
A little girl when recently asked her name said it was "Minnie Don't." Her mother so frequently said "Don't" to her that she thought it was her name. Still, it's a good word in its way, and we want to call your attention to four things which please don't do.
FIRST--
Don't imagine, when you want to purchase Clothing, that it makes little difference where you buy. It makes a big difference, unless you are overrun with money. Prices are not the same everywhere. Almost any store has its $10, $12 or $15 Suit; but, the quality for the money—there is where the difference comes in. Why, we owe one-half of our success to comparisons made between our goods and others. It pays to shop. But, if you dislike shopping, why buy of us once, and we will have your custom as long as you need clothes.
SECOND--
Don't suppose that all that looks like wool is so. They have got the thing down so fine now that an expert can hardly tell the difference. Wool has got to grow on a sheep's back; and that's where the wool comes from of which our all-wool Suits are made. You may not be able to see the difference between ours and some others at the same price; but you'll find it out in the wear—and don't you forget it.
THIRD--
Don't believe, or buy any goods of, anybody who professes to sell at half cost. It can't be done. A merchant can no more sell you a Suit at less than cost—unless it's an old-style, shop-worn thing he would be almost glad to give away—than you can afford to work for half a day's pay. We make no such foolish professions; but promise to give you the best value for your money that can be offered by any one who pays a fair price for the labor of manufacture and seeks only a fair profit.
FOURTH--
Don't take it for granted that all clothes fit alike. They don't. A famous London tailor said "he could take a meal sack and make a Suit worthy of a gentleman's wear." He meant that it would fit so well that the quality of the material would escape notice. And there is a good deal in the way a Suit fits, not only in appearance, but also in the wear. If we were to extol our garments half as highly as many of them do, you buyers would think we were blowing. Call and inspect them once, and you'll think they are up to the average of custom work.

The vests have step collars and all extras. The pants are cut in the medium width now so popular, and show pronounced crease down both back and front. The materials used are Homespun Cheviots, Shaded Checks and Tweeds, the colors of which we control in this city, and cannot be found outside of our concern, and as we have so many patterns and shades to select from, and so few of each particular one, you may be sure they will not become common. Our prices for these Elegant Suits, complete, are $13, $15, $16, $18, $19 and $20.
For warm weather we are now finishing full lines of our new Blarney Serge Suits, in the two colors, complete for $10, made up light, tasty, and very stylish.

IT is expected that ground will be broken and work commenced on the erection of the plant of the Plainfield Electric Light Co. to-morrow.

THE death of Mr. John Walker of this city occurred in Cuba, on the 8th inst. He was the well-known baker on Park avenue, and leaves a widow and two children.

THE Saengerbunders will have their May festival next Sunday morning, leaving Blatz's Hotel in stages at five o'clock a. m. All their friends will be welcome.

ASTRONOMERS predict that a bright comet will be visible before sunrise during the latter part of this month. It is the comet of "1886" recently discovered by Prof. Barnard.

IT may be that Plainfield will have to pull through the Summer without a base ball club, but one or two excursions to Ocean Grove will kind of fill the void thereby occasioned.

It is proposed by the New Jersey Editorial Association to visit Thousand Islands, St Lawrence River, on their annual excursion. The date fixed for the start will probably be June 21.

THE wheat crop in the surrounding country never looked better, and our farmer friends consider it a standing rule that when wheat looks well early in May the crop is quite certain to be good.

PROF. MAYNARD of North avenue deserves the patronage of the entire public for his determination to close his barber shop during Sundays. He will keep open until twelve o'clock of the night before.

MR. MOODY left Plainfield in its remnants of wickedness, Wednesday morning, to the care of Mr. Whittle and Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan. The meetings next week will be held in the Crescent avenue church.

THE Hasbrouck illustrated lectures begin this evening as announced in our advertising columns. The speaker is endorsed by the best clergymen of the State, and we are assured his lectures are unequalled of the kind.

MORNING prayer will be said in Grace church on Sunday next at 9 o'clock. At 10.30 the service will begin with the litany, to be followed by the communion office. Sermon by Bishop Scarborough. Confirmation will be administered.

THE beginning of a fire in the barn of Mr. William Woodruff, last Friday evening, was discovered by that gentleman and stamped out before the complete destruction that would surely have resulted. It was undoubtedly of incendiary origin.

JOHN QUAAS, a carpenter employed in the construction of Cook Bros. new coal and lumber sheds on Park avenue, while working on the high structure Tuesday last, missed his footing and fell a distance of over twenty-five feet, severely injuring himself.

"THE FORUM" is to continue its very interesting series of personal experience articles. In the June number Bishop Huntington will tell the story of his religious life, and Dr. Vincent, Chancellor of the Chautauqua Circle, will describe how he was educated.

THE Great Evangelist Moody preached from the pulpit of the Crescent avenue church, last Sunday morning, and the Rev. C. E Dunn of Hempstead had his baby son christened at the same altar. Mr. Moody afterwards said it was the sweetest baptism he ever witnessed.

A FALSE alarm on Monday afternoon, and a call Tuesday afternoon by telephone to the residence of Mr. Freeman Pangborn, is the fire record for this week. The latter was only an "incipient conflagration" that was caused by mice and matches and arrested by means available in the house.

MR. ADAM FRITZ has disposed of the business of his extensive meat market on Front street to Hon. John Vetterlein, under whose management the business will be conducted after June first with increased facilities. We understand that Mr. Fritz intends making an extended Western trip on business this summer.

THE Day Farm, situated at Alton (Dog Tavern) and now occupied by William N. Pangborn, and owned by James C. Cloyd, of the firm of BirdEye, Cloyd & Bailes, attorneys, 170 Broadway, N. Y., is being laid out in streets and lots. Mr. Cloyd intends to put up four cottages this summer. K. Fosbery, of N. Y., is the Surveyor.

A RECEPTION to a select company of invited friends of the first circles of this city's society, was given by Mrs. Rowland Cox of West Seventh street, Thursday of last week. It was the intention to have tete a tete tables outside under the broad piazzas' roofs, but weather, bad weather decreed otherwise, and woman, lovely woman, was disappointed in proportion.

"ASH" trees and "Adam's" apples, together with lettuce, peas, radishes, tomatoes, etc., are being successfully propagated on a miniature farm in the rear of a Front street hat store by two gentlemanly clerks attached thereto. Hat boxes take the place of hot-bed sash and they give a decidedly unique look to our agricultural critic. Their farm is a "dandy."

THE Moody meetings have been as largely attended as could result with a system of limiting the audiences by tickets. Almost everybody has had an opportunity of hearing the great Evangelist, and many converts reward the Association and the ministers that arranged for his presence in Plainfield. Not only has Mr. Moody done the sinners good, but his talk Sunday morning to the clergy and the members of their churches regarding just what is expected and necessary from them, we trust will "bear fruit."

THE exterior of Force's Hotel, on North avenue, has been greatly improved in appearance under the skillful manipulation of painters. The store and hotel entrance fronts of the building are handsomely grained to imitate mahogany, and all other parts well painted, reflecting credit upon the skill of the mechanics, Messrs. J. A. Poole, E. Beach and G. Brittin, workmen sent here to do the work by the firm of Burton & Smith, No. 548 Hudson street, New York City, who are employed by Messrs. Coudert Bros., owners of the building, to do all their painting.

IN consequence of the severe illness of Councilman Beguelin's wife, who is suffering from inflammatory rheumatism, that couple's proposed European trip is postponed. Everything was in readiness for a start on the 9th ult., when sickness compelled them to relinquish all idea of going at present. As their present residence on Front street has been leased to other parties, Mr. and Mrs. Beguelin and daughter, and Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Meyer, relatives, have taken up their residence at Force's Hotel, until such time as Mrs. B. so far regains her health as to enable them to make a fresh start for their foreign trip.

IT is reported that Aimee, the French actress, will shortly appear here.

A TENNESSEE boy has been born with his hands behind his back. His mother will no doubt keep the pantry locked just the same.

THE grounds about the residence of Dr. J. T. Griffen, corner of Second and Washington streets, are among the most beautiful in the city.

IF the bicycle riders do not keep off the sidewalks within the city limits, some of them will be arrested and made shining examples and emphatic warnings.

THE latest participants in the Plainfield exodus to California, are Mr. and Mrs. John M. Clark, whose address will be the Palace Hotel, San Francisco, until July 1st.

A YOUNG horse that was being led by Mr. Harry Campbell behind his buckboard wagon, jumped in on the driver, frightened the horse that was hitched ahead and caused a general fright and bruising of man and beasts.

A DELEGATION of thirteen colored members of a Masonic Order of Knights Templar, paraded through our streets to the depot, headed by the Plainfield Cornet Band, this morning, on their way to Trenton to join in a procession of their Order in that city. Some of our best and well-known colored citizens were in the ranks.

A COLORED servant in the employ of Dr. Fritts developed signs of insanity recently, and the necessary papers were issued for her removal to the Morristown Asylum. Wednesday, however, a friend arrived from Virginia, and, upon request the woman was started on a journey towards the South accompanied by Capt. Dodd with orders from the Mayor to go with her all the way to Richmond, if necessary. Her name is Harriet Phillips, aged about 28. It was necessary to handcuff her and carry her to the train.

More Improvements.

The matter of incandescent lights for stores and private houses is being considered by "The Plainfield Electric Light Co.," and our citizens can rest assured that if sufficient inducement is offered, Mr. Chas. Wann, who was instrumental in securing to the city such a favorable contract for lighting our streets by the celebrated Thomson-Houston Arc System, will be the first to propose a system of house lighting equal to any in existence, without any further erection of poles.

Not So Good.

The McN. J. & S. minstrels that gave a performance of clever dancing with a little singing and some flip-flap turning on Saturday evening last, failed to seize so fast a hold of the hearts of the Plainfield public as the T. P. & W's. McNish's own set of "silence and fun," that no man ever did so well, was undoubtedly good, but nothing else on the programme demanded any particular credit except the singing of Mr. Frank Howard, the author of "Only a Pansy Blossom" and "When the Robins Nest Again."

Fire Board Meeting.

All the members of the Board were present at the adjourned meeting of Tuesday evening. The question of the Department's poverty in the matter of hose, was discussed, but nothing done in the way of purchasing more. A committee was appointed, however, consisting of Commissioners Brower, Livingston and Knowland with power to purchase a new steamer for No. 2 company. Estimates were read from a number of builders of engines, and an offer from one to allow $500 for the old steamer. The committee, though, should "shop" around some more before deciding what to buy.

Amateurs at Music Hall.

The reserved seats for the first exhibition in public of the dramatic talents of the amateurs of this city and vicinity, are almost gone, and those left can only be obtained at present of the participants. After Monday, however, the diagram of Music Hall and the remainder of the seats will be found at the pharmacy of R. J. Shaw. The advertisement elsewhere states the nature and variety of the programme, while the "big bills," and our issue of last week, give a list of the artists. Boucicault's play of "Kerry" will be repeated as it was recently given at the residence of Miss Clarkson of East Front street.

Illustrated Lectures.

The illustrated lectures of Dr. Stephen Hasbrouck of Yonkers, N. Y., are well worth crowding any house to see. Dr. Hasbrouck has recently returned from an extended tour in the East and brought back with him a very large number of views, photographic reproductions of places, people and buildings in Egypt, Arabia, Palestine and Syria, literally from Dan to Bersheba and from Damascus and beyond, of Turkey in Asia, Continental Europe, the British Isles, etc. Most marvelous are the perfect views of Petra the "rock city" of whose foundation and whose history succeeding generations know nothing. Dr. Hasbrouck has brought back for all who will see the glorious comes, the gorgeous colors, the amazing architecture of this city, which was old in Abraham's day, but of which we have no records save a few scattered data of conquest and loss, and the knowledge that the doom pronounced upon it has been fulfilled and that for centuries, Edom has been a desolation. We know of few things more entrancing than an evening spent in the East with Dr. Hasbrouck.

The Vocal Society's Finale.

In spite of a disagreeable, drenching rain, the Music Hall was very well filled upon the occasion of the final concert of the Vocal Society, Thursday, May 13th. The chorus was especially well represented, and the ladies seemed to have taken special pains with their toilets, there being an unusual number of light tinted dresses, which, grouped together, had a pleasing effect. The first part of the programme was varied. It consisted of a solo, Lassen's "Du Meine Seele," followed by Taubert's "In a Distant Land," by Mrs. Grant, who is a favorite with many in this city. Mrs. W. S. Canon, who also has her admirers, sang without special effect Becker's "In Spring Time." Mr. Charles Roberts, Jr., held the audience almost breathless with his charming rendition of Meredith's "Aux Italiens," accompanied by a string quartette. Mr. Roberts has made a great success with this recently in New York, and only those who have heard it appreciate what was missed by the outside world. Three part songs were given by the Society; Fanning's "The Miller's Wooing," Schira's "Boatman's Good Night" and Pinsuti's "Fair Land, We Greet Thee." The last of these contained a soprano obligato which was sung by Mrs. T. W. Davis, and which received an encore that was more satisfactorily rendered by the soloist. Fitzhugh's "Good Night, Beloved," a male chorus, closed the first part. The Plainfield gentlemen were assisted in this by members of Mr. Fitzhugh's "Brooklyn Choral Club." The latter with some ladies from the same Society, assisted in Mendelssohn's "Athalie," which filled part second and was enjoyed more than ever. The soloists were Mrs. Grant and Mrs. Davis, soprani, and Mrs. Canon, contralto, while Mr. Roberts read the part of the High Priest. The Society was accompanied by an orchestra from the New York Philharmonic Society with Miss Jennie Utter as pianist. After the concert, ice-cream, cake and speeches were served to the Society, and all retired, voting the evening a success.

The Bicycle Club's Entertainment.

The hundreds of people gathered to witness the exhibition of bicycling at The Crescent, Monday evening, under the management of Mr. John M. Crane and the auspices of his fellow members of the Plainfield Bicycle Club, all emphatically agreed that the introductory parade of the home club was a feature of the occasion. Even to the members themselves the accomplishment of so brilliant an affair without any preparation was a revelation, and Captain Runyon is not yet through receiving congratulations from everybody upon his ability and the grace of his men. The entire programme of the evening's entertainment included the usual expert riding, with roller skating before and afterwards for ordinary mortals. The usual "race" was also on the list, and resulted just as unsatisfactorily as must always be expected when speed has nothing to do with the case. If the riders had been started from two distinct points then the best man would have had a chance to win—because it is not necessary to pass a competitor. The "Lightning Drill" by four stars and four cranks of the Elizabeth Club was thoroughly appreciated, as well as the polo playing by the quartette first mentioned. It was eleven o'clock before the large audience left and the skaters could be persuaded to "let up."

A Brilliant Affair.

None but the brave attend a fair, so it is fair to suppose that there are scores of brave men in this city, because so many faced the fascinations of the dozens of fair women that were in command at the fair of the Grace church ladies in The Crescent. The interior of the building at the opening, Tuesday evening, presented a marvelous contrast to the scene of the night before. Upon the surface where the whirling wheelmen had displayed their skill and knickerbockers, tastefully draped and decorated booths enclosed handsome and elegantly dressed ladies with offerings of articles of use and adornment to tempt the eye and the palate in general, and the mighty dollar in particular.

Mrs. Councilman Dumont was the head of this great success, and her many able assistants share with her the credit of the satisfactory scenic and financial effects. The usual kind of table loaded with the usual miscellaneous and unrecordable assortment of artistic creations, was present, with such novel arrangements as a chestnut table, a pop-corn bower and a paper booth. The first mentioned was ruled by three pretty maids from the vicinity—Miss Guion, Miss Depew and Miss Drayton—who dispensed articles from Japan, manufactured in America. The bower where delicate cakes of candied pop-corn with a cup of lemonade, were to be obtained, was in charge of the Misses Bowers. At a lace draped cafe near the centre of the building, Mrs. Vanderhoff, Mrs. Scott and Miss Wilkinson served fragile cups of chocolate or coffee which they sold their many patrons and the cups as well. The other booths, tables, etc., were graced as follows:

Flowers and Confectionery—Mrs. Waring, Mrs. Van Suren, Miss Waring, Miss Clark, Miss Lowrie, Miss Massett, Miss Starks, Miss Belo and Miss Morgan.

Children's Table—Mrs. Dumont, the Misses Van Zandt, Miss Harriott, the Misses Bass and Miss Morgan.

FANCY TABLES.

Mrs. Ames, Mrs. Brooks, Mrs. Herring, Mrs. Ivans, Mrs. Bloodgood, Mrs. W. P. Smith, Mrs. Lawson, Mrs. Ficke and Miss Lawton.

Mrs. Clef, Mrs. Lowe, Mrs. Massett and the Misses Tweedy.

Mrs. Depew, Mrs. Finck and Mrs. Mayer.

Paper Table—The Misses Vail.

The graceful waitresses at the refreshment tables supplied by the donations of many and superintended by Mrs. Stover, Mrs. Craft, Mrs. Bowers, Miss Rosa Bass and Miss Meggie, were Miss Suydam, Miss Vosseller and the Misses Edith Chamberlain, Eleanor Beals, Mary Grannett, Susie Graves, Marion Dumont, Mina Morgan, Amy White and Maud Lowrie.

North Plainfield's Progressiveness.

The brief review of the improvements going on in "Washington Park," North Plainfield, published by us in last week's issue, was the means of bringing to our notice other improvements which we are glad to speak of. The indications are that architects, builders and plumbers will be kept busy and the merry sound of the hammer heard during all the Summer. Mr. Henry A McGee has purchased the handsome building lot known as the "Old Orchard," at the intersection of Willow and Orchard avenues, and if reports are true will erect thereon a beautiful "villa." We are also informed that Mr. Larrabee, of Mountain avenue, will shortly break ground for an elegant residence on Willow avenue, close to the grounds of Mr. Edward J. Waring. We also learn that Mr. John F. Wilson, one of the "Borough's" most enterprising citizens, has recently added about four more lots to his possessions in Rockview ave., and will erect a few handsome residences as an investment. The vacant lots at the corner of Rockview and Mercer avenues have been purchased by Mr. Manning, the builder, and Mr. William Sanford. Handsome dwellings will be erected at once to meet the demand from parties desiring to locate in the Park. Mr. William White has recently occupied the premises owned by him in Willow avenue, which in past years has been rented. The grounds have been greatly improved by the removal of trees; the house has been painted and the entire property largely improved. This gentleman owns some very handsome property in Myrtle avenue, which with the building and improvements going on, must soon find a market. This property is held at $20 and $30 per foot, according to location. Mr. White is one of the most liberal contributors to the electric light for the "Park," believing it will be one of the greatest improvements yet introduced. It is intimated that the vacant lot on the corner of Willow and Sycamore avenues will, or has been purchased by a new resident of this city, who will erect an elegant residence with all the modern improvements, and excel probably anything in the immediate vicinity. Architect Teal owns the lot immediately in the rear of the residence of Mr. Wann, and in a short time may astonish the neighborhood with a structure second to none in the Park. Mr. A. B. Darby owns the adjoining lot and is in no hurry to sell. Every vacant lot in the Park would readily sell to-day at the prices asked eighteen months ago. One real estate broker has disposed of more property this season than he has heretofore done in three years. The excellence of the water is also a great feature in the "Borough." In our issue of last week we gave the names of some of the fortunate owners of property and handsome residences in Washington Park, and it may be interesting to our readers to know others who enjoy a home in this little Park "under the mountains." In Willow avenue are the beautiful residences of Aug. Van Deventer, James McGee, J. M. Bettman, Chas. Wann, Miss Grace W. Luther, W. J. Roome, Aleck Miles, Henry A. McGee, William White, Chas. E. Horne and Edw. J. Waring; Sycamore avenue—B. A. Hageman, Miss Eleanor Roome, F. H. Gardner, Samuel Townsend, Mrs. Clapp, B. A. Hageman, Jr., J. B. Bacon and Charles J. Taggart; Mercer avenue—A. E. Faber, Jr., Miss R. A. Day, F. H. Martin, D. N. Groendyke, F. M. Theriot, Charles H. Meade and Mr. Jennings; Washington avenue—Rev. T. Logan Murphy, John H. Loeb, H. R. Munger, J. C. Zimmerman, L. F. Martin, Rev. Mr. Embury, Charles Sanford, the Misses Boorman, Mr. Griffen, H. P. Reynolds and Mr. Manlis. Mr. Chas. W. Case, a young lawyer of New York, occupies the "Campbell" house in Rockview avenue, which is beautifully situated, and Major Roome, of New York, has rented a furnished residence in Sycamore ave. for the Summer months.

COUNCIL PROCEEDINGS.

MONDAY, May 17, 1886.

At the adjourned meeting of the Common Council on Monday evening all the members were in their seats except Messrs. Bowers and Dunham. President Beguelin having been detained in starting for Europe was in the chair. The reading of the minutes was dispensed with PETITIONS &C.

The following petitions were received and referred:

From J. C. Voorhees and H. Newman for peddlers' license and Don Gaylord for a cartman's license.

From H. Wallace and others asking for a cross walk on Fourth-st at Sycamore-st opposite the depot grounds.

From S. V. Woodruff of Hotel Netherwood for a license to keep an inn and tavern.

From David Hand and others asking for the suppression of a nuisance in the way of a stagnant pool on Leland-ave.

From Fred. Ruttman and others asking for the location of an electric light at the corner of Broadway and Kensington-ave.

CLAIMS AND REPORTS.

The following bills were presented and referred:

F. A. Dunham, (surveying) $33; Geo. Angleman, (work on street) 261.75; Jasper Wilson, (crushed stone) 385.20; M. Ubdal, (laying pipe drain) 165; T. W. Morrison, (printing) 26.70.

Corporation Counsel Marsh made a report of the cases in which the city is a party. In that against Coward the city joined issue on all pleas except that of statute of limitations which it was conceded could not be denied. In that against Maurice Daly the appeal was dismissed and the judgment was paid. In that against Edward Kelly the appeal was dismissed and judgment paid. In that against M. F. Marclay to recover for laying flagging the defendant had pleaded the general issue to one count and demurred to the other. The case is to come up at a day in the term to be named by the court. In that against W. B. Stewart to recover for flagging, defendant had paid claim with costs. Accompanying the report were drafts of two ordinances, one to macadamize Broadway from Sixth-st to Hillside-ave and one to amend the building ordinance. The report was received and filed.

The treasurer presented his report with correction and it was put on file.

The rules were suspended to receive a petition from John Handren, C. Schepflin, Land Improvement Company, and others asking that Front-st from Plainfield ave to the west boundary of the city be macadamized. The signers added to their names the sums of money they would contribute to the improvement, amounting in all to $1,160. Referred to street committee.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. Cox, from alms committee, reported correct the bills of Catherine Conway $12 and of W. G. Morse $9.99 and they were referred.

Mr. Cox, from alms committee, reported correct the bill of John Rafferty $9.47. Referred.

Mr. Voorhees, from license committee, reported favorably on above peddler and cartman licenses. They were granted.

Mr. Goddard, from printing committee, made a motion that the official papers place the fee at the bottom of the advertisements. So ordered.

Mr. Voorhees, from street committee, reported in favor of the improvement of West Front-st as asked for.

Mr. Dumont moved the adoption of the report provided the petitioners make up the sum of $2,000 as their share of the expense and deposit the money before the ordinance ordering the work is adopted. The motion prevailed.

Mr. Voorhees, from the street committee, reported correct the following bills: F.A. Dunham $33; Jasper Wilson 385.20; M. Ubdal 165; G. M. Angleman 261.75.

Mr. Dumont moved that Mr. Ubdal's bill be laid on the table.

The chair asked the mover for an explanation of the matter and Mr. Dumont said that the bill of Mr. Ubdal was for laying a pipe on Farragut-ave to drain the water from East Front-st to Greenbrook. He did not think the work had been properly done. The pipe was put down in the gutter and was only covered a few inches with earth. If the pipe as laid will carry the water off he did not see why the gutter itself could not have been made to do the work without going to the expense of piping.

Mr. Voorhees differed from the other member of the street committee just on the floor, and thought the pipe had been laid properly.

Mr. Dumont made a further statement in support of his assertion that the work has not been properly done.

Mr. Marsh asked if the work had been done according to contract. If it was, and the city had made a fool of itself there is no help for us but to pay the bill.

Mr. Cox said he thought the motion to lay the bill on the table was a proper one as two members of the street committee differed so widely in the matter.

After quite a long discussion over the matter, the claim of Mr. Ubdal was laid over, Mr. Voorhees withdrawing his objection to this disposition of the bill.

The rest of the street bills were referred to the auditing committee.

The street committee sent to the desk the petition presented by Chas. Graves and other residents of Liberty-st asking to have the water properly drained from Liberty-st near the railroad. The committee made no report but presented a letter from Surveyor Dunham, stating that in his opinion a pipe would have to be laid through Liberty to Front and thence to connect with pipe running down Washington-ave to Greenbrook. The cost he thought would not exceed $600. The matter was laid on the table.

Mr. Goddard offered a motion that the clerk adhere to the form used in 1885 in advertising ordinances &c, that is, leave out the line "Proposed adoption of ordinance." Carried.

Mr. Goddard made a motion that the Thompson-Houston check be returned to the firm as the contract for street lighting had been signed by them. So ordered.

An ordinance providing for the macadamizing by spreading of stone on Broadway from 6th-st to Hillside-ave was read twice and adopted. It was then ordered engrossed and duly advertised.

An ordinance providing for the spreading of stone on Front-st from Plainfield-ave to the westerly boundary of the city was read twice and adopted. It was then ordered engrossed and duly advertised.

Mr. Dumont offered a resolution that the city treasurer be authorized to receive any deposits of money from property owners along streets which it is proposed to macadamize, as their portion of the expense of the work. So ordered.

Mr. Goddard called for the reading of an ordinance providing against the erection of any buildings made of combustible material in a district bounded by Peace-st and Madison-ave and Fifth-st to Greenbrook.

Mr. Dumont proposed an amendment which was adopted extending the district westward and eastward, so as to take in the territory about the railroad as far as Central-ave and Washington st. After a few other amendments the ordinance was adopted and it was ordered engrossed and duly advertised.

Mr. Marsh called up the ordinance for macadamizing 5th-st from Central-ave to Plainfield-ave and the latter from 5th to 7th-st. It was read twice and adopted, and was ordered engrossed and duly advertised.

Mr. Goddard moved that the ordinance regulating the excavation of streets for laying pipes be put back on its second reading, which was done. An amendment was offered by Mr. Goddard giving the street commissioner power to grant a permit to make repairs of pipes &c where the work was needed to be done at once. The ordinance was adopted, and ordered engrossed and duly advertised.

Mr. Marsh called from the table the communication of Winfield Scott Post asking for an appropriation of $100 to aid in celebrating Memorial Day.

A motion was made by Mr. Marsh that $50 be appropriated for that purpose which was carried.

Mr. Cox offered a resolution that the committee on law and ordinances be directed to confer with the mayor and corporation counsel as to the building being erected by the Cook Bros. to see what action if any is necessary in the matter.

There was some debate over the matter in which Mr. Goddard and Mr. Marsh expressed the opinion that the building is being constructed within the meaning of the ordinance as heretofore interpreted. The structure was being covered with large strips of corrugated iron it was said. The danger is from the lumber and not the building, it was argued, and the council could not regulate that matter. The lumber would be safer in such a building than outside of it.

Mr. Cox thought the ordinance was infringed upon in the spirit and the letter by putting up buildings of that description, and he should press his resolution.

The resolution was adopted all voting in favor of it.

Mr. Dumont made a motion that bids be received for the preparation of assessment maps. So ordered.

Mr. Simpson, from auditing committee, reported correct the following claims which were ordered paid: Geo. Angleman, $261.75; John Rafferty, 9.47; F. A. Dunham, 33; Jasper Wilson, 385.20; W. G. Morse, 59.99; C. Conway, 12.

The council then adjourned.

The State Fair.

The Board of Directors of the New Jersey State Agricultural Society recently held a meeting, and formulated plans for the annual exhibition, which will take place at Waverley, beginning Sept. 14, and continuing for one week. Several novel features are promised, and various improvements to the grounds are in contemplation. A committee was appointed to procure plans for the extension of the grand stand of fifty feet or more. It is also suggested to fill in the low grounds back of the stand, and to push the restaurant and beer booths further back for the purpose of widening the roadway. It will also remove the objectionable smells to a distance, as to be less offensive to the occupants of the grand stand. On Decoration Day the grounds will be opened for a trotting tournament, in which a number of noted horses will participate.

SPORTSMEN'S CORNER.

The return team match between the Jersey City Heights Gun Club and the Middlesex Gun Club was shot on the grounds of the latter club at Dunellen, N. J., on Wednesday, May 19th. The terms of the match were twenty shooters a side, in squads of ten, at live pigeons. Distance, 25 yards, single barrel, 80 yards boundary. In the previous match, on the grounds of the J. C. H. at Marion, N. J., April 21st, the latter club were victorious, by a score of 105 to 99. As the Jersey City Heights Gun Club is considered the crack gun club of the State, and have yet to loose a race, it was a matter of surprise to them, their friends, and even the friends of the Middlesex Club, that the score should be so close on the above occasion, and it is even now a surprise to the J. C. H. that the score this time was not more in their favor. But they have come to learn that there are other good shooters in other good clubs in the good State of New Jersey who are worthy of their steel—and we don't mean that last bird allowed, either, eh! Jacobstaff. The Jersey City Height's Club is composed of good, reliable shooters, gentlemanly and courteous, some of whom hold high office in the gift of the people, but are lovers of the recreative sport of shooting. They, one and all, express themselves as highly pleased with the reception they met with at the hands of the Middlesex Club on Wednesday, whose officers and committees did everything in their power to make things agreeable for the visitors. A fine collation was served on the grounds, the absence of intoxicating liquors being a feature. President Robinson was indefatigable in his efforts to make every one comfortable and satisfied. Captain-of-the-team Dan Terry masterly performed his duties. Not a thing occurred to mar the pleasantness of the gathering. The fact of the closeness of the shooting on the return match augurs well for the skill and discipline of the new club, which has enrolled among its members some very fine shots. If ever these two clubs should again contest, the "greenhorns" (M. G. C.) will not have the lowest score. Individual shooters of both clubs made the usual good and poor scores. It was the "day off" and "day on" for them. Johnny Day, as usual, did well, so did the Judge; so did "Uncle John." Following is the score in full:

Great interest was manifested among the shooters and spectators when the last man of the visitor's squad, Stelle, stepped to the score to shoot, for with him lay the honor of tieing the score or losing the match. Apparently he missed the bird clean, and with a groan the Jersey City scorers entered a goose-egg on their books. The bird, however, flew in among the crowd and was caught by a dog, whether within bounds or not was not at the moment thought of. With a shout the match was declared a tie by the visitors and no question was raised as to whether the bird was legitimately gathered or not.

There will be shooting on the Middlesex grounds on Decoration Day.

DUNELLEN DOTTINGS.

Mr. W. S. Stevens has removed from the Todd property, in which he has resided about twenty years, to the Oakley place.

There is quite a colony of tramps round about the "Tanks." They will need attention, and our inhabitants had better keep themselves prepared to "wing a bird." Why could they not be arrested as vagrants?

The cellar in Mr. Chas. Clarke's residence was broken into a few nights ago and everything cleaned out of it, even to the empty bottles. So much for padlocks on the outside, which fasten but does not secure you from disaster.

Miss Stone's verdict for $14,000 against the estate of the late Stephen Todd, gives universal satisfaction. Her life-long service of twenty-seven years, however, should have been rewarded by a promised provision by the late Mr. Todd during his lifetime, and not left to enforce her claim in a court of law.

Our "Borough" jogs along in a good many old ruts, one of which is the outlay of about $4 a day for scraping the roads. If this expenditure was made for a lot of broken stone and used after every storm to fill up holes and ruts in the roadway, I will guarantee Dunellen would have better roads (than she has now) within a couple of years. Personally I have never seen the advantage of incorporation, and don't believe we shall have good roads, sidewalks or lighted streets generally, until the frontage tax is adopted, the only just equitable mode of obtaining general and permanent improvements. ASHMEAD.

NEW MARKET NOTES.

The Seventh Day Church has been very satisfactorily decorated and embellished by Mr. W. F. Adams of your city.

Mr. DeWitt Fulton is fixing his father's store, embellishing it with paint, paper, etc., and will open a tobacco and cigar emporium.

Mr. H. V. Dunham was suddenly awakened about half-past 2 o'clock Monday morning, and found parties endeavoring to enter his chicken coop. He sounded an alarm by blowing a horn, and fired up at the moon with a revolver instead of at the would be burglars, who ran off toward Dunellen, and can probably be found stewing chickens in a boiler in the neighborhood of the Round House.

The Rogers Building is nearing completion. A litigation may occur on account of Rogers building over a passage way to the mill-dam, which is said to have been reserved as a right of way. Be this as it may, it has doubtless been used as a public highway for over twenty years, which would prevent an owner closing it, even if no reservation had been originally made in the conveyance.

It is questionable whether it is either good policy or in good taste for the Seventh day carpenters to work on the Rogers building on Sunday. It is unquestionably against the law of the State, and a most curious anomaly exists in this class violating a law openly and at the same time being about the only complainants against the Hotel men for merely doing the same thing. Curious world this—isn't it?

The boat season is at hand, and yet no one has made an appearance on the Lake. Mr. Otto is reported as saying he would lodge a complaint against any one who put a boat on the water, which he doesn't own, although he has the right to its use for mill purposes, and he can no more stop the use of the water for boating than he can for fishing. At all events there is a chance for him to throw some good money after bad in any attempt to enforce his claim. BROAD BRIM.

WESTFIELD WISPS.

Charlie, citizen Henickie's head barber, has removed to Morristown and opened a shop.

Mr. Alex. Leathem, a head book keeper for the New York World, has taken up his residence on Mountain avenue.

Photographer Harvey Moffett has located his gallery corner Broad and Elm streets, and is very liberally patronized.

The Wheelmen's fair and festival was patronized by a large number of our residents. It netted about $100 to the treasury.

Overseer Pierson, of road district, No. 8, has been engaged the past week in repairing and laying new walks on Central avenue.

A movement is on foot among our merchants and salesmen for the closing of their places of business at 7.30 p. m., during the Summer.

Two of our prominent residents who have been at loggerheads for some time over a trivial affair, have buried the hatchet and are now good friends.

Mr. G. P. Gregory, of Plainfield, was in our town the past week soliciting orders for crushed stone, to be furnished by him from his crusher at Plainfield.

One of the finest lawns in Westfield is that of Mr. Charles B. Peddie, corner of Broad and Chestnut streets. All he needs to do now is to remove the old barn.

The Ladies' Aid Society of the M. E. church will hold their annual strawberry and ice cream festival on next Wednesday evening, May 26th, in the church parlors on Broad street.

The lecture of Rev. A. H. Lewis, of Plainfield, on "Courtship and Marriage," at Arcanum Hall, on Thursday, was largely attended. The lecturer was well received and gave great satisfaction.

The Hoffman stone crusher is purchased and will be placed in position ready for work before the first day of June next, so that our overseers can get all the stone of any size they may want for roads.

If the old water course or drain across the land of Mr. F. R. Baker on Broad street, road district No. 9, was properly opened so that the surface water could flow off the road bed, the road would not be in such a muddy condition. It no doubt is the duty of the overseer of that district to see that the water courses are kept in proper order.

On Tuesday morning last Mr. James McMurray, while driving his trotter along Broad street, collided with a gypsy wagon, which threw his skeleton around, throwing Mr. McMurray out, the horse dragging him a short distance by the lines. Several persons standing on the sidewalk caught the horse and rescued McMurray from his dangerous position. He was but slightly injured. This practice of some of our residents making Broad street a trotting course ought to be stopped, or no doubt there will soon be some serious accident happen.

THE COUNTRY DOCTOR.

The radiantly colored leaves of the October morning were drifting down on the walk; the distant woods were glowing like a giant kaleidoscope, and the sweet, pine-scented air was blue with the intense blueness of an American autumn, as Doctor Dulany sauntered down the village street.

"My lines have fallen in very pleasant places," said he, to himself. "When old Dr. Holden asked me to come here and take charge of his practice three months while he went to Europe, I had no idea that I was stepping into an earthly paradise like this, and——" But at this moment a tall, square-shouldered young man stopped directly in front of him, holding out a welcoming hand.

"No!" cried he, "surely my senses can't be playing me false! It is Frank Dulany! And what in the name of all the heathen gods has brought you here?"

Dulany laughed.

"I knew you lived somewhere in this vicinity," said he; "I am here in charge of old Holden's patients for three months, before I go South for the rest of my life. Tell me something about Mossbridge and the Mossbridgians."

Mr. Kirke linked his arm in that of his friend, and together they walked down toward the little hospital on the shore of the river, where incurable diseases, gratis-patients and out-door relief were dumped together, as they often are in country towns; and as they walked they talked, with the careless abandon of college friends.

"But you haven't told me anything about the ladies," said Dulany, carelessly.

"I'm coming to that," said Kirke. "We have a dozen pretty girls, at the very least, but only one beauty. And I tell you what, Dulany, you had better beware of Geralda Granger."

"And why?" Dulany asked.

"Because," Kirke laughingly made answer, "she is a merciless beauty—a slaughterer of human hearts—in fine, a first-class coquette."

"And you think I shall become one of her victims?" said Dr. Dulany.

"Think?" echoed Kate, "I don't think at all—I'm quite sure of it!"

"But I'm only a poor, young country doctor. Why should she trouble her head about me, if she is, as you say, such a peerless beauty?"

"Because," said Kirke, "she'd flirt with a chimney-sweep, if there was no one else on hand upon whom she might whet her powers. It's in her. She's born to rule human hearts, and trample on them afterwards."

"And how have you escaped this common doom of all mankind?" asked Dulany.

"I haven't," Kirke answered, with a comical grimace. "My scalp hangs at her belt with a hundred others. She refused me a year ago. She don't mean to marry in Mossbridge. She has announced her determination to become the bride of some city millionaire; and I think she'll do it, too—for, by George, she's handsome enough to be a crown princess!"

Doctor Dulany thought over all these things afterward, when he was by himself in his little office.

"I don't mean to become the prey of this rural Cleopatra," he said to himself; "and I rather think that my obscurity is my security."

* * * * *

"The young doctor who has taken old Holden's practice, eh?" said Miss Granger, a little disdainfully, "he is to be at Miss Mix's to-night, is he? Very well—I shall soon dispose of him!"

Geralda Granger was a tall, imperial beauty, with dark, long-lashed eyes, a complexion like cream-and-roses, and a soft, languid voice; and, at Miss Mix's social gathering that night, she looked as lovely as a dream of Circassia. But to her infinite dismay and amazement, Doctor Dulany took no more notice of her than he did of old Mrs. Percy, who wore a wig and blue spectacles. He was coolly polite—that was all; and Miss Granger did not know what to make of him.

"But he's rather handsome," she unwillingly admitted to herself.

Miss Granger put on her prettiest dresses and decorated her hair with the sweetest flowers out of her aunt's little conservatory, and really devoted herself that autumn to the business of captivating Doctor Dulany.

"The man must be made of cast-iron," she said to herself. "And only an insignificant country doctor at that! It's perfectly ridiculous! The idea of his visiting Miss Herbert just because she has a mania for charity and poor people! And he took Lucy Villars down into the woods to botanize after autumn flowers—the hateful school miss! And he's going to join Mrs. Gracy's Shakespeare Society. I never was a blue-stocking and never will be. Let him go!"

But Geraldine couldn't content herself with this system of philosophy. Doctor Dulany was the first man who had ever resisted her fascinations, and she was determined that he should be the last.

And she tossed her head, and froze up like a fair icicle, in his presence, and the flinty-hearted fellow never even seemed to know it.

"A charming young man," said Mrs. Gracy. "So intelligent, so perfectly well informed on every subject."

"So truly generous and good to the poor!" said Louisa Herbert.

"The most delightful companion in the world," said little Lucy Villars, who was developing into a dangerously pretty blonde.

"Oh, Geralda, if you could only hear him talk about his own home and his mother."

"Pshaw!" said Geralda, so short and sharp that Lucy looked up, wondering what was the matter.

Miss Granger was somewhat pensive that evening. She had always regarded Lucy Villars as a child; but after all, she was nearly seventeen, and undeniable pretty. But what a fool Doctor Dulany would be, to fling away his rich nature and rare capacities on a thoughtless elf like Lucy, just out of boarding school!

"Aunt Susie," she said suddenly, "I think I should like to join a sisterhood, or go into a convent, or someting of that sort."

"What," said Aunt Susie, in dismay.

"I'm tired of all these senseless balls and parties," said Geralda, bursting into tears.

"My love," said Aunt Susie, "you are not well. Your nervous system is all run down. We'll send for the doctor."

Doctor Dulany came just exactly like a "human machine," as Geralda declared in her anger, felt her pulse, asked half a dozen conventional questions, and advised early hours and a tonic.

"I can't bear that man!" said Geralda; and she burst out crying.

"The poor darling is quite hysterical," said Aunt Susie. "Never mind—good old Doctor Holden is coming back next month, and he will understand your constitution!"

And then Geralda cried more bitterly than ever, and Aunt Susie was hopelessly puzzled.

Doctor Dulany was at the hospital next day, just at twilight, and as he came into the feverish ward a soft-gray shadow glided out at the doorway.

"Who is that?" he asked quickly. "Not old Kate, nor yet Alice Evans?"

"It's Miss Granger, sir," said the head nurse. "Alice has the neuralgia in her face, and Miss Granger would take her place."

"She must not do it again," said Doctor Dulany, with quiet authority. "I am not quite sure about the non-contagious character of some of these cases."

"She says sir," declared the old nurse, "that she wants to do some good in the world. But we was to be sure and not tell you, sir."

Doctor Dulany smiled.

"There are more ways of doing good in the world than one," said he. "And Miss Granger must come here no more."

He hurried through the various wards and made such good speed back along the lonely road that he overtook the gray, gliding shadow at the entrance to the village street.

"Miss Granger," said he, "I detected your identity at once."

"What of it?" retorted Geralda, almost fiercely. "I supposed I had a right to enter a public hospital so long as my uncle pays taxes for its support."

"Possibly," said Doctor Dulany, "but it is my desire that you will not come there again."

"Is it, then, an offense even to cross your path?" indignantly cried Geralda.

"Not in the least, but——"

"I know—I have known all along," went on the girl, choking down the angry sobs in her throat, "that you hated the sight of me; but you have no right to tell me so! Oh, I am so wretched! I wish that I were dead."

Doctor Dulany placed himself directly across the path, so that she could neither walk over, under, nor around him.

"Miss Granger," said he, "will you be kind enough to tell me what you mean?"

"No!" flashed out the girl, "I won't!"

"But you shall!" quietly declared the doctor. "The reason that I did not want you to enter the hospital, is that I have an idea that some of those fever cases partake of the typhoid nature and——"

"What then?" said Geralda. "What have I to live for that I should shrink from exposing myself?"

"Everything!" said the doctor.

"Nothing!" said Geralda.

"Nevertheless," said Dulany, quietly, "I forbid you running that risk."

"What is it to you?" she cried passionately. "If I dreamed that you cared whether I lived or died——" She stopped suddenly, with crimsoning cheeks. Had she said too much? "I do care," said Doctor Dulany. "Very much indeed. In fact had I not been told that you were a heartless coquet——"

"It is false!" said Geralda, hurriedly.

"I might even venture to say more," he pursued, his eyes fixed intently on her face.

"Say it then," she whispered, making no effort to withdraw the hand which he had taken.

"Well, then," he returned, laughing, "I love you. Is that definite enough?"

"And I love you!" she answered. "Oh, Doctor Dulany, you must have seen that long ago! But, tell me, when did you first begin to—to care for me?"

"From the hour when I first saw you," said he.

And so our village coquette was conquered, and surrendered at discretion; and, to the surprise of all her friends, she has married the quiet, young country doctor.

AN AMERICAN LORD.

The difference between a Republic and Monarchy is distinctly drawn. One is by nature plain and practical, the other bespangled and pretending. One maintains the just excellence of personal worth, the other the absurd superiority of blood and wealth.

They are far apart.

Republicanism, faithfully observed, spurns with contempt everything that savors of aristocracy.

Our country is as yet clear of a titled nobility, but, we regret to say, a class of mushroom millionaires here exist who appear ambitious to ape the disgusting style of King ridden lands. To make of themselves money wrought fools.

'Tis English, you know.

Yes, and we detest it.

A Senator of the United States from the Pacific slope, possessing an immensity of wealth, but a meagre supply of good sense and statesmanship, is reported as keeping a magnificent house establishment in Washington and therein sporting a retinue of eleven dress coated and livery accoutred English men servants.

An American Senator, with eleven English trained lackeys to do the bidding of his would-be Lordship.

What think you of that, Honest Men of Labor?

The Senator is rich.

How he became so we will not at present discuss.

The privilege is his to spend money, but we contend that he has no right to disgrace the Republic by holding under it a representative office and at the same time assuming the role of a member of the British House of Lords.

He ought to resign.

If a Republican form of government and attendant manners are unsuited for a gentleman of his gorgeous taste and purse, let him hoist anchor and seek the congenial company of regal dudes. In Europe he might readily purchase a worthless Countship and feel happy surrounded by his eleven uniformed henchmen.

This Republic is no place for such as he. Its dignity and prosperity outweigh in value a thousand fold the combined riches of all the monied aristocrats and monopolists who live and presume to call themselves American citizens.

They are aliens to Republican principles.

We honor and respect men who have acquired wealth honestly and use fortune, not for ostentatious personal display, but with becoming modesty and prudent generosity for the good it may do. Such are blessings to any community.

Aristocracy attaches not to them.

There is usually a good deal of blowing at a flower show.

The President has vetoed the bill making Omaha a port of entry.

John Durand, a well-known carriage builder of Rahway, died suddenly of heart disease in that city recently. He was the father of the recent Democratic candidate for Mayor, James Durand.

KILLED BY THE ELECTRIC LIGHT.

CHICAGO, May 10.—A strange phenomenon occurred during the storm of Saturday night in the vicinity of the Board of Trade tower light. It was none other than a shower of birds. Yesterday, when the watchman made his rounds, he found the sidewalks and streets in front of the tower fairly covered with dead birds of all sorts. A little later the electrician came down, and when he saw the great piles of birds he said that they had been killed by the electric light at the top of the tower. When he went up to the lantern with several members of the Board of Trade the roof was found to be covered with dead birds. These birds are of every known variety, and many unfamiliar species are among the lot. All shades and colors are there—scarlet, blue, pink, red, canary, mottled black and white, and there were some snipe and plover among them. The theory is that they were migratory flocks going from South to North, and were attracted by the great light, which killed them the moment they touched it. There was a countless number of them, enough to trim all the ladies' hats in Illinois.

The new oleomargarine act of the Legislature recently signed by the Governor is the most stringent law yet enacted on the subject. It provides stringent rules against offering or exposing for sale, or selling or having in possession for the purposes of sale, any oleomargarine, butterine or suine, or any substance in imitation of butter or cheese, unless contained in and sold out of tubs, pails, firkins, vessels or other packages which shall have painted on the outside thereof a stripe or band at least three inches wide extending completely around said vessel or package painted with black paint, and that every such vessel or package shall have legibly branded and burned in, in at least two places as nearly opposite as possible, the word "oleomargarine," "butterine," "suine," or "imitation butter," or "imitation cheese," as the case may be; and that every such vessel shall also bear a label with the name of the maker of the contents, and the location of the manufactory, branded on the same.

CLEVELAND'S
SUPERIOR BAKING POWDER
DOES NOT CONTAIN
LIME, AMMONIA, OR ALUM.

Cleveland's Superior Baking Powder, manufactured by Cleveland Brothers, Albany, N. Y., is absolutely pure and wholesome. It is made only of strictly pure Grape Cream of Tartar Bicarbonate of Soda, and a small portion of wheat flour, and does not contain Ammonia, Alum, Lime, or any adulteration whatever.

The Cream of Tartar is refined by a new process which frees it entirely from lime and every impurity, and is obtained in the pure crystals and ground in our own factory; the Bicarbonate of Soda is prepared expressly for us; and to ensure uniform and absolute purity of our baking powder all the ingredients are subjected to searching chemical analyses and none used unless proved to be perfectly pure.

In confirmation of the above we publish the following from the able and reliable chemists of the New York Produce Exchange:

"We are analyzing all the Cream of Tartar used in the manufacture of Cleveland's Superior Baking Powder, and we hereby certify that it is practically chemically pure—testing as high as 99.95 per cent. and not less than 99.50 per cent.

"From a hygienic point of view we regard Cleveland's Superior Baking Powder as the ideal baking powder, composed as it is of pure Grape Cream of Tartar and pure Bicarbonate of Soda.

MISCELLANEOUS READING

THEIR UNCLE'S PLAN.

The immense dry goods store was crowded.

Charmingly attired ladies swarmed about the counters; harassed saleswomen pulled down innumerable boxes and answered unlimited questions; and the little baskets chased one another along the wires to the cashier's desk.

At a further counter, were pretty toilet articles held away. Annie Rogers stood gazing at her own fair image in a plate glass hand-mirror with Russia leather back.

"He'll be sure to like it," said, looking up at the young man who stood waiting at her side. "I'll take it," she added, turning to the girl behind the counter and producing her purse. "It's his birthday, you know," she went on, as the hand-glass went flying down a wire. "We always make birthday presents to each other. Dear old Uncle Dodson!"

"Uncle Dodson" he had always been to her, though she was only an orphaned relative of his dead wife, adopted in her infancy.

"He's a lucky person, with you to care for him," said Howard Canby, taking charge of the hand-mirror as it reappeared in its neat wrappings. "You'll let me walk home with you?" he went on, as they stepped out into the crowded street.

More than one hurrying shopper noted them admiringly as they walked slowly down the avenue together—the graceful girl, in her soft, light dress, her cheeks grown pink and her eyes bright in the fresh air, and the tall young man, not far behind her in personal advantages, bending to talk to her.

But they were not aware of these approving glances; they were not conscious, in fact, of anything beyond their own absorbing conversation, a hint of which may be gathered from their parting words. For, as they mounted the broad steps of the big Dodson house, Annie was murmuring:

"What will Uncle Dodson say?"

"He'll give us consent and blessing, of course, my dear girl," said Howard, cheerfully.

And he gave Mr. Dodson's birthday present into her possession, pressed her hand with a whispered word, and went down the steps reluctantly.

A large valise in the hall, and an unfamiliar hat hung on the rack.

Annie looked at them sharply. Probably it was some friend of Uncle Dodson's come to see him—he was something of an invalid.

But the hat—a smart, speckled straw, with a blue band—had an unmistakably youthful air. She ran up the stairs wonderingly.

Mr. Dodson was sitting in the arm chair before the window, where most of his time was spent. A young man of two-and-twenty, or thereabouts, noticeable for nothing unless for the cheerfulness of his rather boyish face, sat near him.

Mr. Dodson looked up with a welcoming smile as Annie entered.

"My nephew, Dudley Hobart, my dear," he said.

The young man rose and bowed—rather constrainedly, Annie thought.

Mr. Dodson regarded her anxiously.

"Sit down," he said.

Annie sat down at his side, feeling that something unpleasant was coming; and the young man quietly withdrew.

"He is my nephew—my only relative," Mr. Dodson began. "He will inherit my property, my dear."

"Well?" said Annie, cheerfully.

"Well," Mr. Dodson repeated, stroking her hand, "he will inherit my property; but you must be provided for, too. There seems to be but one way. I have thought of it much; but the best way seems to be—that you should marry. So I have sent for him," said Mr. Dodson, going on hurriedly. "And—we have been talking of it, my dear."

Poor Annie had listened silently. Was this kind-hearted Uncle Dodson who was saying these dreadful things?

"A little to business like to suit you, eh?" said Mr. Dodson, noting her distressed face. "Yes, of course. I expected that. Young folks nowadays have an idea that their elders shouldn't have a word to say about these things—not a word! But don't you see, my dear," he went on, kindly, "that it's all the same thing? Suppose I had got Dudley here without mentioning my little plan? Well, you'd have been pretty sure to fall in love with each other. He's as nice a fellow as you'll find, Annie, and he knows a pretty girl when he sees one, I imagine. Well then, why should you hold back, either of you, merely because I give a little push to a sure-enough affair?"

The girl at his side turned her troubled face away hastily.

It was a very simple thing surely to put an end to all this. The mere mention of Howard Canby would do it, she was sure, for Uncle Dodson was not an ogre.

And yet, how could she meet his possible displeasure and his certain disappointment?

The words died away on her lips.

"A bashful pair of youngsters you are, I vow!" said Mr. Dodson, with a laugh. "If Dudley didn't behave the same way! Oh, well, you'll get over it."

Annie opened her lips, hesitated, closed them again, with a weakness and cowardice of which she was painfully conscious, and rose, with helpless tears dropping.

Her recent purchase was still in her hands.

"I have bought a little present for your birthday, Uncle Dodson," she said, chokingly, and laid it on his knees.

It was not until a rather late hour that afternoon that Annie found courage to visit Mr. Dodson's room again.

She had carefully avoided Mr. Hobart.

At four o'clock a messenger boy had brought a very small parcel, addressed to herself in Howard's well-known writing, which, when she had opened it eagerly, had been found to contain a little band of gold, set with a glittering stone.

It is a most unnatural proceeding for a young lady to burst into tears at the first sight of her engagement ring; but that is what Annie did.

For the pretty shining thing seemed only the symbol of her trouble and perplexity.

She knew perfectly that her right course was to put the ring on the proper finger, go boldly to Mr. Dodson and explain its position there.

She did, indeed, get as far as putting it on, and gazing at it fondly and admiringly, and tearfully, from every conceivable point of view; but there her courage failed her.

Dear old Uncle Dodson! how could she dash his well meaning hopes to the ground with a cruel word or two? He was so far from strong, besides. Sudden disappointments always did him harm.

She had dried her eyes, as these despairing thoughts came over her, and started mechanically for Mr. Dodson's room.

Mr. Dodson sat facing the window, as usual. His head was thrown back and his eyes were closed.

Annie drew a sigh of relief, he was asleep.

Dudley Hobart was sitting in a back corner of the room, with a newspaper in his hand, and his feet disposed comfortably, if not gracefully, on a second chair. He rose hastily as Annie entered.

"He is asleep," he remarked, after a timid pause.

"I had observed it," said Annie, shortly, not deigning to look at the speaker.

The young man looked confused. He laid down his paper, and passed his hand over his closely-cropped head in a troubled way, and finally offered her a chair.

There seemed to be nothing else to do, and Annie sat down stiffly.

Mr. Hobart took the other chair. If Annie had glanced at him, she might have seen that a pleading look filled his boyish face; but she looked coldly over his head at the wall-paper.

There was silence for several moments.

Then the young man, with a nervous clutch of his chair-back, and with a visible effort, began, desperately:

"He said he had told you his—his plan."

Annie was cruelly unresponsive.

"May I inquire what you think of it?" said Mr. Hobart, with a face grown pale with agonized embarrassment.

Annie rose sharply.

"Words could not express what I think of it!" she said, flashing an indignant glance toward the young man. "It is absurd and abominable! He is dreadfully mistaken," she went on, more mildly, indicating Mr. Dodson. "It can't possibly be!"

The occupant of the arm-chair moved restlessly; he was waking up.

Annie lowered her voice as she went on, severely:

"I am already engaged. I—"

She paused in bewilderment. The face of her listener had been suddenly transformed with unmistakable relief and joy.

He seized her hands warmly.

"Engaged? Well, if we aren't in the same boat! So am I!"

Annie's severity vanished. Her cold gaze gave way to a quick smile of sympathy.

"Are you, Mr. Hobart?" she cried. "I'm so glad!"

"Don't call me Mr. Hobart!" said the young man, impetuously. "Call me Dud. Everybody calls me Dud."

Annie laughed; and then they sat down again, in a friendly way.

"I have only been engaged since this morning," said Annie, confidentially. "See; he's just sent the ring around. He's the nicest fellow in the world! You'll think so when you see him."

"He ought to be the happiest," said Dud, gallantly, taking her hand to examine the ring.

They had lowered their voices carefully; further than this, Mr. Dodson's presence was ignored.

"The ring I gave Genevieve was something like it," Dud continued, briskly. "Pretty name—Genevieve—isn't it?"

"Very pretty!" said Annie.

"She's a pretty girl, too!" said Dud, warmly. "I just wish you could know her! She's only seventeen: but you wouldn't think it. Here, I'll show you her picture."

He took it out carefully from an inner pocket, and held it out triumphantly.

"She is pretty," said Annie, looking down approvingly at the fair young face in the picture.

"I knew you'd think so," said Dud, looking gratified.

"I have Howard's picture in the album down stairs," said Annie. "I'll run down and get it!"

She tripped away softly, and came hurrying back breathless, with the plush-covered book in her hand.

"He looks as though he had some get-up to him," was Dud's masculine comment.

"Well, he has," said Annie, with a proud smile. "Of course," she went on, hesitatingly, "we must tell Uncle Dodson."

"Of course!" said Dud, rather faintly.

Their eyes met; they smiled guiltily.

"To tell the truth," said the young man, candidly, "I'd rather be shot!"

"My case exactly," Annie responded.

"You see," said Dud, looking anxious, "he means it all as a favor, a benefit to us; and to go and knock all his plans endways in that style—I'd just as lief be let out of it for my part!"

"Precisely as I feel," murmured Annie. "What shall we do?"

"Don't ask me," said Dud, entreatingly.

An uneasy pause, filled by a helpless contemplation of each other with wrinkled brows.

"Of course, we must tell him," Annie repeated, irresolutely.

"Of course," said Dud, again.

But that was as far as it went.

A rustling sound from Mr. Dodson's arm chair roused them to a sudden sense of his presence.

"Are you awake, Uncle Dodson?" said Annie, bending over his chair and feeling deeply hypocritical.

Mr. Dodson's reply was a strange one. It was a short, rather sarcastic laugh.

His companions exchanged startled glances. Could he have overheard them? No; it was impossible.

But he turned upon them abruptly

"So you've gone and encouraged that good-for-nothing young Canby, have you, miss?" he began, fixing Annie with a humorously stern gaze—"thrown yourself on that young upstart, eh?"

Poor Annie could only stare, bewildered.

"And you, sir," Mr. Dodson went on, turning to his nephew—"you've tied yourself to some little chit of a school-girl not out of bibs yet, I suppose? A nice pair you are!"

His listeners stood speechless.

"Did you—overhear us?" murmured Dud at last finding his voice with an effort.

Mr. Dodson laughed again, in evident enjoyment of their confusion.

"And you were afraid to tell me, eh?" said he. "You were going to deceive a poor, helpless, old man?"

"No, no!" said Dud, in weak protestation.

But Annie's face expressed only a growing wonder.

"How did you know, Uncle Dodson?" she said, beseechingly.

For answer, Mr. Dodson took up the hand-mirror—Annie's birthday present—from its satin-lined case, held before his eyes and motioned the two to look into it.

It reflected, with wonderful distinctness, the entire rear of the room, including the chairs in which they had sat.

"When I saw you, my dear," said Mr. Dodson, looking up with twinkling eyes into Annie's astonished face—"when I saw you exhibiting a diamond ring which appeared to be a recent acquisition, and bringing up the album to show—well, let us say old Mrs. Presley's picture—and when I saw you, sir, whipping out an absurb little tin type and actually talking about it as though it were something worth looking at—I drew my own conclusion."

"You aren't angry, dear Uncle Dodson?" said Annie, timidly, a queer mixture of relief and apprehension in her face.

"But I am," said Mr. Dodson, with a smile which refuted his words, "and I think I shall leave my money to—well, say to a Home for Destitute Dogs. Neither of you deserve it!"

"But neither of us want it," said Annie, tenderly. "You'll enjoy it yourself for a long time yet."

Dud echoed her words.

"I suppose I shall divide it equally between you," said Mr. Dodson, musingly, "but you don't deserve it!"

Mr. Dodson was among the liveliest of the gay gathering at Annie's wedding, a few months later.

SMILES.

The action of the heart—a breach of promise case.

A husband should never judge the warmth of his wife's love by the coldness of her feet.

It used to be, "See that my grave's kept green." The new and popular version is: "Oh, keep my ashes bottled, love."

Bertie (on the way to the station) "Mamma, I want to sneeze." Mamma—"Bertie, we're very late, now. You'll have to wait until you get on the cars."

Can anybody tell why a woman always laughs when she is being weighed, while a man, during the same performance, has a serious, if not an anxious countenance!

Dude—"Excuse me, Miss Sharp; I had quite forgotten you. I am so absent-minded, don't cher know." Miss Sharp—"Yes, I have noticed the absence of mind."

"Does your son affect any particular school of art?" asked the visitor. "No—yes—well; he's painting a Belladonna for the religious art gallery," replied the fond mother.

ONE CENT A MONTH.

At a club in San Francisco a few evenings ago the talk turned on the curiosities of mathematics, and one of the group said: "Year before last a bright looking young man entered our counting-room in response to an advertisement for an assistant shipping clerk. He told the usual tale of how he desired a position more than wages for the time being, and was willing to accept a nominal salary to start it off. The old man was feeling in particularly good humor that afternoon, and said pleasantly to the new comer:"

"Well, sir, what would you consider a nominal salary? What would you be willing to accept in beginning?"

The young man picked at the lining of his hat with his fingers and deferentially replied:

"I want to show you, sir, that I mean business, and I will work for one cent the remainder of this month providing you think it would not be too much to double my salary each month thereafter."

"That's a novel proposition, surely," said the old man, with a smile. "Do you know what you're talking about, my dear boy?"

"Well, sir, my principal aim is to learn the business," responded the young fellow, "and I would be almost willing to work for nothing, but I'd like to feel and be able to say that I was earning something you know."

"I'll take you," remarked the old man decisively. "One cent, two cents, four cents, eight, sixteen," he enumerated. "You won't get much for awhile," he added.

He took him up to the cashier. "This is John Smith," he said. "He will go to work as assistant shipping clerk to-morrow. His salary will be one cent this month. Double it every month from now on."

"In consideration of my working for this small salary I might ask you to assure me a position for a definite period?" inquired John Smith.

"We don't usually do that," replied the governor, "but we can't lose much on you, anyhow, I guess, and you look like an honest fellow. How long do you want employment?"

"Three years, sir, if agreeable to you."

Well, by Jove! the old man agreed, and young Mr. Smith, on pretence of wanting some evidence of the stability of his place, got the governor to write out and sign a paper that he had been guaranteed a position in the house for three years on the terms I have stated.

He worked along for six months without drawing a cent. He said he would draw all his earnings at Christmas. The cashier one day thought he'd figure up how much would be coming to the young man. He grew so interested in the project that he kept multiplying for the three years. The result almost staggered him. This is the column of figures he took to the old man:

1st month, .01; 2d, .02; 3d, .04; 4th, .08; 5th, .16; 6.h, .32; 7th, .64; 8th, $1.28; 9th, $2 56; 10th, $5 12; 11th, $10 24; 12th, $20.48; 13th, $40 96; 14th, $81.92; 15th, $163 84; 16th, $327 68; 17th, $655.36; 18th, $1,311.72; 19th, $2,622 44; 20th, $5,247 88; 21st, $10,494.16; 22d, $20,988 32; 23d, $41,976.64; 24th, $83,953.28; 25th, $165,-906.56; 26th, $331,813.12; 27th, $663,626,-24; 28th, $1,327,252 48; 29th, $2,654,504.-96; 30th, $4,309,009 92; 31st, $8,618,019.-84; 32d, $17,236,039 68; 33d, $34,472,078.-36; 34th, $68,944,156.72; 35th, $137,888,-312.44; 36th, $275,776,626 88; total salary for three years, $552,554,253 65.

The governor nearly fainted when he understood how, even if he were twice as rich as Vanderbilt, he would be ruined in paying John Smith's salary. He concluded to discharge the modest young man at once. Smith had figured up how much would be due him and reminded the old man of his written agreement. Rather than take chances in the courts and let everybody know how he had been duped, the governor paid Smith $5,000 and bade him good-by. I've heard he tried the same dodge in Chicago after leaving here.

AN EIGHT-HOUR-REFLECTION.

There is a class of people in this country who get up at five o'clock in the morning and who never get back to bed until ten or eleven o'clock at night; who work without ceasing the whole of that time, and receive no other recompense than food and the plainest clothing; they understand something of every branch of economy and labor, from finance to cooking; though harassed by a hundred responsibilities, though driven and worried, though reproached and looked down upon, they never revolt, and they cannot organize for their own protection. Not even sickness releases them from their posts. No sacrifice is deemed too great for them to make, and no incompetency in any branch of their work is excused. No essays or books or poems are written in tribute to their steadfastness. They die in the harness and are supplanted as quickly as may be. These are the housekeeping wives of the laboring men. It is they who get their husbands' breakfast at five o'clock in the morning, get the children off to school, do the washing, ironing, baking, sewing, scrubbing, sweeping, and marketing, caring all the while for the babies, and doing the mending after the husband lies snoring. They do go to bed, but hardly sleep, for nursing children often draw their life from them all the night long. What leisure or enjoyment for them? What chance for improvement or uplifting? And what do they think of the eight-hour movement? They think it means that the calico they now buy for five cents will cost eight cents by and by; that the coal will soon be seven and eight dollars a ton, and that the pittance out of which they now buy these will be less before long. Is it a pleasure to them that their husbands will have two hours' more leisure? If the men stay at home during that time the chances are the wives will be reproached for what is deemed neglect, and that some of the children will be whipped. Will the husbands fetch coal, or black the stoves, or take the washing from the line, or go to the market? Not for one day out of the 365. They will irritate them with their criticisms, will make the children unhappy, and then leave for some place more suited to their selfishness. It sounds hard, but it is true, and every woman knows that it is true. She knows that there will be two hours less in which to earn money and two hours more in which to spend it. She knows that her burden will be no lighter, and in patient cynicism she awaits the result. Are these women striking for eight hours? Have they a union to which they can appeal against the cruelty of their taskmasters? Are eloquent voices raised in their behalf? Are there any laws enacted for their benefit? Are there any prominent journals advocating their cause? What would their husbands say if these women turned out en masse and voted not to work but a certain number of hours per day, and demanded that a more righteous division of the income be made hereafter? They would doubtless say it was midsummer madness. Is the picture overdrawn? Do or do not these women receive their share? Is working fifteen hours a day cooking over hot stoves, scrubbing over washtubs, exposing the body to every change of our fickle climate, bearing on an average one child a year, and making both ends meet after the rent is paid and the husband's beer money is spent, in return for food, shelter, and the plainest clothing—is this a fair half of the working partnership? Is this an equal division of labor with an equal distribution of the profits? What would some of the men who are parading the streets voluntarily out of work and in their best clothes do if they found themselves bound to employers by a tie that could not be dissolved while their work was made a thousand times more laborious, and the hours nearly doubled?—Chicago Daily News.

HOME RULE.

To an American citizen it certainly appears strange that the simple justice of granting to Ireland home rule, as proposed by Mr. Gladstone, should meet with such determined opposition on the part of so many of the people of England.

Why not give to Ireland equal privileges with Canada and other dependencies of Great Britain?

Must Irishmen forever be harnessed as slaves to the car of English domination, made perpetual hewers of wood and drawers of water to do the bidding of alien aristocrats?

There is no justifiable reason why Ireland should longer be debarred from enjoying the natural right of regulating home affairs, in her own way, and through her own chosen local representatives.

It is Ireland's right, and if not soon granted, agitation will flame fiercer than ever. The statesman mind of Gladstone wisely appreciates the future.

England once undertook the foolish task of forcing the American colonies into subjection to royal arrogance and tyranny.

Patrick Henry cried aloud "give us liberty or give us death."

A tea party followed in Boston harbor.

Then Concord and Lexington fired shots which reverberated around the world.

Bunker Hill blazed defiance.

And finally, at Yorktown the British Lion lost both mane and tail and went howling home to his master.

Americans proved themselves worthy and capable of self government.

Give Irishmen a chance and they will follow the illustrious example here set.

Possibly, that is what England fears.

THE SWORD OF JUSTICE.

It is indeed a promising sign for the future of our country that Honesty has at last been signally vindicated, its opposite punished, and that the sword of Justice is sharpened for cutting effect.

Every man who prizes the stability of free institutions, and is himself loyal to morality, integrity and honor, should feel exceedingly glad.

The conviction and safe lodgement for a lengthened term within the walls of Sing Sing prison of the rascally bribe taking New York Alderman, is an event worthy of universal congratulation.

It is a grand result.

It means much.

It betokens that the time has come when official, legislative and corporation dishonesty, so many years insolently rampant, shall cease, and its authors, aiders and abettors be held as fit subjects to receive a felon's doom.

We hope the colleagues of Jaehne, who are no doubt equally guilty of the crime of bribery, will be sent to keep him company, and not stopping there, it is to be desired that the greater criminals, the bribe givers, will, every man of them, be encased in a convict's garb.

They are the boss corruptionists.

The high-toned thieves.

The planners of crookedness.

We have sympathy for the poor fellow who steals to allay the pangs of hunger, but not a particle for those contemptible scoundrels who seek official or legislative positions for the purpose of selling their votes and influence for venal considerations, nor for those even, blacker hearted corruptionists who, as principals or lobby agents, create and offer temptation for the attainment of mercenary ends.

The State Prison is a proper abode for the entire gang. We make no exception, political or otherwise.

The man who corruptly obtains a nomination and election to public office is an enemy of the honest people and a filcher of their property.

So is the legislator who sells his vote.

So is the corruption monger who purchases legislative action.

They are all birds of a feather and ought to be plucked bare by popular indignation, and then securely caged by the stern hand of offended justice.

The National Convention of the Chiefs of the Bureaus of Labor Statistics of the United States will be held in Trenton, June 21 and 3d.

* * *

Vice President Hoxie, "completely prostrated by the strike," has gone to Atlantic City for his health. Martin Irons has gone to Washington. And the poor strikers, where have they gone?

* * *

The St. Louis Globe-Democrat asserts that during the first three months of this year $30,000,000, mostly contributed from the North and from England, have been invested in the establishment of new manufacturing undertakings, or the extension of old ones, in the South. If, as is stated, much of this is to be attributed to the unsettled condition of labor matters in the Northern States, and the absence of any agitation among the freed negroes and other laborers of the South, then the circumstance opens up a wide field for thought. Despite its natural advantages, the South has so far been kept back in the race of progress, through the want of confidence among outside financiers, and the unsettled condition of the newly freed and enfranchised negroes. But the twenty years which have elapsed since the war have in a great measure cured both of these evils. The freedmen, especially the younger blood, are working well, and the attention of capitalists is being fully directed to the advantages which the South possesses in climate, cheapness of living, and the presence of immense coal fields, iron deposits and unlimited water power. When these facts shall be fully understood and appreciated, they will be utilized, and when that is done a severe blow will be given to the manufacturing industries of the North. It is unfortunate that the workingmen, who would be most injured by the change, should have been the parties to give to the movement an impetus and force which it would not have possessed but for the extravagance of their demands and the course that has followed the refusal of the employers to comply with them. The workingmen of the North have the duty imposed upon them, of aiding their employers to meet the great competition which the awakened South is presenting to them, and should meet that duty calmly and with a full realization of all that that competition implies.

A FIT REPRESENTATIVE.

Hon. R. S. Green, Representative in Congress from the Third District of this State, is an able and fit member of that body. We have before alluded to his commendable efforts in behalf of his constituents, and now again refer to his able remarks in favor of the passage of the bill to increase the pension of the widow of a brave defender of the Union, Commander T. A. M. Craven. The bill had been adversely reported by a Committee. Mr. Green said:

MR. SPEAKER:—The Committee on Invalid Pensions, while recognizing the fact that the naval record of Commander Craven developed great merit, reported this bill adversely on the ground that in their opinion the benefit asked, which is to increase the pension to $50 a month, should be confined within the grade of the general officers of the Army and Navy. I think I have stated the report fairly and fully when I say that they put it solely on the ground that the benefit should be confined within the grade of the general officers of the Army and Navy. With great respect for the opinions of that committee, and in no spirit of criticism, I submit that the rule thus laid down by the committee is not in harmony with the spirit or policy of the pension laws and not in accord with the former action of Congress. The pension law makes no distinguishing recognition of general officers by themselves. It neither graduates the amount of pension according to the distinctive rank, nor pensions the general officers at a higher rate than some others in lower grades. On the contrary, it groups together certain officers of different rank, classing the general officers with others of lower grade. The provisions of the law are that for total disability of the following officers and for their widows after their death there shall be a pension—to a lieutenant-colonel and all officers of higher rank in the military service and in the Marine Corps of $30 a month; and for a captain and all officers of a higher rank and all officers of a lower rank down to and including the master commanding in the Navy of $30 a month. That is the first group. There is another group composed of officers of the inferior grades. So that the pension law makes no recognition of the distinctive rank of the general officers discriminating against other officers in the same group. The lieutenant-colonel and the general, and all officers of intermediate rank, and the master commanding, and the admiral and all officers of intermediate and corresponding rank, are placed upon the same place, each receiving the same amount, each entitled to the same consideration, each subject to the same provisions; and their widows to be the recipients of the same bounty, and to be governed by the same rules. Therefore I say, Mr. Speaker, according to the spirit and policy of the pension law, there is no room for the rule which grants benefits to the general officer which does not grant them to other officers within that same group. There is no reason why an exception should be made in favor of a general officer under certain circumstances, which should not under the same circumstances be made to an officer in the same group; no reason why an increase of pension as an exceptional case should be granted to the widow of a commodore and with the same exceptional circumstances existing be denied to the widow of a commander. Neither has Congress regarded the $30 as fixed by an inflexible and iron rule. It has been the custom, and it is a praiseworthy one, to recognize exceptional cases which present instances of heroism and bravery, challenging admiration and commanding distinctive recognition. In the Forty-eighth Congress I find an increase of pension to $50 a month to the widows of the following officers: Commander S. Dana Green, Capt. Kidder R. Breese, United States Navy; Maj. Thomas D. Thornburgh, Capt. Thomas L. Bent, U. S. Army; Surgeon-General Palmer, Commander Jeffries, General Arnold, Commissary-General Eaton, General Rodman, General Ripley, Admiral Scott, Commander Bissell, Paymaster-General Alvord, Admiral Creighton. In the Forty-seventh Congress a like increase to the widows of Col. William Dulany, Col. James D. Mulligan, Maj. Levi Twiggs, Admiral Goldsborough, Surgeon-General Finley, Admiral Hoff, Admiral Reynolds, Surgeon-General Wood, General Mitchell, Admiral Lardner, General Casey, General Custer, Admiral Spotts, Admiral John Rogers, General French, General Ramsey. It will be noted that the increase is not confined to the widows of general officers, but includes those of Commander S. Dana Green, on whom the command of the Monitor devolved when Worden was disabled; Capt. Kid*der R. Breese, distinguished at Fort Fisher*; Major Thornburgh, murdered by the Indians; Capt. Thomas L. Bent; Col. William Dulaney; Col. James A. Mulligan, and Maj. Levi Twiggs. Therefore, I say, I find no warrant either in the spirit of the pension law or in the former action of Congress that justifies the laying down or the enforcement of a rule that the increase of a pension is to be confined within the grade of the general officers of the Army and Navy. The rule has been to grant it in exceptional cases, and I think it can be demonstrated that this is a case so exceptional in its character that if there had been a contrary precedent Congress should depart from the rule.

Mrs. Marie L. Craven is the widow of the late Tunis A. M. Craven, at the time of his death, August 5, 1864, a commander in the Navy. He entered the Navy in the year 1829, and was continually on duty up to the time of his death, having performed twenty four years and six months' service at sea. He was third in the rank of commander, and had he lived he would undoubtedly have been promoted to the highest grade. He lost his life while in command of the monitor Tecumseh, leading the attack on the fortifications in Mobile Bay. That position had, it was supposed, been rendered impregnable by fortifications and its approaches impassable by obstructions and torpedoes, and its defense was supplemented by the iron-clad ram Tennessee and numerous gunboats for aggressive attack. So secure was it supposed to be that Farragut says it was claimed they would all be blown up if they attempted to enter. The position assigned to Craven was the post of honor and of danger. His it was to lead the fleet into the fire of these defenses and over these submerged instruments of destruction. His disaster would mark the path to be avoided. So important did Farragut consider the services of Craven and his ship the Tecumseh that he awaited her arrival from New York before he attempted to enter Mobile Bay. He says in his report:

> The Tecumseh, Commander Craven, arrived on the evening of August 4; and everything being propitious I proceeded to the attack on the following morning, the Tecumseh having been given the leading position.
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> The attacking fleet steamed steadily up the main ship-channel, the Tecumseh firing the first shot at forty-seven minutes past six o'clock a. m.

In his report of the action Lieut. Commander Jouett says:

> At fifty minutes after six the Tecumseh hoisted her colors and fired a gun. Fort Morgan replied. In a short time the action became general between the fort, the ironclads, the Brooklyn, the Hartford, and Richmond. At this time the rebel fleet took their station across the channel, delivering a raking fire upon our line. Thirty-five minutes past seven, amidst the hottest of the fire, the Tecumseh was blown up.

Captain Drayton says:

> About thirty five minutes past seven I heard the cry that a monitor was sinking, and looking on the starboard bow saw the turret of the Tecumseh just disappearing under the water, where an instant before I had seen the noble vessel pushing on gallantly in a straight line to attack the enemy's ram Tennessee, which had apparently moved out to give him an opportunity.

Craven, in steering to attack the Tennessee, crossed the torpedo line, and striking one, it exploded under the turret of the Tecumseh, which went down stem first almost in an instant, carrying him down with her. But his death was characterized by an incident which should never be forgotten as long as the English language contains the word chivalry and heroism. It is related by the pilot, Mr. Collins, whose life was saved. At the moment of the explosion Craven and the pilot were in the iron tower or pilot-house, directly over the turret. There was no way of escape from their prison except through a narrow scuttle or opening just sufficient for one to pass through. Seeing the inevitable fate of the vessel they both instinctively made for this narrow opening. As it is told, when they reached the place together Craven drew back, in a characteristic way saying, "After you, pilot." Collins, who fortunately escaped to tell the act of heroism, says: "There was nothing after me; as I got out the vessel seemed to drop from under me." It is related of Sir Philip Sidney, three hundred years ago, that when being carried wounded and bleeding from the battlefield of Zutphen he complained grievously of thirst. A bottle of water was procured for him. As he put it to his mouth his eye caught the wistful gaze of a mortally wounded soldier eagerly watching his every movement. Taking it untasted from his lips he sent it to the dying man with the words, "Thy necessity is yet greater than mine." He was buried in old St. Paul's among the noble and the great of England. Although centuries have rolled away, his country forgets him not, and history, still repeating "Thy necessity is yet still greater than mine" with the incident, ever keeps the name of Sidney the synonym of true nobility of character and of heroic self-denial. Noble and chivalric as it was, his was but a temporary relinquishment of relief from suffering. Craven's "After you, pilot," cost him his life, the American Navy one of its bravest and most accomplished officers, mankind a hero. No grand old cathedral treasures his remains; no sculptured marble records his heroism; he rests in his iron turreted tomb, off Fort Morgan, with naught but the buoy which swings to and fro with the ebb and flood of the tide in Mobile Bay to mark the scene of his bravery and his death. The Secretary of the Navy, in writing to Admiral Farragut after that terrible conflict, said:

> Great results in war are seldom attained without great risks, and it was not expected that the harbor of Mobile would be secured without disaster. The loss of the gallant Craven and his brave companions, with the "Tecumseh," by a concealed torpedo, was a casualty which no human foresight could guard. While the nation awards cheerful honors to the living, she will ever hold in great remembrance the memory of the gallant dead who periled their lives for their country and died in her cause.

The country has honored the living; let not Congress forget the Sidney of the American Navy!

The widow of this gallant man in her old age and her necessity appeals for this increase. I hope it will be accorded to her.

The bill was passed by a vote of 104 to 98.

By a vote of 178 to 80 the House of Representatives on Thursday refused to concur in the Senate amendment to the Post Office Appropriation bill, providing for the payment of an $800,000 subsidy for the foreign mail service. The Democratic members from New Jersey, Messrs. Green, McAdoo and Pidcock were found side by side with Holman, Morrison and Randall. Mr. Lehlbach (Rep.) voted with the majority; Hires not voting, and Buchanan and Phelps were absent. The Newark Journal considers this the most important vote, as defining the policy of Democrats in Congress, that has yet been taken.

The question as to the advisability of sending Herr Most and his Anarchist associates back to the countries whence they came, is being agitated among New York's judges and lawyers. The ground taken is that they are dangerous to the public safety, and could be returned as common nuisances. Whether the Board of Emigration, which has the power to send back paupers to Europe, could exercise such authority in the case of the Anarchists, is a question for consideration. An act of the Legislature or of Congress would undoubtedly cover the matter, and should be passed without much delay.—Camden Democrat.

Some of the expenses incurred in the Laverty trial are interesting, to say the least. The State Treasurer's figures show that the manager, Assemblyman Parker, of Essex, pocketed an extra $800 for bossing the job, the State's lawyer got the neat little pile of $2,739.50, and those festive shorthand writers, Knight and Gischtel, pooled their issues and seized $2,055.70, while a Trenton policeman walked away with $16 per diem for swinging his club around in athletic style during the interesting proceedings. The sergeants-at-arms of the Senate and Assembly were also liberally remembered by the Republican court. Laverty's defense, it is said, cost him $15,000, taking all his savings and leaving him in penury.

Speaking of the rumored candidacy of Attorney-General Stockton for Governor, a Trenton correspondent of the Newark News says:

"The most significant thing about the new boom is that started just about the time that ex-Governor Joel Parker was seen in Trenton one night last week in company with Gov. Abbett and a knot of Mercer county politicians, and it is locally rumored that he is responsible for the whole business. The term of the attorney general expires in 1889. He will then have served ten years in the office and cannot reasonably expect a reappointment, especially by a new governor. He has no political advantage to lose by accepting the nomination and everything to gain. His name has been prominently before every nominating convention for fifteen years, but he always refused to make a fight, urging that he was too poor. Now that he has exhausted his chances for holding lucrative non-elective positions, he must either retire or make a fight for the governorship. It is said that he prefers to do the latter, and that he has given his consent quietly to his friends to use his name. At any rate, those who are intimate with his prophecy that he will be the party nominee, and are much elated. The stamp of probability is upon the allegation that he was urged into the field because the candidates who were most prominent live in the northern part of the State. Judge Green hails from Union county and ex-Congressman Hardenbergh from Hudson. Properly, the nominee this year should come from South Jersey, and sectionalism, if nothing more, will force a fight against the northern county candidates in the Convention."

PASSAGE OF THE BRIDGE BILL.

The U. S. Senate by a decisive vote passed the Kill von Kull Bridge bill. On the amendment of Mr. McPherson providing for a tunnel instead of a bridge, the vote was 5 to 40, those in the affirmative being Bowen, Hampton, McPherson, Plumb and Sewell. This majority was so heavy that there was no call for the yeas and nays on the bill. Senator Miller did some very strong work in behalf of the bill, and his individual effort probably prevented the passage of the second McPherson amendment, which would have placed the question of a high or low bridge in the hands of a Board of Engineers. Mr. Dolph said it was a case of New Jersey against the entire Union, or rather New Jersey against the world, for a tax or toll on wheat affected the commerce of the world. It was especially injurious to the commerce of the great West. Mr. Sewell said that the whole thing was a speculative move on the part of a gentleman living on Staten Island and interested in real estate. Mr. Edmunds opposed the bill. He said bridges always more or less interrupted free highways in favor of a monopolized one.

WIFE OF MINISTER PENDLETON KILLED.

A horse drawing a victoria through Central Park, Thursday May 20th, became unmanageable and ran away. In the vehicle were Mrs. Pendleton, the wife of Mr. George H. Pendleton, U. S. Minister to Germany, and her daughter, Jennie Francis Pendleton. When the ladies saw the horse run and the driver lose his control of the animal they jumped out of either side of the carriage. Miss Pendleton landed on a grass plot and tumbled over on the ground. Mrs. Pendleton was less fortunate, for she struck on the hard pavement and fell heavily against the pebbled gutter. When help reached the old lady she was dead. Miss Pendleton was picked up unconscious and taken to the Presbyterian Hospital, and though seriously injured has since recovered.

Mrs. Pendleton was a daughter of the Francis Scott Key who wrote the famous ode "The Star-Spangled Banner." She was a woman of great beauty and refinement and was a social leader in Cincinnati and Washington for years. Her grace in entertaining added much to the popularity of Mr. Pendleton. The sympathy of the whole country will go out to him in his great and sudden bereavement.

AN OPINION.

The New York Star, in an article on the New Jersey Gubernatorial question, thus flatteringly alludes to Hon. Robert S. Green, who is being urged to accept the nomination for Governor by the people of this State:

"Among the prominent candidates of the Democratic party the chances of Robert S. Green, of Union, are good. Mr. Green was born at Princeton, and is a counselor at law. He was graduated at the College of New Jersey in 1850, and admitted to the bar in 1853. From 1857 to 1868 he was the City Attorney of Elizabeth, and from 1868 to 1873 he was a member of the City Council. He was Surrogate of Union county from 1862 to 1867, and presiding Judge of the Union County Pleas from 1868 to 1873. In 1873 he was a member of the commission appointed to suggest amendments to the State Constitution. He became a member of the firm of Brown, Hall & Vanderpoel, of New York, in 1874, and afterward of the firm of Vanderpoel, Green & Cuming, with which he is at present associated. In 1884 he was nominated for Congress, and after a bitter fight he was elected over Kean, his Republican antagonist, by a handsome majority. Green is one of the most popular men in the State, and pitted against Phelps, there is not much doubt but what he would win, although Phelps would make a magnificent fight for it."

Senator Sewell has submitted amendments to the River and Harbor Appropriation bill to increase the appropriation for improving the harbor at Raritan Bay, N. J., from $30,000 to $60,000, and for Raritan River, N. J., from $35,000 to $60,000.

When the Legislature renews its session on Tuesday next, its first effort will be to immediately adjourn in order to avoid any declaration on the Prohibition issue. Much as has been said on the subject, and anxious as the Republicans are supposed to be to commit themselves on the Prohibition issue as a party in the State at large, there are very few of the members looking for re-election who will care to have their safety imperiled by any complications on the liquor question in their several districts.—True American.

* * *

The Republicans of New Jersey are catching on to the Prohibition movement, with the idea that it will prove as fashionable as the old-time, free-soil cry. There, however, stands in the way of this belief, the history of the Republican States of the West, which have in more than one instance beaten the combination, although backed by seeming large party majorities. Like most other people, the New Jersey Republicans have to acquire their own experience, and we are just as well pleased as we can be that they have taken this method of doing so.

Ho! for Improvements.

MESSRS. EDITORS:—It is understood that the Mayor of Plainfield proposes to enforce section eight of the ordinance "relating to streets and sidewalks and encroachments thereon," to the end that the coming electric lights may impart to our city its long felt want—good illumination, free from the obstruction of untrimmed trees. We hope the report is true, for not only is the trimming of the trees absolutely necessary for the best dispensing of the electric lights, but would be also a good measure for the public health, to say nothing of the convenience to people who carry umbrellas, and ride in carriages: or who wear high hats. After the trees are trimmed and the electric lights are engaged in dispelling darkness and acting as a police force, we hope to see the next great needed boon to the people of Plainfield granted without a murmur, viz: a horse railroad. The benefits to be derived by the entire community through such an accommodation would be enormous, and the projectors would be public benefactors. Such an enterprise would certainly receive the support and encouragement of a large majority of our citizens, and Plainfield would be greatly benefited thereby. M.

From Pole to Pole
AYER'S SARSAPARILLA has demonstrated its power of cure for all diseases of the blood.
The Harpooner's Story.
New Bedford, June 1, 1883.
DR. J. C. AYER & CO.—Twenty years ago I was a harpooner in the North Pacific, when five others of the crew and myself were laid up with scurvy. Our bodies were bloated, gums swollen and bleeding, teeth loose, purple blotches all over us, and our breath seemed rotten. Take it by and large we were pretty badly off. All our lime-juice was accidentally destroyed, but the captain had a couple dozen bottles of AYER'S SARSAPARILLA and gave us that. We recovered on it quicker than I have ever seen men brought about by any other treatment for Scurvy, and I've seen a good deal of it. Seeing no mention in your Almanac of your Sarsaparilla being good for scurvy, I thought you ought to know of this, and so send you the facts.
Respectfully yours, RALPH V. WINGATE.
The Trooper's Experience.
Masera, Basutoland (S. Africa,) March 7, 1883.
DR. J. C. AYER & CO.—Gentlemen: I have much pleasure to testify to the great value of your Sarsaparilla. We have been stationed here for over two years, during which time we had to live in tents. Being under canvas for such a time brought on what is called in this country "veldt-sores." I had these sores for some time. I was advised to take your Sarsaparilla, two bottles of which made my sores disappear rapidly, and I am now quite well.
Yours truly, T. E. BOWEN,
Trooper, Cape Mounted Riflemen.

THE lovers of trotting will have an opportunity to see two good races on Decoration Day—Monday, the 31st—by visiting Waverley. A race has been made between Gen. Storm, record 2.27¼ and Jack Sailor, record 2.25½. Also a race between Irish Lad and Young Fullerton, two noted horses.

Now muzzle your dogs. Commencing next Tuesday for the following three months the police are empowered under a recent ordinance, whenever they see a dog without a muzzle to shoot him or her, as the case may be, on the spot. They get therefore two shillings per dog and fifty cents extra for burying the remains.

THE ladies of the Grace church Guild will present the church with one thousand dollars of the profits of the late fair at The Crescent, towards the cost of the recent extension to the church and addition to its seating capacity. The entire success of this fair in every particular has seldom been equalled, and is due to the indefatigable efforts and gratuitous labors of Mrs. Dumont, Mrs. Ames, Mrs. Cox, Mrs. Stover and others.

BISHOP SCARBOROUGH stated in his remarks last Sunday evening, in the Church of the Holy Cross, North Plainfield, that at the last Episcopal Convention held at Trenton, it was decided to hold the next one at Grace church, Plainfield, and the next following one at the Church of the Holy Cross. He considered Plainfield and North Plainfield among the handsomest places in his Diocese, and was glad that the Convention was to be held here.

THE Job Male Art Gallery is now open free to everybody daily from 10 to 12 a. m. and 2 to 4 p. m. This has been a great source of pleasure to the public, but it at the same time offers a playground for the children unless the services of somebody are occupied all the time in keeping good order. It is now proposed to charge the small admission fee of ten cents during all days of the week except Saturdays, when the Gallery is to be free all day and lighted in the evening. The admission price will insure times when lovers of art can visit the Gallery and enjoy its works in comfort and quiet, as well as provide a fund for the expense of lighting it for those of the public who can only attend during the evenings of Saturdays.

MR. CALVIN HOAGLAND, a machinist who resides in Bound Brook and is employed in Spicer & Hubbard's mills, met with a serious loss last Friday morning. As his wife was to be absent from home all day, he took the precaution of not leaving a sum of money amounting to about $110 in the house, but carried it away with him for safety. It represented the saving of almost a year past—laid away for a rainy day. The pocket-book containing the money slipped out of Mr. Hoagland's hip-pocket as he sat in the train that arrives at Plainfield for New York at 6.20 a. m. Upon arriving at the mills he discovered his loss but was unable to feel certain where it had occurred. Mr. G. Q. Palmer of Sixth street entered the train at this station and took the seat just vacated by Mr. Hoagland. He saw the pocket-book on the cushion and took it in charge, returning it to the owner as soon as he discovered to whom the property belonged.

THE citizens of Bound Brook were exercised over a supposed mad dog on Monday last. The animal, a large one, was chased over the country by a posse of men and boys, armed with guns, clubs and stones, and repeatedly shot at. One valiant citizen shot at what he supposed was the dog, after obtaining a rest over a fence rail. After the shot he declared the dog dead. The object he aimed at proved to be a stump. As he is not considered a "crack" shot, his mistake was not thought much of by the crowd, as they allowed if it had been the dog he shot at, the animal would not have been seriously injured. The next morning, a valuable horse, owned by Mr. Giles, of the village, which was driven in pursuit of the supposed rabid animal, was found suffering with a fit of hydrophobia—or something else. No person would get within forty yards of him, until he became so hungry that his owner could approach him. He has since recovered. Mr. Elisha Shepherd killed the supposed mad dog.

THERE was quite a hail storm for a few minutes about noon on Wednesday.

EDSALL's advertisement this week is of importance to ladies looking for parasols or kid gloves. Read it.

THEY were cold days, Tuesday and Wednesday, and the weather reports were decidedly left out in it. We were promised "stationary temperature," and "slightly warmer."

THE second annual concert by the pupils of Mr. and Mrs. Carl Feininger, will be given at Reform Hall, Monday evening, June 7th. Admission as before, will be by cards of invitation.

DURING Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, June 8th and 9th, the Dunham Good Will Choristers will have a strawberry and iced cream festival at the Warren Union Mission, North Plainfield.

MESSRS. VOGEL BROS., the New York clothiers of 605 Broadway and 651 Eight avenue, will keep open stores next Monday, Decoration Day, for the accommodation of visitors and shoppers from out of town.

THE cool wave—and wet time—came according to announcement, if not in full accord with the wishes of all. Well, it would be a curious state of affairs if everybody could be suited at once, even with the weather.

THE Ladies' Aid Society of the M. E. church is the first to announce the strawberry and iced cream festival that blooms in the Summer. It will be held in the parlors of the church during the afternoons and evenings of next Thursday and Friday.

IF intended arrangements are completed, Messrs. Laing & Nelson will take an excursion from this city to Coney Island and the fire-works, during the coming season. Special trains and a special boat will transfer the crowd in comfort and without delay.

BISHOP SCARBOROUGH administered the rite of confirmation to fourteen persons at Grace church in this city on Sunday morning, two persons in the afternoon at the Church of the Heavenly Rest at Evona, and in the evening to sixteen persons at the Church of the Holy Cross, North Plainfield.

NEXT Monday the 31st inst., will occur the grand opening of the Mount Bethel Hotel. There will be an open air concert on the lawn from four to seven p. m., and a ball and amusing entertainment in the evening. The programme for the latter will include vocal music, clog dancing, club swinging, banjo playing and acrobatics.

IN the parlors of the Methodist church, next Thursday and Friday afternoons and evenings, there will be held under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Society, a strawberry and iced cream festival. The admission is to be thirty-five cents, and the particularly fine music that is always a feature of the M. E. entertainments, will be there again.

THE third of Prof. Hasbrouck's course of illustrated lectures on travels in the Orient, will be given at Music Hall this evening. These lectures are most beautifully pictured, and the scenes and historical associations are so truthfully portrayed and eloquently described as to command the sincere and emphatic endorsement of all.

THE Plainfield Bicycle Club's House is slowly—but therefore, we hope, surely—approaching completion. The property purchased by the Club, however, has suddenly and unexpectedly, developed traces of valuable natural deposit beneath the surface that may result in dividends that will enrich the stockholders beyond their wildest dreams. In digging for water they have struck gas.

A MEMORIAL service in honor of those who died that our Union might live, will be held by the ladies of Garfield League, auxiliary to the G. A. R., on the evening of May 31, at a quarter before eight p. m., in Reform Hall. The exercises will consist of a patriotic service to be rendered by the Girls' Auxiliary of the League, songs, recitations, and an address by Rev. Dr. J. H. Vincent.

A MYSTERIOUS fire was discovered in the upper part of the barn on the premises of the property formerly owned by Wm. B. Ostrom, Esq., last Saturday afternoon. As the place is some distance beyond the fire limits, on Park avenue opposite the fair grounds, no alarm was sounded. The flames were discovered in the hay mow above by Thomas Hoag, who burnt himself severely in extinguishing them.

IT is announced that the last "Grand Ball" of the Season at the Casino rink will take place this evening, and extended preparations have been completed to make it a success. Messrs. George H. Cook and G. Whitlock are the managers that will insure the enjoyment of all. They have engaged first-class music, and Ramonetti will furnish the refreshments. Tickets at fifty cents will admit a gentleman and lady.

THERE are so many and so widely different estimates of the number of commuters from this city to New York, that we have secured an authoritive record for the satisfaction of the curious. The figures we give are the average each month for the year ending April last, but of course the number is less in Winter and greater in Summer. The average number sold in New York each month is 439, and at this station 291, making a total of 730.

THE Crescent avenue church's new organ is to be one of the grandest in its proportions and the handsomest in all its details, in the State. It will occupy the entire width of the alcove in which the old organ stands, and the highest pipe will almost reach the top of the arch. It can't be helped, but the most elegant stained-glass window in the city will thus be hid. The lower casing will be in natural wood polished, while the pipes are to be decorated after suggestions and designs of a New York artist.

WE predict a full house at Music Hall, this (Thursday) evening, when the amateurs of the city and vicinity will present a programme of great variety and interest. All the best talent amongst us is included in the cast of the different features of the evening, and those attending will be surprised at the quality of dramatic and minstrel ability in our midst,—as it were. Nothing like it has ever before been offered the Plainfield public, and may never again. And all for the benefit of the Church of the Heavenly Rest at our pretty little suburb, Evona.

THE reflection of the declining sun beneath a bank of storm clouds that hung along the brow of the "mountains" of North Plainfield, Saturday evening, attracted the attention of somebody willing to cause the ringing of the fire alarm. The dogs barked, the firemen raced around, the boys shouted and all had a fine time over the reflection. Since then all sorts of rumors as to where the fire was, have been concocted and circulated. Even a few strikers at Stirling have been accused of burning the silk works in that place, but so far no record of the cause has been made until now.

THERE is a great deal of criticism that is almost foolish, in relation to the extensive coal and lumber sheds that are building for Messrs. A. D. Cook & Bro. When completed they will be the most convenient and carefully constructed for their purposes in the country, and another mark of the enterprise of Plainfield's merchants. As to any danger as "fire-traps," such supposition is ridiculous. Certainly lumber inside of an iron building must be safer than outside in an open yard beside railroad tracks and spark-emitting smoke-stacks, and if the building had been erected years ago, the late disastrous fire in the yards would never have occurred. As to the construction being in violation of either the letter or spirit of the ordinance relating thereto—that is equally absurd.

THERE will be pigeon and bat shooting on the grounds of the Middlesex Gun Club on Decoration Day. Admission free.

THE Sixteenth Annual Commencement of the Plainfield High School will be held in Music Hall, Thursday evening, June 24th.

CONTRIBUTIONS of flowers to be spread upon the graves of the dead soldiers, may be left at the office of Messrs. Ford & Stiles.

THE memorial detail of the G. A. R., would respectfully ask residents having staffs and colors to half-mast them on Memorial Day, Monday, May 31, 1886.

THERE will be a Kirmess for the benefit of the Episcopal church at Scotch Plains, on Wednesday, June 16th, from 4 to 10 p. m., at the Clapp house, corner of Midway and Park avenues, Scotch Plains.

WE have received from William S. Taylor, secretary of the New Jersey Board of Agriculture, the thirteenth annual report of the Board. It contains much valuable information concerning the whole State.

THE carriage of Mrs. Wm. Sandford was run into by one of Tier's ice wagons on Tuesday last, and caused such damage as to necessitate Mrs. S. and daughter to obtain another conveyance to reach their home in North Plainfield.

AT the next meeting of the Common Council another proposal will be presented that body for the construction of Water Works in our city, also asking the privilege to construct a Horse Railroad through Plainfield, to extend to Scotch Plains and Dunellen.

THE ladies of the M. E. church are never outdone in any way by any other local entertainers, so they propose to make the festival at the church during the afternoons and evenings of next Thursday and Friday, the same great success as those of the past.

A NEW toilet luxury is "Stomatine," sold by all of our druggists, for the mouth, throat and gums. It is an aromatic and cooling wash, that corrects and removes all diseases of the mouth and throat. We use it daily as a dentifrice, and can thus from experience endorse its virtues.

CARDS of admission to Music Hall on Memorial Day may be obtained upon application to M. C. Dobbins, Post Adjt., Park avenue and Second street; E. P. Thorn, 17 Park avenue, Chairman of Detail; G. W. Moore, Sec'y of Detail, and at the drug stores of the city and North Plainfield.

THE latest Government Agricultural report shows that winter grain is in exceedingly fine condition, as is also grass. These are our heaviest crops, and with an excellent promise of fruit we may hope to have a prosperous year if the strikers do not spoil it all, as they now bid fair to do.

A CALL is made for those in sympathy with such a movement to meet at Association Hall, this (Thursday) evening for the purpose of forming a "Blaine & Logan Club," subject to the decision of the National Republican Convention in 1886." Such combination of candidates is also subject to the decision of Black Jack Logan, and the uselessness of such clubs was recently shown to be subject to the decision of the people.

FEW have ever seen the special routes over which Dr. Hasbrouck conducts his audiences. Never have they been so pictured before. Some of the country he explored was never traveled before him. His lectures are a grand revelation to the artist, scientist and the lover of the beautiful. The close attention with which the pictures are followed by the audience at once attest the interest of the subject and the rare beauty of the pictorial presentation.

AT the annual meeting of the stockholders of the United Railroad and Canal companies of New Jersey, held at the company's offices in Trenton Tuesday last, the following directors were elected: John Jacob Astor, John C. Barron, Jos. D. Bedle, Wm. Bucknell, Alfred L. Dennis, Chas. E. Green, F. Wolcott Jackson, Robt. Lennox Kennedy, Thos. McKean, Robt. F. Stockton, Samuel Webb and Thos. Oakes. There were 113,555 shares voted on out of a total of 212,464. This is a larger number of shares than were ever voted on before.

THE New Jersey Pharmaceutical Association held a two-day's meeting in the Metropolitan rink, at Newark, last week. They adopted a resolution expressing their belief of the innocence of druggist Am Ende, of Hoboken, in poisoning the two young girls. The collection of druggists' materials which was part of the exhibition was an object of great interest to the many people who thronged the rink. Officers were elected for the ensuing year as follows: President—F. B. Kilmer, of New Brunswick; Vice President—H. O. Ryerson of Newton; Treasurer—William Rust of New Brunswick; Recording Secretary—R. H. Van Sant of Trenton; Corresponding Secretary—R. J. Shaw of Plainfield.

Post Office Notes.

On Monday, May 31st—Decoration day—the post-office will be closed from 10 a. m. to 5 p. m.

Handsome brass railings at the entrance to Schorb's restaurant, under the post-office, materially improves the appearance of the building.

The ceiling of the post-office has been neatly kalsomined and the side walls wainscoted with hard wood to a height of five feet. Next will come paper hangers and painters. When completed the Plainfield post-office will compare favorably with any like office in the State for neatness.

OBITUARY.

It is with regret we learn of the death of the wife of Geo. R. Nichol, Esq., of Scotch Plains. The bereaved family have our sincere sympathy in their sad affliction.

Edith, eldest child of Edwin J. and Augusta S. Florence, and grand-daughter of Mrs. John Q. Stearns, of Elizabeth, died last Saturday in that city in the thirteenth year of her age. The funeral was held at St. John's church Elizabeth, Tuesday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

Lawrence O'Neil, an old and respected citizen of Plainfield, died suddenly at his home on Second street, Monday night last. He was 75 years of age, was born in County Kildare, Ireland in 1811, and came to this country in early life. He had been in poor health for some time, but the day before his death, had cut the grass about his residence, feeling better than usual. He leaves three children, James, Richard and Maria. Mr. O'Neil was highly respected by the community for his honesty and uprightness in all his dealings. He was a good citizen.

The sympathy of the community is with Mr. and Mrs. L. E. Barkalow of North Plainfield in the great loss they have sustained by the decease of their younger son, Frank Hubbard Barkalow, whose death from consumption occurred at midnight of Tuesday. The deceased who had recently passed his twentieth birthday was of particularly winning character and admired by all who knew him. He never had an enemy, and his quiet manners and even disposition charmed all with whom he came in contact. His musical education had been perfected under some of the best professors of the country, and his talents in that line were acknowledged by all those who heard him when he performed upon the organ of the First Baptist church, of which church he was a member, and other occasions. The funeral services will take place to-morrow, (Saturday,) at three p. m., at his late residence.

Knights Templar.

The Knights Templar of St. John's Commandery of Elizabeth, and Damascus Commandery, of Newark, have been invited to attend divine service in Grace church, this city, on Ascension Day, Thursday, June 3d. The Sir Knights, about 150 strong, will arrive in this city on the 7.03 p. m. train, make a parade around the city, and then march to the church. Service to begin at 8 o'clock. They will be the guests of Anchor Lodge, No. 149, who will entertain them after service with a collation.

Mrs. Jacob Thorn has disposed of her property on Grove street, North Plainfield, to a Mr. Spooner, a former resident of Orange N. J. While the house is being thoroughly renovated, Mr. and Mrs. Spooner and son are stopping at Force's Hotel.

Mr. I. G. Yawger and his daughter Edith, formerly of North Plainfield, were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Charles J. Taggart, of Sycamore ave., "Washington Park," last week. Their visit was an unexpected pleasure to their numerous friends.

Dr. E. W. South, by the cares and demands of a large practice, is rather broken down in health and the need of a long rest is apparent. He will sail for Europe with his wife, Saturday of next week, to be absent during the months of June, July and August.

President of the Common Council, Tell A. Beguelin, wife and daughter Lulu, started Wednesday last on their European trip, on the steamer Labrador, of the French line, to be absent until October next. Mr. Beguelin will visit certain celebrated springs in Switzerland, and be treated medically for his health previous to his return. The party will proceed direct to the home of a brother of Mr. Beguelin at Chaux-de-fonds, Switzerland. Their many friends wish them a safe and pleasant journey and recovery of health.

The thirtieth anniversary of the wedding of Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Winckler of 13 Park place, North Plainfield, was celebrated at their residence, Tuesday evening, by a large gathering of relatives and friends from this vicinity and elsewhere. There was music, dancing and a bountiful supper in which all took part. The presents were both numerous and costly, and the enjoyment of all was complete and continued. Mr. Winckler is one of the most prosperous builders of this city and the Borough, and both he and his charming wife are among the most popular of its citizens.

Just preceding the terrible death of Mr. P. P. Bliss, the singing evangelist and composer of some of the sweetest of the "Moody and Sankey Hymns," he expressed a wish that some place could be found in the field of the revivalists for his friends Mr. and Mrs. Jas. McGranahan, then almost unknown but, as he said, earnest christians and fine singers. He spoke of this to his then fellow worker, Major Whittle, little thinking how in a few weeks the Asthabula disaster and his death would cause the vacancy which Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan have ever since so acceptably and successfully filled.

Mr. Ernest O. Chamberlin, formerly editor of the Bulletin of this city, and now occupying his time as correspondent of many influential papers of New York, Philadelphia and elsewhere, besides acting during the season as Secretary to the President of the New Jersey Senate, visited his parents on Madison avenue, recently. With him was Miss Duryee of Philadelphia, a young lady of more than usual attractiveness of face and mind. Since appreciating the true inwardness of the happy smile on Mr. Chamberlin as he walked by her side, we have been thinking up the nicest kind of a "personal" notice we are capable of, for use, we feel sure, very soon, upon the occasion when they are made one.

At the residence of the bride's father, Commissioner John V. Whitlock, No. 19 Manning avenue, North Plainfield, the Rev. Dr. Yerkes united in marriage, Wednesday evening, at eight o'clock, Mamie, eldest daughter of the hosts, and Mr. Ambrose F. Randolph, son of the late Benjamin Randolph, of Harlingen. There were about sixty relatives and invited guests present at the ceremony, and fine music and generous supper added to the enjoyment of the evening. Quantities of presents were received, and the well wishes of all were sincere and hearty. The couple left for New York late in the evening, and intend to extend their wedding trip to Washington. Upon their return they will permanently reside in New Brunswick.

The Rev. William R. Richards of the Crescent avenue church has engaged passage to sail on July 6th for a European trip. The recreation and rest the journey promises, is decidedly deserving. Coming into the pastorate of the largest church in the Presbytery and the most influential in the city, while a comparitively young man, Mr. Richards has labored faithfully and successfully to build up and bind together its congregation. His fearlessness in criticising most severely what he thinks is wrong, in the very face of those personally concerned in the sins he denounces, or who are known to be supporters or endorsers of associations whose ways and means Mr. Richards must condemn to be consistent, is greatly to be, and is, admired. Hundreds will wish him a pleasant trip and a safe return.

To Mr. A. C. Baldwin, who was also one of the originators of the Opera House scheme for Plainfield, is due more than to any other one man the existence of the Public Library and Art Gallery. He first thought of and proposed it, and in spite of the fact that he was universally ridiculed by everybody in the beginning, by patience and perseverance and the expenditure of many hundreds of dollars of his own means, he accomplished the result. He persuaded the donor to give the building, and by continuous pressure influenced and allured the rich men of our city to furnish the interior with works of art and books, and the means to purchase more. If he will now take in hand the project of a public cemetery, located in some picturesque spot, and laid out artistically by some experienced landscape gardener, it will also soon be an accomplished and existing fact. May he speedily achieve the long-felt-want, but may it be many years before he occupies a place in it.

WHAT SANK THE OREGON?

A beautiful damsel in wrapper and slipper
Sat on the deck of the fast sailing clipper,
And many a question she put to the skipper.

She told him she never had been on the ocean,
And asked him if he had any sort of a notion
What kept the old thing in eternal commotion?

She plied him with questions, none could reply to,
But still the old skipper politely would try to,
And once in a while the old vessel would lie, too.

"What think you ran into and sank the Cunarder?"
The skipper looked up and appeared to regard her
As if he was sorry her question weren't harder.

"Why, bless ye," he said as he glanced at the spanker
And motioned a sailor to stand by the anchor,
"'Twas water, I reckon, ran into and sank her."

The Seminary Commencement.

The programme that is to be presented at the Seventeenth Annual Commencement of Miss Kenyon's Seminary for Young Ladies, on Seventh street, Tuesday evening, the 8th inst., is certain of pleasing the varied tastes of all who may be so fortunate as to attend. As we give it in full below, it is not necessary to rehearse it here except in a general way. Besides the instrumental gems that are to be interpreted by Mr. Venino's pupils, and the literary efforts of Miss Kenyon's graduates, there will be some most enjoyable singing by the Æolian Glee Club of Hoboken, that numbers eighteen male voices carefully and artistically trained and instructed by Mr. Venino. The Marche, "Heroique," is to be performed on two grand pianos, with eight hands, by the Misses Tiffany, Waring, Massett and Erskine. Miss E. Sandford is to give Mendelssohn's Concerto, in G minor, and Miss Fairbairn will render Gottschalk's "Banjo." Miss Mildred Potter will favor with two of Chopin's compositions. The Rev. A. V. V. Raymond will make the customary address and present the diplomas. Lovers of music are promised a great treat in the sonata for piano and violin—a beautiful and artistic work by Edv. Grieg—to be interpreted by Mr. Venino and Mr. A. Kuenzlen. The following is the programme in full:

Wonders Never Cease.

Upon the place of Mr. William Boyd, near Millbrook, Morris county, two hens were some time ago placed to set upon nests which contained thirteen eggs each. When these hens came from their nests Tuesday of last week farmer Boyd was astonished to find that one had brought out a brood of fourteen chicks from the thirteen eggs which had been placed under her, and that the other had thirteen chicks besides a half of a chick which remained in a fraction of an egg in the nest. Mr. Boyd's son, who has gone into the breeding of poultry quite extensively and has charge of it, had these hens penned in on their nests, so that it would be impossible for any other hens to get to them and thus increase the number of eggs in the nest. This being the case, the only way to account for the brood of fourteen chicks, is that one of the eggs in the nest must have been a double-yolked one and produced two chicks—a theory which some people believe and others dispute, but which seems to be clearly demonstrated in this case. But the fact that an egg will produce more than one chick is clearly shown by the results in the other nest. The half chicken spoken of was brought to this office and shown us. It comprised the legs, thighs and rear part of a chicken, all perfectly developed and feathered, but the upper part of the body, wings and head are missing. There is no mark of mutilation to show that the chick had been cut in two, but on the contrary the place where such would occur is covered over with smooth skin, showing a complete formation. This part of a chicken was found pressed closely in a fragment of shell which formed the larger end of the egg. There being no life in this half formed chick, and there being thirteen chicks in the brood, a full formed chick must have come from this shell also, showing that the egg was in some way about an egg and a half. The comparitively small part of the interior which the malformation occupied, also furnishes additional proof in this direction. This statement may almost seem to pass the bounds of credence, but Mr. Boyd is a thoroughly reliable gentleman, whose word may be depended on in every particular, and he furnishes proof of the most remarkable part of the transaction in the half-formed chicken, which he has put in alcohol for preservation.—Iron Era.

The Services of Memorial Day.

The Common Councils of both this city and the Borough of North Plainfield, have voted appropriations of money to the G. A. R. Post here for the purposes of the proper observance and services of Decoration Day. For this and other reasons the occasion will be celebrated in a more extensive manner than ever before. The decoration of the graves of the soldiers buried in this vicinity will be done by details from the Post during the morning, as usual. THE potato bug, one of the worst pests that we have to contend with, has come this spring with renewed forces, and it now looks as though it would be a good year for selling bug poison.

WESTFIELD WISPS.

Mr. W. W. Gilby has been appointed agent for B. Frank Coe's fertilizers in our town and vicinity.

Overseer Pierson has been the present week repairing the sidewalks on Broad street, which they needed very much.

The new dwelling house in process of construction for Mr. John O'Boenis, on Walnut street, is rapidly approaching completion.

The ladies of the Presbyterian church will hold a bazaar and festival on Thursday evening, June 3d. Ice cream and strawberries in abundance.

The heirs of Thos. Savage, who died in Westfield township, near Cranford, some thirty years ago, is about obtaining through Chancery valuable property situated both in New York and England.

On Tuesday evening Empire Engine Co., No. 2, took their engine out for practice. They tried the new fire well corner of Broad street and Mountain avenue, and found everything in perfect working order.

The congregation of the Presbyterian church are holding their Sabbath day services in the lecture rooms. They are having the interior of the church thoroughly renovated and painted, new carpets, gas fixtures, etc., put in.

Mr. Cyrus P. Wilcox and others fished in Mr. Hermerman's pond, on Clark street, Tuesday afternoon, and succeeded in catching two carp, which weighed 11 lbs. each. The pond was stocked by Mr. John J. Willis five years ago. There are a great number of them in this pond.

The dwelling house of Mr. S. W. Reese, on Hillside avenue, was entered by burglars on Tuesday morning at about 2 a. m. They were heard to raise the window, which aroused some of the inmates of the house, and the thief was frightened off without securing any booty.

A number of complaints have been made by our residents of cows tied along the roads with ropes long enough so that the animals get upon the walks, breaking them and frightening women and children so that they are afraid to travel some of the streets. It is no doubt the right, and ought to be the duty of the overseers of our road districts, to prevent this encroachment upon our sidewalks to the detriment of foot passengers.

A new road scraper was in use on Road District No. 9 on Wednesday afternoon last, and did its work to perfection. Most of the overseers were present and were satisfied with the way it did its work. Mr. Miller, Chairman of our Town Committee, was present, and received an order from most of the overseers for their proportion of the amount of cost of the machine. There is no doubt all of them will see the necessity of our town owning it. Most of the taxpayers on Road District No. 8, which is the largest one in our town, favor the purchase.

The annual census for School District No. 10 for the present year shows the total number of children between 5 and 18 years of age, 542.

SLY.

It was the morning after the last social reception given by the young men's dancing club of Clyde for the winter of '86, and Mrs. Osborne and her two daughters had just seated themselves with their fancy work in the parlor set apart for the regular boarders of the Forrester House.

These young ladies were much alike in form and feature, but Lola, the younger, usually took precedence in social matters, on account of her easy familiarity, and the pleasure she derived from openly discussing her own and her neighbors' affairs.

Isabel, the elder, commonly called Sly, a name fastened upon her by her sister, on account of her reticence in talking over her secret likes and dislikes, and a somewhat retiring disposition, seemed well content to take the second place, and it was one which had been accorded her since childhood by her mother, who was very partial to the chattering Lola.

The ladies had not been seated long before they were joined by Mrs. Slayton, a somewhat mischief-loving young married woman, who, after dropping into a favorite rocker, opened the conversation by saying:

"Ah, Miss Lola, you want to keep close watch of your sprig of the nobility. I saw him flirting desperately with your sister last evening."

"With Sly? Impossible!"

"Not at all, my dear. Sly was standing in the bay window, toying with the smilax in the hanging basket with one hand, while the Count de Fabio knelt at her feet and kissed the other rapturously. You must correct me, Sly, if I am mistaken. I was going to the flower stand for a geranium leaf, and peeping behind the curtain to see if any one was there, I espied the enraptured Count."

"Mrs. Slayton!" cried Sly, coloring violently.

"Sly Osborne, is that true?" asked her sister, angrily. "Are you trying by any of your sly, underhanded proceedings to force yourself upon the Count's notice? Is it true, I say?"

"No, Lola, it is not true," answered her sister, calmly.

"I know there was something, though! I saw you go into that window myself. I believe you are trying to get Count de Fabio away from me. However, young lady, your efforts will be useless. Count de Fabio only notices you because you are my sister; he says you are absolutely plain."

"He thinks you beautiful, I suppose?"

"He told me I would make the handsomest bride in Clyde."

At this moment Mrs. Osborne noticed the suppressed glee of a gratified gossip shining in the lineaments of Mrs. Slayton's face, and said:

"There, there, girls, you mustn't quarrel about your beaux. However, I agree with Lola; if the Count has made any protestations of love to you, Sly, I think you should tell your sister, as she is engaged to him."

"There is nothing to tell, mother."

"You hear, Lola?"

"Yes, but she is so dreadfully sly!"

"Now, ladies, what's all this chatter about?" cried a new voice, and then George Forrester, the son of the proprietor of the house, and the friend and confidant of all the ladies, entered the room with his cousin Lessie.

"Oh, nothing—only the girls have been quarreling over the Count, as usual," answered Mrs. Slayton.

"You are slightly mistaken, Mrs. Slayton," said Sly, looking the lady straight in the eye. "You succeeded in setting my sister at me, but I have not quarreled about Count de Fabio, and never shall do so."

"Extremely well satisfied with yourself, are you not? Well, it is no wonder—after last evening," retorted Mrs. Slayton.

"I don't know why Sly has not as much reason to feel flattered by Count de Fabio's attentions as Lola," said Lessie Forrester, a little spitefully. "The fact is, the Count is deferential and polite to all women in his delightfully foreign style. Dear me! What would he think if he knew how silly some of our American girls are? They think the simplest form of a compliment a direct proposal of marriage. How amused he will be when I tell him some of their very foolish speeches after we are married."

"Married! You?" cried Mrs. Slayton. "Why, I supposed he was engaged to Lola!"

"That is a sheer fabrication," replied Lessie, biting her lip with temper. "He told me only last night that I would make the prettiest bride in Clyde."

"Why!" exclaimed the irrepressible Mrs. Slayton. "He told Lola the very same thing."

"It is false!" cried Lola, her face turning crimson.

"My dear, you told us so not ten minutes ago," returned Mrs. Slayton, calmly.

"I mean," stammered Lola, "I mean that it is not true that he ever mentioned the word love to Letitia Maria Forrester. He despises her; he told me that she was a deceitful creature."

"And you are worse; you would try to force him into an engagement with you. You are none too good to sue a man for breach of promise. I am going straight down stairs and have uncle turn you right out of his house."

"Lessie! Lessie!" exclaimed her cousin, springing from the sofa, where he had been seated, and arresting her steps. "I am ashamed of you! This Count de Fabio has probably been making love to both of you—a deceitful scoundrel!"

"You are another, and ridiculously jealous of him!" cried his cousin, who was gifted with a tongue like a two-edged sword.

"Haven't I reason to be?" cried George, laughing. "From being thought the most charming walking-stick in town by all you girls, here I am overshadowed by the little and creole countenance of Count de Fabio. A Count of no account, one may say. No one ever heard of him before."

"That is true," said Mrs. Slayton, sighing.

"I'm not going to make a fool of myself, though," continued George. "Not a bit of it! Profit by my example, girls; calm yourselves, and remain the friends you have ever been."

"Never!" hissed Lola, snatching up the silk handkerchief she was embroidering in gold for the Count, and leaving the room.

"What a dreadful story-teller Lola is," said Lessie, after a moment's reflection. "I don't see how you ever live with her, Sly."

Sly looked at Lessie's flushed, excited face with a strange little smile upon her own, then said—

"It is near dinner time. I propose we will go to our rooms and get over this little scene before dinner."

This proposal found favor with all the ladies, Mrs. Slayton thinking it was not best to say anything more at present, and Mrs. Osborne longing to go and comfort her favorite daughter, while Lessie, realizing that color was very unbecoming to her, wished to cool her face before she again met the Count.

"'What fools these women be!'" quoted George, laughing to himself when he was left alone. "That fascinating Count looks to me as if he were half African, and what there is so taking about him I can't see. Even the chambermaids and cooks are making eyes at him. No wonder! He tells each of them that she will make the prettiest bride in Clyde. Ha! ha! ha! Every girl in the house confesses her admiration for him in the plainest terms, excepting demure little Sly.

And then George fell to musing.

It was late when he went in to dinner, and the boarders were all seated in their accustomed places—all excepting the Count de Fabio. His place was filled by a small, foreign looking lady, whom Mrs. Slayton was endeavoring to draw out.

George noted this at a glance, and as he slipped quietly into his seat beside Sly, he intercepted a glance of hatred given and returned between Lola and Lessie.

"And are you, then, the Count de Fabio's mother?" Mrs. Slayton queried of the stranger.

"Santa Maria! His moder!" cried the wizen-faced woman, raising her hands despairingly. "I ees de Countess de Fabio, his wife, and we mek our leving by clairvoyant. Tell de fortune, you know. When we settle we tell all you pretty girls if you get marrit, eh?"

There was a complete silence. Mrs. Osborne and Sly turned very white, Lessie and Lola turned very red. Mrs. Slayton was in her element, and greatly as she desired to shout with laughter, George would not join her in her merriment. He arose soon and left the table.

The Countess de Fabio was the only one of the group who enjoyed a hearty dinner that day.

There was no use in denying it; it was duller at the Forrester House after the romance fell from about the Count de Fabio. Whether he was a real Count or not, it made no difference now; he was a clairvoyant fortune-teller, and a married man, as the Countess de Fabio took care to tell at every opportunity.

The couple still boarded at the Forrester House, but they were seated at a different table, and were no longer recognized as acquaintances by the ladies.

The hearts of Lola and Lessie were not broken, nor was their enmity lasting, for it was not more than a week after the arrival of the Countess that Lola said in confidence to George—

"Oh, dear! Isn't it a shame that that wretched Count de Fabio should have turned out in such a way? Lessie and I are the laughing stocks of Clyde. I don't care, though; I told her this morning that we had you to fall back upon."

"Not a bit of it, my dear Lola. My days of flirting are over. I intend to devote my future entirely to my promised wife, who is none other than your sister Sly."

The engagement was short. Not many days had gone by ere the Forrester House was draped with white ribbons, and embellished with all the flowers which could be produced from conservatories of the place.

It was the wedding night of the young heir of the house, and at six o'clock he stood waiting for the carriages to carry the bridal party to the church, with his usher, the two pretty bridesmaids and his white robed bride near him.

The bridesmaids were none other than Lola and Lessie, and taking advantage of a momentary absence of their escorts, Lola said with her accustomed freedom—

"Now, George, tell us why you did not propose to one of us instead of to Sly; I do not see how you happened to fancy such a reticent being. Either of us, Lessie or myself, is prettier than she."

"There's where you are mistaken," returned the young man, throwing an arm about his bride. "She is prettier than either of you; and besides that, are you silly enough to think that any man could fancy a young woman who was so infatuated with another man as you two were not a month ago? If you do you are more deficient than you ought to be."

The slight form of the sensitive bride trembled in his arm.

"What is it, darling? Are you ill?" he whispered.

"No, George, I am not ill, but I must say something to you before the ceremony, and alone."

The young man drew her into a little parlor near at hand.

"Now, my love, what is it?"

"I have something to confess to you," said Sly, in a low tone. "I have been just as foolish as the other girls. Count de Fabio, only the evening before his wife's arrival, told me that he loved me, and I am afraid I was just as well pleased with his fancied preference as the others were."

"You love me, don't you Sly?"

"Yes, George, I truly do."

"Then, darling, I don't care a farthing what he said to you or what you said to him. If you had acted the simpleton like the girls, it might have made a difference. There is no woman who makes a public parade of the unmeaning compliments paid her by strangers, or acquaintances, even, who does not richly deserve the same dish of ridicule served upon her that Lessie and Lola have been obliged to partake of so freely. You have discretion Sly, and for that I honor you."

In consequence of the numerous strikes, manufacturing firms in quite a number of the large cities have been forming themselves into associations for mutual protection, and upon the basis that the firms are to run their business as it suits them and free from dictation from any labor organization. This action, it is contended, has been made necessary by the injuries which have been brought upon business through strikes which were unprovoked, and demands made of an extraordinary character. It is earnestly to be hoped that the day is not far distant when organizations especially designed to antagonize each other's influence will be done away with. Beneficial organizations are worthy of support, but when they are likely to be used improperly and to the destruction of business, it is time for a halt, and for all to consider whether antagonizing organizations with rules of offence and defence against each other are not more likely to produce harm than good. Reconciliations should be more thought of than contentions or measures likely to continue them.—Camden Democrat.

FOUR DON'TS.

A little girl when recently asked her name said it was "Minnie Don't." Her mother so frequently said "Don't" to her that she thought it was her name. Still, it's a good word in its way, and we want to call your attention to four things which please don't do.

FIRST--

Don't imagine, when you want to purchase Clothing, that it makes little difference where you buy. It makes a big difference, unless you are overrun with money. Prices are not the same everywhere. Almost any store has its $10, $12 or $15 Suit; but, the quality for the money—there is where the difference comes in. Why, we owe one-half of our success to comparisons made between our goods and others. It pays to shop. But, if you dislike shopping, why buy of us once, and we will have your custom as long as you need clothes.

SECOND--

Don't suppose that all that looks like wool is so. They have got the thing down so fine now that an expert can hardly tell the difference. Wool has got to grow on a sheep's back; and that's where the wool comes from of which our all-wool Suits are made. You may not be able to see the difference between ours and some others at the same price; but you'll find it out in the wear—and don't you forget it.

THIRD--

Don't believe, or buy any goods of, anybody who professes to sell at half cost. It can't be done. A merchant can no more sell you a Suit at less than cost—unless it's an old-style, shop-worn thing he would be almost glad to give away—than you can afford to work for half a day's pay. We make no such foolish professions; but promise to give you the best value for your money that can be offered by any one who pays a fair price for the labor of manufacture and seeks only a fair profit.

FOURTH--

Don't take it for granted that all clothes fit alike. They don't. A famous London tailor said "he could take a meal sack and make a Suit worthy of a gentleman's wear." He meant that it would fit so well that the quality of the material would escape notice. And there is a good deal in the way a Suit fits, not only in appearance, but also in the wear. If we were to extol our garments half as highly as many of them do, you buyers would think we were blowing. Call and inspect them once, and you'll think they are up to the average of custom work.

GENTS:—I feel it my duty to say respecting Burdock Blood Bitters, that it is the best medicine I ever took. I suffered two or three years from stomach troubles and dyspepsia, as well as from liver and kidney complaint. I was not able to attend to my business. My wife was afflicted in much the same way. We read of your Bitters in the papers and made up our minds that we would try them. The result is my wife and I began to improve at once, and I am now able to do more hard work than before in ten years. It relieved my kidney troubles as well. We both wish you, the makers of it, Godspeed.

An Efficient Remedy
In all cases of Bronchial and Pulmonary Affections is AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL. As such it is recognized and prescribed by the medical profession, and in many thousands of families, for the past forty years, it has been regarded as an invaluable household remedy. It is a preparation that only requires to be taken in very small quantities, and a few doses of it administered in the early stages of a cold or cough will effect a speedy cure, and may, very possibly, save life. There is no doubt whatever that
Ayer's Cherry Pectoral
Has preserved the lives of great numbers of persons, by arresting the development of Laryngitis, Bronchitis, Pneumonia, and Pulmonary Consumption, and by the cure of these dangerous maladies. It should be kept ready for use in every family where there are children, as it is a medicine far superior to all others in the treatment of Croup, the alleviation of Whooping Cough, and the cure of Colds and Influenza, ailments peculiarly incidental to childhood and youth. Promptitude in dealing with all diseases of this class is of the utmost importance. The loss of a single day may, in many cases, entail fatal consequences. Do not waste precious time in experimenting with medicines of doubtful efficacy, while the malady is constantly gaining a deeper hold, but take at once the speediest and most certain to cure,

Poetry.

OVER THE HILL TO THE POOR HOUSE.

BY WILL M. CARLETON.

Over the hill to the poor house I'm trudgin' my weary way—
I, a woman of seventy, and only a trifle gray;
I, who am smart and chipper, for all the years I've told,
As many another woman that's only half as old.

Over the hill to the poor house—I can't quite make it clear!
Over the hill to the poor house—it seems so horrid queer!
Many a step I've taken a toilin' to and fro,
But that's a sort of a journey I never thought to go.

What's the use of heapin' on me a pauper's shame?
Am I lazy or crazy? Am I blind or lame?
True, I am not so supple, nor yet so awful stout;
But charity ain't no favor, if one can live without.

I am willin' an' anxious an' ready any day
To work for a decent livin' an' pay my honest way;
For I can earn my victuals, an' more, too, I'll be bound,
If anybody's only willin' to just have me around.

Once I was young an' han'some—I was, upon my soul—
Once my cheeks was roses, my eyes as black as coal;
And I can't remember in them days, of hearin' people say,
For any kind of reason, that I was in their way.

'Taint no use of boastin', or talkin' over free,
But many a house an' home was open then for me;
Many a han'some offer I had from likely men,
An' nobody ever hinted that I was a burden then.

And when to John I was married, sure he was good and smart,
But he and all the neighbors would own I done my part;
For life was all before me, an' I was young an' strong,
An' I worked the best I could in tryin' to get along.

And so we worked together; and life was hard but gay,
With now and then a baby for to cheer us on our way,
Till we had half a dozen, an' all grown clean an' neat,
An' went to school like others, and had enough to eat.

So we worked for the children, and raised them every one;
Worked for 'em Summer and Winter, just as we ought to've done,
Only perhaps we humored 'em, which some good folks condemn,
But every couple's children's a heap the best to them.

Strange how much we think of our blessed little ones!
I'd have died for my daughters, I'd have died for my sons;
An' God he made the rule of love; but when we're old and gray,
I've noticed it sometimes somehow fails to work the other way.

Strange, another thing; when our boys and girls was grown,
And when, exceptin' Charley, they left us there alone,
When John, he nearer an' nearer come, and dearer seemed to be,
The Lord of Hosts He came one day an' took him away from me.

Still I was bound to struggle, an' never to cringe or fall—
Still I worked for Charley, for Charley was now my all;
And Charley was pretty good to me, with scarce a word or frown,
Till at last he went a-courtin', and brought a wife from town.

She was somewhat dressy, and hadn't a pleasant smile—
She was quite conceity, an' carried a heap o' style;
But if ever I tried to be friends, I did with her, I know,
But she was hard and proud, an' I couldn't make it go.

She had an edication, and that was good for her;
But when she twitted me on mine, 'twas carrying things too fur;
An' I told her once, 'fore company, (an' it almost made her sick)
That I never swallered a grammar, or et a 'rithmetic.

So 'twas only a few days before the thing was done—
They was a family of themselves, and I another one;
And a very little cottage one family will do,
But I've never seen a house that was big enough for two.

An' I never could speak to suit her, never could please her eye,
An' it made me independent, and then I didn't try;
But I was terribly staggered an' I felt it like a blow,
When Charley turned agin me and told me I could go.

I went to live with Susan, but Susan's house was small,
And she was always a hintin' how it wasn't snug for us all;
And what with her husband's sisters, and what with children three,
'Twas easy to discover that there wasn't room for me.

An' then I went to Thomas, the oldest son I've got,
For Thomas' buildings'd cover the half of an acre lot;
But all the children was on me—I couldn't stand their sauce—
And Thomas said I needn't think I was comin' there to boss.

An' then I wrote to Rebecca, my girl who lives out West,
And to Isaac, not far from her—some twenty miles at best;
An' one of 'em said 'twas too warm there for any one so old,
And t'other had an opinion the climate was too cold.

So they have shirked and slighted me, and shifted me about—
So they have well nigh soured me, and wore my old heart out;
But still I've borne up pretty well, and wasn't much put down,
Till Charley went to the poor-master an' put me on the town!

Over the hill to the poor-house—my children dear, good bye!
Many a night I've watched you when only God was nigh,
And God'll judge between us; but I will al'ays pray
That you may never suffer the half I do to-day.

AN ANIMATED INTERROGATION POINT.

One day I sat in a car-seat on the Saugus branch of the Eastern Road, behind a pale, care-worn lady, who was taking a little boy from Boston to Malden, says a Boston editor. As the little boy was of very inquiring mind and everything seemed to attract his attention I could not help listening to some of his questions.

"What is that, auntie?" the little boy commenced, pointing to a stack of hay on the marsh.

"Oh, that's hay, dear," answered the care-worn lady.

"What is hay, auntie?"

"Why, hay is hay, dear."

"But what is hay made of?"

"Why, hay is made of dirt and water and air."

"Who makes it?"

"God makes it, dear."

"Does He make it in the daytime or night?"

"In both, dear."

"And Sundays?"

"Yes, all the time."

"Ain't it wicked to make hay Sunday, auntie?"

"Oh, I don't know. I'd keep still, Willie, that's a dear. Auntie is tired."

After remaining quiet a moment little Willie broke out:

"Where do stars come from, Auntie?"

"I don't know; nobody knows."

"Did the moon lay 'em?"

"Yes, I guess so. Don't bother me."

Another short silence when Willie broke out:

"Benny says [illegible] is an owl, auntie; is they?"

"Oh, perhaps so."

"I think a whale could lay eggs; don't you, auntie?"

"Oh, yes, I guess so," said the shameless woman.

"Did you ever see a whale on his nest?"

"Oh, I guess so."

"Where?"

"I mean no. Willie, you must be quiet; I am getting crazy."

"What makes you crazy, Auntie?"

"Oh, dear! you ask so many questions."

"Did you ever see a little fly eat sugar?"

"Yes, dear."

"Where?"

"Willie, sit down on the seat and be still or I'll shake you. Now, not another word!"

And the lady pointed her finger at the little boy as if she were going to stick it through him. If she had been a wicked woman she would have sworn.

There are 1,000,000 little boys like Willie in the United States and half as many in England.

THE LAST MAN FLOGGED.

A STORY OF THE AMERICAN NAVY.

Peter Featherstone was an English criminal. He was one of that large class who are criminal by instinct, by inheritance and by acquirement. Born of criminal parents, he soon took to the streets of London, and by the time he was off his mother's knee he had been imprisoned and flogged for theft.

Before he was twenty-five years old he had served five terms in prison; he had been transported to Van Diemen's land, and had there suffered, more because of his good qualities than his bad ones—the horrors of the absolute despotism of martial law governing a criminal community.

In 1851 he set foot upon the docks of New York, a free man for the first time since his boyhood. The inhumanity of society's laws had embittered his mind against society. Still, wishing to be honest, he enlisted as a common seaman in the United States Navy.

The United States war vessel North Carolina was then anchored at the Brooklyn Navy Yard, having been converted into a receiving ship. Peter Featherstone was placed aboard of her, and there he entered upon his first attempt at reform. He had some experience as a sailor, was strong, brave and willing, and soon gained the favor of Lieutenant Enshaw and the boatswain.

Glittering opportunities to return to crime always present themselves to the reformed, and Peter Featherstone was not exempt. He had been known to the sporting fraternity of London as a "clever boxer" and a "hard hitter." Among his old time friends there was John McGraw, at one time light weight pugilistic champion of England. McGraw had come to New York and opened a "free and easy" at 85 Division street, which he had called the "Old House at Home." By some chance he learned that Featherstone was aboard the North Carolina. Knowing him to be a valuable adjunct to a boxing resort, he planned Peter's escape from the vessel, and after some correspondence he yielded to the promise of a gay life.

Among the other visitors to the North Carolina one afternoon, was a tailor. By arrangement he met Peter Featherstone between decks and secretly measured him for a suit of clothes. A week later another visitor smuggled aboard the vessel a package which Peter Featherstone received. It contained a suit of clothes of fashionable make, a silk hat, a pair of fine boots, a white shirt, a silk necktie and a large handkerchief.

In the afternoon of the same day a New York swell paraded the deck of the North Carolina and mingled with the visitors. One of his eyes was evidently sore, for whenever a sailor approached him he bowed his head and pressed his handkerchief to the side of his face. Shortly after he appeared on deck a party of visitors left the vessel, and among them was the dapper gentleman with the sore eyes. As he descended the stairs on the vessel's side and was nearing the small boat below, a sailor on deck hurriedly approached Lieutenant Enshaw, who was looking over the side.

"Do you see that man with a silk hat?" inquired the sailor, pointing below.

"Yes."

"Well, he's a messmate of mine and belongs to this boat. His name is Peter Featherstone."

"Halt!" cried the officer. Every member of the party descending the stairs stopped and looked up, except the young man in the silk hat.

"It is true," muttered the officer.

"Bring back that man with the handkerchief in his hand," ordered the lieutenant.

The young man clinched to the deck, looking cool and defiant.

"You are Peter Featherstone and belong to this vessel," said the lieutenant.

"I am not," was the bold response.

The unusual scene attracted "Commodore" Wilson, chief officer of the boat. He was commander of a squadron and carried his title of Commodore by courtesy only, that office not existing then in the United States Navy. He was an efficient officer, but passionate, and had been dubbed "Bully" Wilson by the sailors.

"Who is this man?" he asked.

"He is suspected of being a sailor attempting to escape," replied the lieutenant, looking curiously at the defiant face before him, which he recognized.

"Call the roll," ordered the Commodore.

In a moment the long roll of the drums was heard and six hundred sailors poured out of the vessel upon the upper deck. They formed themselves around the vessel's sides in regular lines.

The call of the roll brought response to every name but one. When "Peter Featherstone" was called no voice said "Here!"

The officers looked at the culprit silently, as if waiting for his defense. He stood in the centre of the deck, his arms folded, still erect and defiant. He saw that he was trapped and his only desire was for revenge.

"Who is the man who reported me?" he asked, quietly.

"John Simmons," called the lieutenant.

"Ay, ay, sir," replied a young sailor, stepping forward in front of a mast and saluting.

Featherstone apprehended him:

"Do you say my name is Peter Featherstone?"

"I do."

"Well, take that, you," and, with the quickness of the skilled pugilist, Featherstone struck his messmate three times in the face. The sailor's head struck an iron band around the mast and he fell senseless to the deck. As he fell Featherstone kicked viciously at his head, but in an instant the offender was seized by the master of arms and two marines.

"Put him in irons," yelled Bully Wilson. "I'll flog the life out of him."

The struggling sailor was manacled hand foot and thrown into that iron-barred cage between the lower decks which the sailors call "the run." Here he was guarded as is a murderer during his last hours. A sentry, like a death watch, paced continually before the cage.

Day by day the sailor awoke to anticipate his impending punishment, but it did not come. He grew restless and impatient of restraint as the days passed. He longed for the mental relief which would follow his punishment. He did not dread the physical pain. His back had felt the lash.

He did not know that there was then pending in the Congress of the United States a bill for a law to save him from the whip. He did not know that he was being kept by his commander to be offered up as the last sacrifice on the altar of the "cat-o-nine-tails," in the event of that instrument of torture being abolished from the navy.

One morning, nine weeks after Peter Featherstone had struck his messmate on the deck, he was aroused by the guard and told that he was to be flogged. His irons were removed and he walked quickly to the third deck. The entire crew of the North Carolina had been summoned to witness the flogging. The marines presented fixed bayonets. Commodore Wilson and the boatswain, armed with the cat, stood near a gun carriage, which formed the whipping stocks.

Peter Featherstone was well acquainted with the method of flogging sailors on board ship. He walked to the gun carriage, and with a quick motion pulled his blue shirt over his head. He threw it at the feet of the officer and exclaimed:

"Now, I'm ready."

"Not so fast!" thundered the Commodore. "Wait till you get orders. Put on your shirt."

The sailor obeyed. Then the officer read from a paper the charge: "Assaulting a seaman and attempted escape," and asked if the prisoner had anything to say.

In reply, the sailor again pulled off his shirt and approached the carriage. The boatswain lashed the culprit's feet to the timbers of the carriage and his hands to the hammock hook above.

At a nod from the officer the boatswain raised his arm, and once, twice, and again the nine thongs fell upon the white flesh with a cruel "swish." At the first blow the muscles of the sailor's back involuntarily contracted and his shoulders slightly shrugged. Then his head fell forward, his teeth set, and his breath came fast.

But the boatswain had admired the pluck of the young sailor, and his arm, respondent to his sympathy, seemed to lose its usual strength. The blows, severe as they were, did not satisfy the commander. At the third lash he cried, "Stop!" Then, glaring at the boatswain, he said:

"If you don't do your duty by that man I will find a man aboard who will do it by you."

The sailor turned his face defiantly to the boatswain and cried:

"Lay on! You can't hurt me."

The boatswain understood his superior officer and was nettled by the boasting tone of the culprit. He plied the cruel "cat" as he never had before. The blood spurted from the lacerated back; the perspiration streamed from the sailor's face; he gasped for breath, but he uttered no cry, and when the whipping ceased his knees trembled and his arms seemed to support his body.

"How do you like that?" asked Bully Wilson.

"How do I like it?" cried the sailor, "why, my old mother in Liverpool has often give me a worse licking than that with a dishrag."

This sally brought a roar of laughter from the sailors, and the officer was beside himself with rage. The rebellious sailor was again ordered to "the run," this time in double irons.

On the afternoon of the same day the bill for the abolition of flogging in the navy was signed by President Fillmore, and became a law. The last flogging had been sanctioned by American law.

Two months later Peter Featherstone's irons were taken off, and one night at 10 o'clock he was transferred to the ship Saranac. She was to sail on the following morning for the Gulf Stream, where Commodore Wilson was to join the flagship of the squadron.

"I will take Featherstone with me," he is said to have remarked to Lieutenant Enshaw, "and I will break him or kill him."

That night, aboard the Saranac, a sentry saw a shadow pass him and heard a splash in the water.

Half an hour later a half-dead sailor, with his bundle of clothes tied around his neck with a handkerchief, drew himself out of the water. He looked across the water where lay the black outlines of a ship, and the last man flogged in the American navy hurled out a curse and turned his face toward the great city.—Cincinnati Commercial.

THE THREE WAVES.

Fifty years ago I was a sailor on a fishing boat at Deva. The captain and proprietor of the boat was my paternal uncle Thomas, who had taken me to his family at the death of my parents. I was just 18, and my fishing comrade was a boy of 15, named Bilinch.

Rough and stern as my uncle was, he had the noblest and most generous heart one can imagine. He had married a young woman whom he loved with the deepest tenderness, and they had a daughter about my age, as sweet and as good as an angel.

That year we had the most extraordinary ill luck in fishing. In vain we were the first on the suitable spot; our nets took nothing but dead fish, small, and of no value, while the boats one by one by our side were obliged to throw overboard all their ballast to make room for their fish. It continued thus the whole season day after day. It was impossible to blame the boat, which couldn't have been better; or the nets, which were chosen with the greatest care; or the crew, which was composed of the most famous fishermen between Machicaco and the cape of the Figuier. We were in despair.

One night Bilinch and I were on the jetty at Maspe making ready for the departure of our boat, which usually took place at three o'clock in the morning. When everything was ready we saw that we still had a long time to spare, and we lay down in the boat.

I fell very soundly asleep. Suddenly I was abruptly awakened by my companion, who was pulling my arm violently. I was about to teach him gentler manners, when I was struck with terror by the deep fear I saw printed on his face, and by the inexpressible anguish that contracted his features.

"What is the matter?" I asked anxiously.

"Did you not see them? Did you not hear them?" he murmured, his eyes starting from their sockets from fright.

"Who? Who?"

"Marie—and the other. Fly, Thomas, and do not look at them!"

Not understanding his words, I was about to ask more explanation, when the hour for our setting out struck. I was obliged to postpone my questions.

"Come away! come away!" screamed my companion. "Be still, Thomas, they are waiting for me."

The crew was already on the jetty, but before the boat had touched, Bilinch sprang ashore and began to run toward the village. He met Uncle Thomas and threw himself on the ground at his feet, crying: "I cannot! I will not! I am not going to sea!"

A sailor raised him up, took him by the arm and forced him to enter the boat.

"What is all this?" asked my uncle.

"This lazy fellow wants to fish for birds to-day," replied the sailor.

But the poor boy writhed at the captain's feet, begging to be put ashore. The sailors, seeing nothing in it but a trick to avoid work, made sport of him. But I, still under the impression of the strange manner in which he had interrupted my sleep, went to my uncle and told him quietly that I was anxious in regard to the boy's health. My good and thoughtful uncle quieted the men and spoke gently to Bilinch.

"Now, be calm, my boy, and tell me why you do not want to fish to-day."

"Oh, master, it is impossible for me to tell you, but I swear that I cannot and must not go with you."

"But that is not enough. You are bound to me for the season, and you cannot miss a single day unless you have a good reason to give."

"I have one, sir; I have been told that if I sailed to-day I should be drowned without pity."

"But how?"

"In shipwreck."

"Then if you drown the whole crew will perish with you."

"Yes; and for that reason you ought not to go out to-day."

"Come boy, this is not serious. Either you are fooling with us or you know something important which we ought to know."

"But I cannot tell it."

"Very well; you will run no greater risk than the rest of us—"

"For heaven's sake, master—"

"Be still, you coward! your life is worth no more than ours."

And taking the helm, my uncle gravely gave the signal for setting out.

Thirty oars dipped at the same instant, and the boat leaped forward. She had gone a good distance when Bilinch begged the captain again to stop, adding that he would tell him all.

My uncle gave the order, the sailors lifted their oars, and the boat paused gently opposite Urasandi. The captain sat down and said to Bilinch, who was weeping bitterly.

"Come, Bilinch, be quiet and tell us what has happened."

"I will do so, master, and God grant that no evil befall us!"

"This morning at 2 o'clock Thomas and I had finished our preparations for to-day. We stretched ourselves out on the deck and in a few moments Thomas was soundly asleep. I would not have been long in following his example if I had not been suddenly aroused by the presence of two women, who seemed to have dropped from the clouds. I was mute with fear, motionless, and hardly dared to breathe. That saved me, for leaning over us and examining us attentively, they thought me asleep like my companion. The elder one said, 'Let them sleep. That is what we want. They shall not awake now until I permit them.'

"Immediately I felt that the boat was taken up and was passing through the air. After flying along quite a time we came down again gently and stopped finally under the thick leaves of a great olive tree.

"The two women came and looked at us attentively for a few moments, then left the boat and I saw them no more.

"In spite of my great fear my curiosity was so strong that I could not keep from opening my eyes to look after them. As I raised myself I struck against a branch that hindered my movements. I cut it off and hid it under the seat. I then could see out of the boat, and through the darkness I saw that we were in a great olive grove, and in the distance could see figures gliding in the shadow.

"'It is some dance of Lamia's,' I said to myself; and I was about to awaken Thomas when I heard approaching footsteps. Thinking that it might be the two women, I lay down and did not move. It was they. They came into the boat which immediately began to move.

"In a few moments we were again at the jetty at Maspe.

"After having moored the boat the elder woman said: 'My daughter, we must bid them farewell forever. Forever, I say, for you will never see this boat again or any member of her crew. In two hours from now they shall be at the bottom of the ocean.'

"'But the ocean is as smooth as oil.'

"'Nevertheless, before they shall have passed the point of Arrangaiz; I will cause to rise three huge waves—the first of milk, the second of tears, and the third of blood. They will escape the first two, but nothing can save them from the last. It is my fate to hate them. I have pursued them all winter, removing the fish from their course, and since my power over them ends to-morrow evening, I will end by burying them in under the waves. I shall have mercy on no one. You must not forget that it is our mission to abhor them all, and above all others, those who love us best.'

"'Let us then yield to our fate! But what if by some unhappy fate they should not go to sea to-day—'

"'Hush, fool! It is impossible! They will go, and they will perish. There is but one single way by which they might escape from the fate that threatens them; but they do not know it.'

"'What is the way, mother?'

"'By plunging a harpoon into the midst of the last wave, the wave of blood; for the wave will be I, myself, I shall hide beneath its waves, and the blow that should strike that wave would pierce my own heart.'

"'Oh, my mother, what if they know it?'

"'That cannot be, since no one knows this secret but you. They shall all be mine, and at our next nocturnal festival no one shall be able to boast of a success like mine!'

"With these words she bade us awake, and they both vanished with shrieks of loud laughter."

The boy ceased to speak. Some of us did not believe a word he had spoken; others explained his tale by a dream and mocked him. "But tell me," said he to the latter, "does any of you know of an olive grove within a circle of one hundred miles of this place?"

"They know of none—but Bilinch drew from under one of the seats an olive branch and waved it triumphantly, saying: "Look, here is the branch I cut when I raised my head; I hid it here that you might believe my word and know that these two women are not the product of a dream."

No one could say a word against such positive proof, for no olive tree grew within less than one hundred miles. The fatal branch was handed silently from one to another. A superstitious terror seized the most incredulous, and we repeated, shuddering, "A Lamia, a Lamia!"

The captain arose and, taking the helm, commanded silence. Then turning to me he added, "Thomas, take the harpoon. Stand to the prow with open eyes and a firm arm! At my first order strike firmly into the water! And you others to your oars."

Our boat cut the waves rapidly. The trembling light of the dawn smiled on the surface of the water, which was not rippled by the slightest breath of air. The boat flew onward and through the morning fog the trees and shrubs on the shore seemed to be taking a strange flight.

We doubled the point and reached the bar. There was no trace of danger on any side, but nobody dared to speak.

All at once, two fathoms in front of us, there arose an enormous wave, as high as a mountain, as white as snow.

"Attention!" said the captain, with his eyes on me. "It was true!" he murmured in a trembling voice, "The wave of milk!"

Thirty oar blades dipped into the water at once, and the boat leaped to the wave. Her prow disappeared in a cloud of foam; but before the third stroke of the oars another wave rose before us, greater than the first, as clear as a crystal; from it rose a vapor that caused our eyes to smart.

As before, we hung for an instant suspended above the deep, and then the wave rolled on to break roaring on the sand.

"The wave of tears!" said my uncle, "Open your eyes, Thomas."

The boat swept on and the fatal spot was almost passed, when we saw enkindling the whole horizon, the terrible wave of blood coming toward us and drawing us into its horrible embrace with an irresistable power. Oh! my friends, it would be impossible to describe to you the terrible anxiety, the overwhelming fear that held us all in that supreme moment.

"Strike firmly in the middle!" cried my uncle, crossing himself. I closed my eyes, and with a trembling hand I buried my spear in the midst of the bloody wave.

A lamentable groan was heard. The waves, parting before our prow, broke furiously on the shore and covered it with bloody foam.

That day our arms ached with the labor of emptying our nets of fish, and I assure you we took enough to make up for our losses during the whole winter.

But when we came home late that night my uncle and I sought in vain for two loved faces. Neither my aunt nor my cousin were there. We exchanged uneasy glances. My uncle asked for his wife and learned that she was suffering. "I feared it," he said, hastening toward her chamber, and I followed him in, weeping. She lay on her bed with her face to the wall. When she heard us enter, she raised her head, cast on her husband a look of inextinguishable hate, covered her face with a sheet, and died with a fearful groan.

Her unhappy husband cast his arms about her body, and sought by his caresses to bring her back to life again. The sight pierced my heart, and I went out of the house.

I met my cousin. A horrible transformation had taken place in her. Her angelic look was displaced by a frightful expression of bitterness. Seized with nervous trembling, I asked her what was the matter.

"Curses on you, assassin!" she replied, and vanished from sight.

I ran to the shore to find Bilinch.

"Who," I asked him, "were the two women you saw last night?"

"Marie and her mother," he answered in a low voice.

My poor uncle took to his bed a few days later, and soon died of grief and chagrin.

INTEGRITY.

Integrity of purpose is a noble characteristic. It casts into the shade mere differences of opinion, because it aims, under all circumstances, to speak truthfully and act honestly.

That is the only correct standard, and applying as it does to every relationship and occupation of life, it appears nowhere more grandly than in the conduct of political and public affairs.

Diversity of partisan sentiment and name cannot be justly denounced as unpatriotic, unless evil designs and corrupt practices bear sway.

Men may be Democrats or Republicans, Greenbackers or Prohibitionists, and urge their respective partisan views and measures with intensity of zeal, and still be equally patriotic, provided, they yield to others the same free right of judgment each claims for himself.

The public official, be he law-maker or law-administrator, who faithfully discharges duty and dedicates thereto his every ability, is worthy of honorable mention and popular approval.

Every fair minded opponent, however widely he may differ politically with such a public servant, will accord to him confidence and respect.

The welfare of the country demands such and only such officials, from the highest down to the lowest.

Men who will fearlessly perform their duty, not for personal aggrandizement, but for the public good:

GROVER CLEVELAND, President of the United States, justly wears that distinguished honor.

DODGERS.

A bill providing for practical instruction in the schools of the District of Columbia and in those of all the Territories and Reservations under control of the United States Government, relative to the effects of liquor and narcotics upon the human system, recently passed Congress, received the prompt approval of President Cleveland, and is therefore a national law.

That bill was personally advocated by Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, on behalf of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, as a wise and important measure for the advancement of useful knowledge, and calculated to substantially benefit human kind, regardless of class, color or condition, and totally devoid of party politics.

It passed the Senate unanimously, and the House by a vote of 209 ayes to only 8 nays, 105 members being absent or not voting. The 209 affirmative votes came from 114 Democrats and 95 Republicans; the 8 negatives were all Democrats, and the 105 absentees comprised 60 Democrats and 45 Republicans.

Of the New Jersey delegation Messrs. Green, Phelps, McAdoo and Buchanan were properly at their posts of duty and voted for the bill, but Messrs. Hines, Lehlbach and Pidcock were among the missing at roll-call.

Where were those 105 absentees?

It is reasonable to suppose that some of them were necessarily absent from their seats in the House, yet it is not unjust to believe and declare that the major part of them were cowardly dodgers. They could not have claimed to be paired, because the question at issue was totally clear of partisanship, and to imagine that such a crowd of stay-aways were laid up with the mumps, dumps or some other contagious disease, is absurd enough to make the whole medical fraternity roar with laughter.

They were dodgers.

And we hope the constituents of each one will note down the fact.

We respect the legislator, Congressional or State, be his judgment what it may, who manfully and intelligently crystallizes sentiment into a voting yes or no upon any and every question that may arise, but for a dodger we cannot do other than entertain contempt.

The place for him is at home trying to walk a picket fence.

His death was very peaceful. The funeral will take place on Saturday morning at the Cathedral. Mr. Kelly was born April 21, 1821, in Hester street, N. Y. city.

There was nothing to prevent the New Jersey Republicans from giving practical effect to their proposed "anti-saloon" policy by enacting a prohibitory local option law at the extra June session of the Legislature. They had a majority of both Houses and could even pass any bill over the Governor's veto. Their back-down on this question was most complete, and the wisdom of the Prohibitionists in not entrusting their principles to a party supposed to be controlled by moral ideas, is to be commended.

With the issue of May 31 of the New Brunswick Fredonian, Mr. John F. Babcock, who has been connected with that journal since 1852, ceased his connection as Editor. In a lengthy article Mr. Babcock gives a resume of his editorial experience as proprietor of the Fredonian and says:

"When I sold out my control of the Fredonian to 'The Fredonian Publishing Company' I certainly expected to remain as its Editor. The Board of Managers, however, has seen fit to order otherwise without giving me any reason therefor, and as power is greater than desire—especially when the power is concentrated in a Board of Managers, and the desire is only mine—I submit as gracefully as possible to the power which considers it best that I should retire."

The editorial fraternity of New Jersey will be sorry to learn of Mr. Babcock's retirement from active duty. He has been identified with the Association so long and has so faithfully labored for its best interests that his influence as a leading member of that organization will be missed. We wish the veteran publisher of New Jersey increased prosperity in whatever pursuit he may engage in.

THE PRESIDENT MARRIED.

The much talked of marriage between President Grover Cleveland and Miss Frances Folsom, occurred at the White House Wednesday evening at 7 o'clock. The marriage was a quiet and private one, only the members of the Cabinet and their wives, and near relatives of Miss Folsom being present. The ceremony was solemnized in the Blue Room by the Rev. Dr. Byron Sunderland. The floral decorations were immense and elegant. Immediately after the marriage the President and his bride left the White House for Deer Park, Maryland, where they will spend a week's honeymoon. The Nation extends congratulations to the newly wedded couple. This is the first time a President of the United States has been married in the White House.

Miss Folsom, whose Christian name, by the way, is not Frankie, but Frank, was born in Buffalo, N. Y., in the year 1864, and will be twenty-two years old July 21. She was born in the house No. 168 Edward street. As a child she attended Mme. Brecker's French kindergarten. At the time of Mr. Folsom's death in 1875 the family were living at the Tifft House. Mrs. and Miss Folsom were in Medina when this sad accident happened. After the funeral they went to Medina, where Mrs. Harmon, Mrs. Folsom's widowed mother, resided. The Harmon family had a good social position and owned considerable valuable real estate, including milling property. When in Medina Miss Folsom was a pupil at the high school. Returning to Buffalo in a few years, Frank entered the Central School. One of the Central School teachers has said of her that Frank learned readily and seemed to remember equally well, and that she "always put a little of herself into her recitations." While enrolled as a pupil at the Central her name was often transferred to the boys' lists, and so, in order that it should sound less masculine, she temporarily inserted the initial letter C. after Frank, calling herself Frank Clara. This explains why her name now often erroneously appears with the initial C. She was a regular attendant of the Central Presbyterian Church, of which she is still a member. Her Central School certificate admitted her to the Sophomore class at Wells College, which she entered without preliminary examination in the middle of the school year. Miss Folsom was a great favorite at Wells College, and her power of winning the love and unswerving allegiance of many friends is a direct inheritance from her father, for a more genial, generous-hearted and companionable man than the late Oscar Folsom never lived. Her tall, commanding figure, frankness and sincerity made her the queen of the school. She was graduated from Wells in June, 1885, her graduating essay taking the form of a story. The flowers sent to her nearly every week, beginning about the second year of her college life, from the Executive Mansion at Albany, and the particularly abundant supply that came from the White House conservatories when she was graduated, was but one of many little attentions paid her, the knowledge of which her college mates spread abroad on scattering to their distant homes for the summer vacations, thus exciting public gossip concerning Miss Folsom's relations to the President. Miss Folsom has always been in the habit of spending her summers in Folsomdale, Wyoming county, two miles out of Cowlesville, at the residence of her late grandfather, Col. John B. Folsom. It is a typical homestead, a rambling farmhouse, set down amid the lovely scenery of the valley. Sundry newspaper reports have made Mr. Cleveland the benefactor of Miss Folsom in a financial sense. Such statements are absolutely untrue. Her mother's income has always been ample for their support, and any extra funds needed were always to be had from the grandfather, or "Papa John," as Miss Folsom called him, and whose recent death will make her the heiress of a large property. Miss Folsom's character is that of an unspoiled, ingenious girl, full of self-possession and with too much common sense to be overcome by her sudden elevation. Her chief characteristic is intense loyalty to her mother, who is a charming woman. Perfect confidence and sympathy exist between them. Miss Folsom's life has had its deeper side. She is old for her years and too observing and tactful to make many mistakes, which, even should they occur, would be forgiven in one so young and inexperienced. One of her accomplishments is a rare gift for letter writing. In dress her taste is very simple. Miss Folsom, outside of a very limited circle of intimate friends, is little acquainted in Buffalo and has never mingled in society there, because since she was a school-girl she has never spent but a day or two at a time in Buffalo. Her only regret at this moment must be that her father is not living to be present at the marriage of his only child to the man who stuck closer to him than a brother.

The New Jersey State Prohibition Convention assembled at Newark, May 27th, and nominated Gen. Clinton B. Fiske for Governor.

A curious dispute about the essentials of an oath was settled by Vice Chancellor Bird at Trenton. A lady, a witness in a divorce case, laid her hand on the book and took the usual oath, except that she did not kiss the Bible. Counsel on the opposite side contended that the oath was invalid. After a sharp argument, Vice Chancellor Bird declared the kiss unnecessary.

It is amusing to notice the efforts made by our Republican State cotemporaries to create the impression that the Democratic party is afflicted by internal dissensions and warring factions. Aware of the real troubles and lack of harmony in their own party, they would fain have it believed that the Democratic party is suffering in the same way. Some of the newspapers will have it that the Democracy are engaged in an active hunt for an available candidate for Governor. The truth is, and well Republican editors know it, that in the Democratic party there is plenty of material of recognized ability—men of more than ordinary calibre and who would honor the position. There is no rivalry whatever in regard to the matter; but there is a general and praiseworthy desire to meet the views of the greatest number in the selection of a candidate. Never has there been a more fervent desire to nominate a candidate whom both the party and the people of the State will be proud of than that existing at the present time; and never has there been prevalent a more general conviction of the party's coming triumph. This of itself augurs well for success; while at the same time it is a matter of annoyance and trouble to its opponents.—Camden Democrat.

Culver Barcalow, the well-known New Jersey Republican lobbyist and politician, died at his home in Somerville suddenly on Tuesday evening last, from paralysis of the heart. No man in the State had gained such popularity as a lobbyist than "Cul" Barcalow. Despite his tricky modes of serving his party and the Pennsylvania Railroad, his word was his bond. Mr. Barcalow was 65 years of age, and leaves three children, one son and two daughters.

Surface Indications

What a miner would very properly term "surface indications" of what is beneath, are the Pimples, Sties, Sore Eyes, Boils, and Cutaneous Eruptions with which people are annoyed in spring and early summer. The effete matter accumulated during the winter months, now makes its presence felt, through Nature's endeavors to expel it from the system. While it remains, it is a poison that festers in the blood and may develop into Scrofula. This condition causes derangement of the digestive and assimilatory organs, with a feeling of enervation, languor, and weariness—often falsely spoken of as "only spring fever." These are evidences that Nature is not able, unaided, to throw off the corrupt atoms which weaken the vital forces. To regain health, Nature must be aided by a thorough blood-purifying medicine; and nothing else is so effective as

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

which is sufficiently powerful to expel from the system even the taint of Hereditary Scrofula.

The medical profession indorse AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, and many attestations of the cures effected by it come from all parts of the world. It is, in the language of the Hon. Francis Jewett, ex-State Senator of Massachusetts and ex-Mayor of Lowell, "the only preparation that does real, lasting good."

Did anybody ever hear of such a thing since the world began? It could not be done if it were not for the fact that 20,000 people attend daily! Pavilion three times larger than last year. A few choice Reserved Seats 25 cents extra. Our Circus is as large and good as any ever seen on earth, being full of Brilliant Equestrian Feats by Distinguished Performers from all parts of the world. The Menagerie is full of Rare Living Wild Animals and contains 12 Performing Elephants. This is absolutely as many as now exhibited by any other show in America without a solitary exception. Among its numerous attractions is A MILK WHITE BABY BUFFALO, born in Philadelphia, Sunday, May 16 and named after the Quaker City. Also, MARTINHO'S GREAT TEN HORSE ACT, accomplished by no other Circus Rider in the World. THE ONE RING CIRCUS PREFERRED. Why introduce three or four rings and ask spectators to convert their optics into kaleidoscopes, and order out of a confusion of glittering generalities? The one ring is infinitely better and more satisfactory. A circus is a circus the world over. One ring, filled with first-class artists, is in every way superior, each act being critically observed and fully enjoyed by both children and grown people. The Wonderful [illegible] Dog Circus will please the children immensely. Spacious Pavilions. Excellent Music. Grimaldian Wits and Comic Clowns. Good seats for everybody. $5,000 will be forfeited to any local Charity if we do not give as good a Single Ring Performance as any Circus in the World. Only think! 12 Elephants for less than a cent a piece! The most overwhelming success ever known. 100,000 people visit O'Brien's Popular Price Show every week. Excursion Tickets, good on all trains over the [illegible] and other roads, will be sold at Reduced Rates to and from Plainfield, on the day of Exhibition, giving everybody an opportunity of seeing Absolutely the Largest and Best Popular Priced Show in the World for a mere trifle. Will also Exhibit in ELIZABETH, Wednesday, June 9.

REGULAR monthly meeting of the Common Council, next Monday evening.

THE Mayor and Council of the Borough of North Plainfield, hold their regular meeting, this evening.

THE remains of Isaac Pruden, a former resident of Plainfield, was brought here for interment yesterday.

THE Rev. W. R. Richards preached to the members of the G. A. R. Post, in the Crescent avenue church, last Sunday evening.

THE Board of Managers of the Plainfield Fire Department holds its regular meeting for June, Tuesday evening of next week.

THE New Democratic postmaster at Hackettstown, brother Rittenhouse of the Gazette, was the other day the recipient of a thirteen pound "mail." Mother and boy are both doing well.

NOT only does the dog ordinance provide for the shooting of your unmuzzled dog, but you may be arrested and on conviction fined ten dollars for permitting the animal to run at large.

AT five o'clock in the evening of Wednesday next, at Grace church, is announced to take place the wedding of Miss Nellie DeGraff, of First place, and Mr. Frank Nelson Doubleday.

THE revival meetings that have been conducted in this city by Major Whittle, closed on Thursday evening of last week, in the First Baptist church. The number of converts during the season reached a total of about three hundred.

THE death occurred during last Thursday night of Judge Caleb Titsworth of Newark, brother of Dr. B. Titsworth and Mrs. W. B. Maxson of this city. The deceased was present here at the recent funeral of the late Mr. Maxson.

ANOTHER proof that petitions accomplish nothing, is the fact that the 5:15 train from New York to this city with only a stop at Elizabeth, which so many signed for, does not appear on the newly arranged and Summer time table.

AT the P. H. S. Commencement in Music Hall on the evening of the 24th inst., as announced by us last week, the address of the occasion will be delivered by Col. Mason W. Tyler. This selection displays both good taste and good judgment.

OVER-THE-BROOK they give the poor dog a show. Any of them found running at large without a muzzle during the months of June, July, August and September, are first impounded for forty-eight hours, and if not redeemed are then killed.

NOT alone the churches, but the whole community will feel the good effect of the revival that has just closed in our city. And yet let us hope, not closed either. May the new converts keep up the new interest in righteousness that has sprung up.

AT a meeting of the Board of Managers of the Dime Savings Institution of Plainfield, held Monday evening last, the following named gentlemen were duly elected managers to fill vacancies: John W. Murray, J. Frank Hubbard, G. W. Rockfellow, Theo. F. French, F. H. Gardner.

THE married and single men of the Central Co.'s works of this city began a game of ball on Monday morning last, but, fortunately for the former, the rain stopped the match at the end of the second inning when the score stood fourteen for the bachelors and twelve for the benedicts.

AT the regular meeting of the Common Council, next Monday evening, the proposed ordinance for the suppression of dogs will undoubtedly be adopted. Thereafter, the police are authorized to shoot any dog found running at large without a muzzle during the months of June, July, August, and September.

THERE are lots of situations whereon to locate the picturesque and public cemetery our city is so much in need of. And we know of lots of capitalists in the city who would subscribe for stock (if a stock company should be formed) or contribute money outright for the purpose if built from subscriptions.

THIS afternoon and evening the Ladies' Aid Society will continue its strawberry and iced cream festival in the parlors of the Methodist church. It is the first but not the least of its kind—a thorough success in every particular and to all of which a ticket at fifty cents admits you and includes refreshments as well.

PARTIES connected with the Plainfield Electric Light Co. were in town on Saturday last, looking for a suitable location for the station of the company. There are several places under consideration, and a selection will shortly be made. The work of erecting poles, wires, etc., will go forward while the building is in process of erection.

THE remains of William Reynolds were brought to this city from Elizabeth on Monday last, and interred in the Presbyterian cemetery. Mr. Reynolds was a son-in-law of the late Geo. B. Vermeule of Plainfield. Deceased has been for many years a trusted and valued employee in the Elizabeth Post Office, under both Republican and Democratic administrations. He leaves a wife and two young children.

THE grounds of the Union and Middlesex Agricultural Society have been used as pleased whoever pleased for some time past until the owners, whose money pays to keep the grounds in order and out of the hands of the sheriff, propose to stop the public occupancy and imposition. Tickets will be issued to stockholders for their own use and to "members" who by the payment of a small fee may enjoy the privileges and conveniences of the track.

THE correspondent who writes and asks that we publish articles of the same nature in relation to the improvements in the city of Plainfield, as those recently appearing in these columns regarding North Plainfield's progressiveness, is thus shown to be no regular subscriber to THE CONSTITUTIONALIST. As improvements are weekly made the record is published by us, so all our correspondent need do is to borrow a file and read up the information therein on the subject he mentions.

THE new Summer time table records no new changes of advantage in the running of trains between this city and New York. The express from Plainfield for Philadelphia, however, that formerly left at twelve o'clock, is now fifteen minutes earlier and thus there is no danger of missing connection for Baltimore and Washington. The same number of Sunday trains are arranged, but no accommodation is yet provided for those who might want to leave Somerville for this city or New York after 8 o'clock p. m. during week days.

THE Supper of the Class of '89 of Rutgers College will be given at the Hotel Netherwood, this (Thursday) evening.

THE fine bronze cannon and trappings used by the G. A. R. Post in Plainfield on Decoration Day, was loaned to them by kind permission of Gov. Abbett.

THE second musicale by the pupils of Mr. and Mrs. Carl Feininger, at Reform Hall, next Monday evening, promises to be as rich a treat as that of last year.

THE Hotel Netherwood has secured a competent and courteous clerk in Mr. P. B. Wright of this city, who has recently accepted such position for the season.

JOHN C. LUCAS, a Democratic soldier, has been appointed to fill the vacancy of general delivery clerk in the Elizabeth post office caused by the death of Wm. Reynolds.

THE Public Library will be open hereafter between the hours of 9 and 12 a. m., 2 to 6 and 7 30 to 9 p. m. The Art Gallery will be open from 10 to 12 a. m. and from 3 to 5 p. m.

MR. ANDREW CARNEY has just purchased the property on Emily street adjoining his mother's, and now occupied by Mr. T. R. Crosley. He will take up his residence there next Spring.

WARREN MISSION CHAPEL, North Plainfield, is to be enlarged, by an addition of a twenty-foot extension. The work is to commence on Monday under the supervision of Job Male, Esq., and Jeremiah Manning, builder.

OF the Plainfield Bicyclists that started on the Decoration Day tour, only Roger Murray, Frank Van Buren, Joseph Sandford and Charles Stover rode their wheels home from Elizabeth. The train was good enough for the others.

IN this issue we print the revised time table according to the changes that went into effect last Sunday. A number of the merchants of the city had the new table printed on their business cards by us a day or two before it was issued.

SHERIFF STILES chained seven together and took them from the jail at Elizabeth to the State Prison at Trenton, last Wednesday. This is probably the largest number of convicts ever "taken from the county jail" of Union, at one time.

TO-MORROW afternoon at two o'clock, a children's fair for the benefit of the "Fresh Air Fund" will be held at the corner of Plainfield avenue and Eighth street. Miss Genevieve Dabiel and Master Hugh Potts have charge of the event.

MR. AND MRS. L. B. BOICE, of North Plainfield have left for Asbury Park. Their many friends wish for them an enjoyable season and trust that on the sea shore Mr. Boice will permanently recover his former good health.

THE programme of exercises at the Seminary, already published by us, has not been changed but will be given next Tuesday evening as announced. The results of Miss Kenyon's and Mr. Venino's teachings, are certain of commendation.

AT last the District Messenger Co. has appointed a Superintendent of its business in this city who is capable of filling the position to the satisfaction of the community. Councilman Goddard succeeds the "late" Mr. Munday as such officer.

THERE is already noticeable a great difference in the number of dogs at large on our streets. The city was over-run with seemingly homeless animals until we called attention to the proposed ordinance for their extermination. The few now seen are almost unanimously muzzled.

AT the first annual walk of the Magnolia Social Club, all of which was held in Manning's Hall, during the evening of Decoration Day, was quite successful. The cup was awarded to Mrs. William Mayhew, while the cane was captured by Mr. James Potter, coachman for Mr. George Watson.

THE Marshals over-the-brook propose to put a stop to the Sunday amusements of those so fond of playing cards along the banks of the stream and in the sight of church-comers and goers. The officers made a raid on the offenders last Sunday and scattered them right and left—through the bushes and into the water. Next time they'll take them in.

AT the annual meeting of the Ladies' Auxiliary Board, of Muhlenberg Hospital, held May 27, the following ladies were elected officers for the ensuing year: President—Mrs. Rowland Cox; Vice President—Mrs. Samuel Huntington; Secretary—Mrs. T. H. Tomlinson; Treasurer—Mrs. H. D. Burlingham; Auditors—Mrs. W. E. Lowe, Miss Mary Tweedy.

SENSATIONAL newsmongers started public curiosity concerning the recent death of Mr. Lawrence O'Neill of this city, and a post mortem examination and coroner's inquest, as we recorded, followed. Anonymous letters have since kept the matter alive in spite of the fact that there is not the slightest evidence or probability of death resulting from other than natural causes.

THE lot of fish that Messrs. Haynes and Teel captured in the waters of Lake Hopatcong during the hours of Decoration Day, would fill many a basket with game and many a sportsman's heart with envy. The gallant Station Master caught the biggest—a pickerel that measured two feet and one inch, from tip to tip, and weighed just four pounds and three-quarters.

IN our advertising columns the New York Portrait Company, North avenue, Force's Hotel Block, through its agent, Mr. A. H. Heimer, gives notice of its intended departure from our city. The very correct crayon portraits of some of our leading citizens executed by the above company, should remind those contemplating having work done, not to put it off until too late.

THERE was no quorum present at the meeting of the Board of Directors of Music Hall, called for Thursday evening of last week; consequently, no organization for the coming season was had, and the former officers hold over until successors are chosen. It was thought that a number of the Board would decline to serve another year, but, so far, Mr. Geo. H. Chapman is the only member who has expressed such intention.

WE are requested to shout "Oh, for a public cemetery," but we can not. We intend to keep working for it until accomplished, but personally we are not so desirous that we should, week after week, wish for one. Of course we shall be glad to know that when we die, a grave in a more desirable and attractive spot than any now in existence in the city, will hold us—"we won't see it, but it will be there just the same"—yet we don't "hanker" after it.

THAT veteran actor whom all without exception admire, Mr. John Gilbert, has been spending a few days at the residence of his sister, Mrs. W. L. Gavett, of West Second street. Mrs. Gilbert was also with him. Mr. Gilbert is probably the oldest actor at present on the American stage. He is 77 years of age and was born on the same street as Charlotte Cushman. The other famous actors of his day have long since passed away, but he is as vigorous and powerful as ever.

THE Board of Health is doing all that is possible in the way of cleaning up before the beginning of hot weather, and it would be a great help towards such result if the public would cooperate. If any citizen knows of a nuisance that should be remedied or extinguished, notice to such effect sent to the Mayor would be at once attended to. The name of the informant would be kept secret, but the information would call the attention of the authorities to the concealed pests that might otherwise escape attention and breed plague.

A STRAWBERRY and iced cream festival will be held in Warren Mission Chapel on Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, June 8 and 9, in aid of the Dunham Good-Will Choristers.

MR. NOAH W. PIKE of this city has accepted an invitation from the Y. M. C. A. of New York city, to deliver an address upon the temperance and revival work here this evening.

THE strawberry and ice cream season is upon us, and we know of no more comfortable or pleasant place in the city in which to sit and enjoy these luxuries than at the old-established and well-known "Compton's," No. 26 W. Front street. Pleasant rooms and genuine cream, with luscious berries and pure cream, should be an inducement for all lovers of such to visit the place.

THE funeral of Mrs. Edward Ryder occurred to-day (Thursday) at 2.30 p. m., from her late residence, corner Central avenue and Third street, the services being conducted by Rev. Dr. Ketcham and Rev. Mr. Richards. Mrs. Ryder was the daughter of T. J. Gillies, Esq., and daughter-in-law of ex-Councilman S. C. Ryder, and died under peculiarly sad circumstances. The afflicted family and relatives have the heartfelt sympathy of all in their bereavement. In the death of Mrs. Ryder, Warren Mission Chapel loses one of its most efficient workers.

Post Office.

In consequence of a change in the railroad time table and delivery of mails, the post office will be open on Sundays from 10 to 11 o'clock a. m., until further notice.

Thanking the Public.

The Memorial Detail of Post 73 G. A. R., hereby publicly thank those of our citizens, who unsolicited contributed to our fund for the proper observance of Memorial Day.

GEO. W. MOORE, Sec. and Treas.

Closing Day at the Industrial Shool.

The children are anticipating their annual entertainment and festival, to be given next Saturday afternoon, June 5, at 2:30 o'clock, in the Warren Mission Chapel. All who are interested in this branch of industry are cordially invited to be present. Rev. Mr. Richards is expected to address the children, and, by request, the May Pole exercises given last year is to be repeated. It is requested that all donations of cake for the entertainment be sent to the Mission Chapel at any time after 10 a. m.

The Season's Trotting Meeting.

The Union and Middlesex Agricultural Society at its last year's trotting meeting on its grounds on Park avenue, brought together some of the best and fastest horses that traveled the New Jersey circuit. The races were exciting and financially successful, so they are to be repeated this season with the exception of the County race which will be omitted and, probably, another substituted. The amount of premiums will also remain the same. The dates selected are August 31st and the following two days, September 1st and 2d.

Sunday at Holy Cross.

Mr. Charles Ward, rector of the Episcopal church at Englewood, N. J., and formerly of the Church of the Holy Cross, North Plainfield, exchanged pulpits with Rev. T. Logan Murphy on Sunday last. Mr. Ward preached an able sermon to a large congregation in the morning, many who knew him years ago when Rector being present. He took for his text part of the 17th verse, 2nd chapter 1st Peter: "Honor all Men;" and in the evening he preached a most eloquent sermon, taking as his text the 2nd and 3rd verses of the 3rd chapter of Genesis: "And the woman said unto the serpent we may eat of the fruit of the trees of the garden, but of the fruit of the tree which is in the midst of the garden, God hath said, ye shall not eat of it, neither shall ye touch it, lest ye die."

O'Brien's Metropolitan Circus.

On Tuesday of next week John O'Brien's new great metropolitan circus and menagerie, which is said to be much larger and better than ever, will exhibit in this city. Mr. O'Brien has won his way to popular favor by being the first circus manager to inaugurate cheap prices. What is a marvel to everybody is to know how such a gigantic concern can afford so much for such a trifling price of admission, viz., ten cents! Twenty five cents extra will secure a choice reserved chair, of course; but this does not imply that everybody will not get good seats. The circus department is declared to be as good as the very best in the country. The department of zoology is likewise full of rare and valuable living wild animals from all parts of the world, containing among other attractions, twelve performing elephants. The tents are unusually large, having a seating capacity for fifteen thousand. If it were not for this fact, and their being filled daily, no manager in the country could afford to give such a stupendous show for less than fifty cents admission. The Washington National Republican of May 5th closes a lengthy notice of the entertainment at the national capitol in the following language:

> "The first performance of John O'Brien's circus, given last night filled the large tent at Capitol Park grounds to overflowing, and delighted everybody. A feature of the entertainment was that everything was done that was promised, and a little more. As a whole, as good a circus as has been exhibited here for many years. The performing elephants, the bare-back riding, and the magnificent four-horse act were all that could be expected. Mr. O'Brien has gained the public confidence by telling the truth about his circus, and you can see it all for ten cents, too, and take your whole family for half a dollar."

The Amateur Theatricals.

The hundreds that had been awaiting the event with more or less interest and curiosity, gathered in the parquette and dress circle of the Music Hall auditorium, Thursday evening of last week, and filled every seat on the lower floor. So large an audience of the wealthy, but refined, society of this city, Westfield, Evona, Grant avenue and way stations, is seldom seen together; and, consequently, they deserved better treatment than to be urged by advertisement to be in their seats promptly and be tortured by the worst music that ever an orchestra—amateur or otherwise—accomplished. The stage setting of the opening—an act of minstrelsy—was quite attractive, and the efforts of those who took part showed an earnestness of purpose that was worthy of greater success. Mr. Fred Green was really good in every act he attempted, and Mr. Philip Macintyre, also, was much better than the "jokes" of the occasion. What might have been achieved by the voices of the rest of the company, was overcome by the accompaniments, and especially in the chorus, "Fairy Moonlight," not an instrument nor a voice was in harmony.

The dramatic efforts were more satisfactory. Miss Maude Bowers again evidenced the ease of manner, expression, power, and "stage presence" that she possesses. Mr. D Edgar Anthony was an agreeable surprise in so far as he sustained his parts with more real grace than most others of his sex, in spite of a tendency to contortion of body. Probably Mr. Harte as "Kerry" was perfection by comparison with a few we could—but won't—mention. But Harte is not an amateur and not a novice. Miss Ethel Bowers, Mrs. Green and Miss Cooper (the latter of Westfield) seriously carried out an admirable determination to do their best.

Lecture on the Holy Land.

In consequence of an accident happening to the mechanical part of Dr. Hasbrouck's illustrated lecture on Tuesday evening, that gentleman was compelled to postpone his interesting lecture to Friday evening of this week. Those who have never seen the beautiful views of Dr. Hasbrouck's illustrated lectures should avail themselves of this last opportunity.

Hospital Election.

At the late election of officers for Muhlenberg Hospital the following persons were chosen:

President—J. Evarts Tracy; 1st Vice President—W. Rockhill Potts; 2d Vice President—Rufus K. Case; Secretary—William R. Cock; Treasurer—Geo. H. Goddard.

Managing Committee—W. R. Cock, Rufus K. Case, E. W. Erickson, John H. Cuthbert, Chas. Schipper.

Finance Committee—John M. Whiton, W. R. Potts, Samuel Huntington, W. E. Lowe, J. H. Jackson.

To The Public.

We, the undersigned, respectfully announce to the public and the citizens of Plainfield that we will shortly issue the Plainfield City Directory we promised some few weeks ago. Having received a letter from R.S. Dillon & Co., of Albany, New York, stating that we had represented ourselves as being connected with him by canvassing with his book, we wish to publicly announce for the benefit of the above named firm that the accusation is entirely untrue, and we will deliver, without charge, to any who will say we represented ourselves as being connected with the firm of R. S. Dillon & Co., or to any who will say we used a book of the above named firm in canvassing, a City Directory of Plainfield.

The Railroads Must Pay.

The decision of the Court of Errors and Appeals in the well-known railroad tax cases, was delivered on Saturday last at Trenton, and proved to be, as had been generally expected, a reversal of the Supreme Court's opinion of last winter. The latter opinion which was delivered by Chief Justice Beasley, declared the legislative tax act of 1884 unconstitutional. The opinion of the Court of Errors was read by Chancellor Runyon in the presence of a large assemblage of prominent counsel. Among the number were Attorney-General Stockton, ex Chancellor Williamson, ex-Governor Bedle, Thomas N. McCarter, Counsellor De Forrest and G. D. W. Vroom. Senator Fish and Assemblyman Corbin, Parker and Besson, were also present. Twenty-eight railroad companies are affected by the decision. The Chancellor purposely exempted the Morris and Essex, the Morris Canal and Banking Company, the Paterson and Hudson, and the Paterson and Ramapo railroads, because they claim to have irrepealable contracts. The question of irrepealability has not yet been discussed, but at the Attorney-General's suggestion, it was set down for a hearing at the next term of Court. In the twenty-eight other cases alluded to, the Chancellor allowed Attorney-General Stockton's motion for judgment to be entered and collections enforced. Chancellor Runyon's opinion was brief and clear. Concurrent opinions were read by Judges Dixon, Scudder, Parker, Reed and Paterson. The only dissenting opinion was by Judge Depue, who believes the tax law unconstitutional. After the reading of the opinions Chancellor Runyon took the Court's vote on two propositions: First, shall the judgment of the Supreme Court be affirmed as to the tax for county and municipal purposes; and secondly, shall it be sustained as to the tax for county and municipal purposes. On the first proposition only Judge Depue voted in the affirmative. Those in the negative were Judges Dixon, Parker, Reed, Scudder, Brown, Clement, Cole, McGregor, Paterson, Whittaker and the Chancellor. On the second proposition the affirmative votes were cast by Judges Depue, Dixon and Reed, and the negative vote by Judges Parker, Scudder, Brown, Clement, Cole, McGregor, Patterson, Whittaker and the Chancellor. Chief Justice Beasley and Judges Magie and Knapp, who sat in the Supreme Court, did not appear in the Court of Errors. Neither did Judge Van Syckle who holds stock in the Lehigh Valley railroad. It is said that some of the companies will appeal to the United States Supreme Court. If so, the cases will occupy some years probably.

The Special Session.

The State Legislature re-convened in extra session at Trenton on Tuesday, June 1st. Fifty-four members responded to the roll-call in the Assembly. Mr. Corbin presented the report of the Special Joint Committee on Taxation, which was a brief document merely mentioning the decision of the Court of Errors given on Saturday last, and adding that this rendered unnecessary any action on the part of the Legislature. Four new bills, of unimportance were introduced and Gov. Abbett sent in his veto of four bills also from special messages, one of which was as follows:

> "The decision of the Court of Errors and Appeals has confirmed the constitutionality of the act entitled 'An act for the taxation of railroad and canal property,' approved April 10, 1884. This will, under an economical administration of public affairs, forever obviate the necessity of raising any money from our people by a direct State tax, and establishes the policy recommended in my inaugural and annual message. I am, however, still of the opinion that 'All property should bear its equal share of the public burdens.' This principle ought to embrace property used for railroad and canal purposes. The act of April 10, 1884, gives this class of property special advantages by reason of the limitation upon taxation for local purposes, contained in section 12 of that act. I recommend the passage of an act amending section 12, by striking out the limitation of one per cent. and changing it so as to make railroad and canal companies pay full local taxes, subject to the proviso contained in the same section protecting the companies from paying in the aggregate more than individuals would pay on other property taxed under the General Tax Act of April 11, 1866, and the acts amendatory thereof."

The vetoes were laid over till Wednesday morning when, according to Speaker Armstrong, the local option bill also will be pressed.

The Senate went into Executive session and considered the following nominations: John Carpenter, Jr., of Hunterdon county, as Riparian Commissioner, in place of Arthur G. Ogilby, whose office is declared vacant, because Mr. Ogilby has been ordered to be confined into a lunatic asylum; Henry F. Gotes, of Essex county, as Judge of the First District Court of Newark, in place of J. J. Fort; Robert S. Woodruff, Jr., of Mercer county, as Trustee of the New Jersey School for Deaf Mutes. All were referred to the Judiciary Committee. The Senate then adjourned until Wednesday mornidg at 10 o'clock.

On Wednesday the House passed the Morris & Essex bill, which provides for an investigation of the report of the Morris & Essex railroad's alleged fraudulent tax returns to the Comptroller. The Senate afterward passed the bill. The Local Option bill was brought up by Speaker Armstrong and defeated by a vote of 22 to 31. A number of other bills were passed. The Senate declined to go into executive session to consider the Governor's nominations sent in the day before. Both branches adjourned in the afternoon.

Memorial Services and Ceremonies.

Decoration Day of last year was stormy in the morning and worse in the afternoon, while this year a better state of affairs existed. Although in the morning some rain fell, yet the afternoon was more propitious and the parade took place without anything to mar its beauty. Very early in the day, details from the Winfield Scott Post, of this city, decorated the following graves—the same as those of last year, with the addition of Dr. Burlingham, and Messrs. James Gunn and Darius Martin, who had since died:

The procession formed on Front street early in the afternoon, and traversed the line of march published by us last week. The parade was composed of members of the Fire Department, city officials, stage loads of prettily dressed maidens, the G. A. R. Post and other features, led by The Crescent band and the drum corps. The exercises that followed at Music Hall were according to the programme which we gave. The address of the day by the Rev. Bradford Cleaver was over an hour in length, and the audience were thoroughly tired before its completion. Had it been shortened by the omission of dead issues, and the spurious tale of one dead General's defamation of another, the Reverend speaker might have gained an admirer among the hundreds in attendance that he displeased. The children sang and the drummers played one of their perfect "solos." On the evening of Memorial Day, Reform Hall was crowded to its utmost capacity, with an audience composed of Plainfield's most respected citizens, who had gathered to witness the services of Garfield League Auxiliary to the G. A. R. The solemn services had been carefully planned and carried out by the Memorial Committee of the League, under the able leadership of Mrs. John H. Mackey, Chairman of the Committee. The hall was simply but tastefully decorated with the National colors. Over the platform appeared the words in black letters on a white ground, "Honor the Nation's Dead." The Girls Auxiliary, under the escort of Comrades House and Titsworth, and preceded by a drummer boy and two sons of veterans carrying flags, marched into the hall from the street singing "Rally Round the Flag." After the opening services, Dr. Vincent made a stirring address, which was frequently interrupted by loud applause. The children did their part well, the feature of the service being the fine performance on the drum of little Allie Squier, aged nine years. The meeting was presided over by the President of the League; the other officers of the society occupied seats on the platform.

WESTFIELD WISPS.

Having been confined to his home for a week by sickness barber Henlekie again perambulates the streets.

The supper and iced cream festival at the Congregational church held on Wednesday evening was largely attended and all the tables liberally patronized.

The trial of an indictment found at last January term of court against Barney McGowan and wife and Bertha Clark for creating a riot or disturbance in Justice Jaques' office last October, took place on Tuesday last at Elizabeth.

The death of Mrs. Elizabeth Arnold, wife of Oscar M. Arnold, occurred on Tuesday, June 1st, at her residence on Central avenue after a lingering illness. The funeral services were held on Thursday evening at 7 o'clock. Interment today in Fairview cemetery.

The Laurel B. B. C. of our town scored two victories on Monday last; in the morning with a Jersey City club at Jersey City, score 13 to 5, and another in the afternoon on the grounds of the Laurel Club on Broad street with a picked nine from Leal's High School at Plainfield, score 19 to 4.

Several of our road overseers have declined to go into the pool in buying the new road machine. There is no doubt if they would consult the taxpayers in their several districts they would agree with the rest of the overseers to purchase the machine and give us good roads on all the districts in our town.

Overseers of roads hereabouts should repair the roads and have them in order for the dressing of crushed stone which they are soon to receive. Broad street, from Elm, towards Fairview cemetery needs its road bed put in proper shape. It is one of our main drives and should have crushed stone on it so as to connect with that on district No. 2 at corner of Chestnut street.

On Decoration Day, May 31, all places of business were closed after 10 a. m. The day passed very quietly. In the morning a detail from Winfield Scott Post, G. A. R., No. 73, of Plainfield, N. J., under the charge of Dr. William Gale, visited Fairview Cemetery and the old Presbyterian church yard, and decorated the graves of all the soldiers of the late war which were buried there, with flowers and flags; also the graves of William Clark, Daniel Baker and Matthew Clark, Revolutionary soldiers, whose remains lie in the old church yard on Mountain avenue. Those who had the services in charge desire to return their thanks to Mr. John S. Berhans, Mr. Alsamora Buck and others, for their contributions of cut flowers and potted plants for the occasion.

Charles Forsyth was arrested on Saturday, May 29, under a warrant issued by Justice Jacques, on complaint of Mr. George Thatcher. Forsyth, who had been in Mr. Thatcher's employ for over a year, was discharged March 9, of the present year. Mr. Thatcher has discovered a number of bills unpaid for which he had given Forsyth the money to pay at the time of their contraction. The complaint upon which he was arrested was a bill for ice of Joseph Perry, who had furnished the same to Mr. Thatcher for the summer of 1885. On Jan. 31, Mr. Thatcher gave Forsyth the money to pay it with, and told him to mail the receipt to him. Forsyth did mail a receipt to the complainant on Feb. 10, but, upon investigation, it was proved that the body of the bill, as well as the name signed to it, was all in Forsyth's handwriting, thereby no doubt making two crimes—one for getting money under false pretenses and the other forgery. The prisoner was committed to the County Jail in default of bail, to await the action of the Grand Jury.

DUNELLEN DOTTINGS.

Mr. Augustus Runyon has nearly completed his new residence.

The want of a large boarding house is plainly apparent by the visits of applicants daily, who have to find quarters in some other part of Jersey-land.

Mr. Cosgrove on Monday evening last ventilated the threadbare subject of the monster—Rum—to a very small audience. Evidently the class he caters to does not reside in this vicinity.

Quite a different congregation assembled on Tuesday evening at the Methodist church, the occasion being a strawberry festival with cream, cakes and the smiles of the fair ones thrown in.

At last! a stone crusher has been placed in position on the slope of the mountain and Mr. Pope expects to get up steam this week. We shall not want for material now to make either good roads, sidewalks or driveways. ABINGER.

NEW MARKET NOTES.

No boats on the lake yet! Why this delay?

On Wednesday evening last the annual strawberry and ice cream festival was held at the Baptist church.

On Thursday next the scholars propose to have an entertainment at the school house, and a good attendance is to hoped for to show the parent's appreciation of progress made under the guidance of their teachers.

On Decoration Day all passed off quietly, with the exception of a large pane of glass being broken in the new post office building by some young men playing ball. The public school was open but the attendance was very small. It is supposed the trustees did not know it was a public holiday.

Last Tuesday afternoon Mr. John Stell, who was accompanied by his wife and daughter May, were thrown out of their buggy by the horse turning sharply into the yard adjoining the Baptist church. Besides the occupants being bruised and injured, the vehicle was demolished and became a total wreck. BROAD BRIM.

SPORTSMEN'S CORNER.

You may now catch black bass in New Jersey—if you can.

It is illegal to kill woodcock until July 14. The penalty for infringement of this law is $15 in each case.

There was a large attendance on the shooting grounds of the Middlesex Gun Club on Decoration Day, and some excellent sweepstake matches indulged in. These grounds are very popular with lovers of the trap and gun.

There were just thirty-eight fishermen at one time engaged in endeavors to entice the wary black bass to impale himself on their hooks, in the waters below the Bound Brook dam, on Decoration Day. Of course, the cunning bass just lay behind big boulders and smiled at the efforts of this army to capture them.

Monday, Decoration Day, was the opening day for black bass fishing, and numbers availed themselves of the holiday to try their luck in the waters of the Raritan and other streams throughout the State. The fish, however, are not yet biting good, and but few catches of bass are reported. The fact of the matter is, the season opens too early. The bass are yet on their spawning beds, and do not take the baited hook as they will a month hence.

MISCELLANEOUS READING.

TURNING THE TABLES.

"Now, what a pleasant evening we can have alone here!" said little Mrs. Grey, dropping the curtain of the cosy sitting room and turning to her husband. "But I would like to go to the opera," she added, her dimpled face lengthening a little. "You have promised, you know, Fred; but I suppose you are tired."

"Yes," yawned her drowsy spouse from his post on the sofa, where, with heels erect after the fashion of the masculine world in general, intent on physical and mental comforts, he lay smoking.

"But never mind," finished Rosa, consolingly, "we can go another time, and I will read to you." And she drew near the shaded light on the centre table and picked up a book. "Hark! there goes the door bell," and she rose to her feet.

"Stay, I will answer it," said Fred, suddenly forgetting his weariness and, springing up, he went into the hall.

"Rosa," he said, presently appearing at the door, "it's Davis. I promised to go with him to B— street to see a sick friend of his. You won't be lonely, pet, with so much to entertain you," and with a kiss he was gone, with her "don't stay too long" ringing after him.

Rosa sat listening till the sound of their footsteps had died away.

"Now, I shall have to spend the evening all alone. Oh, dear," she said, disconsolately.

At that moment she spied a bit of paper lying on the carpet and, stooping, picked it up. It ran as follows:

"Opera at 8 30. Will call. Davis."

"Ah!" said Rosa, her brows contracting as she spoke. "That's it! That detestable Davis—and Fred, too," she finished, the tears springing quickly to her eyes. "Why didn't he say so, if he didn't want me to go? Oh! if I could only go to-night!" And with a little sigh she sat down by the table and looked into the fire.

In a few minutes the door-bell rang again.

"Gintleman to see you, mem," announced Katie.

"Show him in," was her reply. "I wonder who it is? Why, George, when did you come?" was her delighted exclamation an instant later.

Further exclamations were lost in the fond kisses showered upon her from the lips of the tall, bearded young man.

"My darling little sister! So you are glad to see the wanderer?"

"Indeed, I'm delighted," warmly responded Rosa. "How handsome you've grown, George."

"Flatterer," smiled her brother. "But where is Fred? I am anxious to make the acquaintance of that happy brother whom I have never seen. How much I wanted to come to your wedding, dear, you cannot know. I was in Brazil when your message reached me. But what's the matter?" he asked, as he paused, and quickly glanced at Rosa's grieved face. "There, tell me all about it," he said, seeing the tears in her eyes.

Rosa poured the tale into his sympathizing ears, and ended with—

"Oh, George, if we could only go!"

"And we will. How soon can you be ready?" he asked, rising and looking at his watch.

"In fifteen minutes." And Rosa ran blithely away to dress.

There was a slight stir in the house as a couple entered very late they were, and all eyes were centered upon them—the lady slender and graceful, with great azure billows of silk falling about her in shimmering folds, pearls braided low in her brown hair, and a snowy opera cloak drawn carelessly about her shoulders—the gentleman stately, nonchalant, wearing the air of polish attained by foreign travel, and devoted to his companion whom he seated with careful tenderness.

"Grey," said Davis, giving his companion a nudge, "who is that last party that is making such a sensation?"

Grey turned carelessly and looked, the look opened to a stare, and he gazed blankly at the lady who fluttered her spangled white fan with the faintest suggestion of a smile, as she turned to her companion with a remark, which he bent his handsome head low to hear.

Fred turned scarlet, then pale, and clutched Davis fiercely by the arm.

"Why," he gasped, "it's Rosa! And who has she with her?"

"I don't know," returned Davis, indifferently. "Some friend, probably. Sit down, Grey; don't make a fool of yourself!"

"I will not sit down!" retorted Fred, irascibly. "Friend! My wife here with another man!" And with an imprecation, he strode from the house. "I'll go home," he muttered angrily, "and see what it all means. Serves me right for leaving her! How lovely she was! I didn't know she was half so beautiful. But my proud darling at the opera with another! I cannot understand it!"

A few minutes rapid walking brought him to his home.

"Kate," he inquired, summoning that worthy, "where is your mistress?"

"Sure, she went out," volubly explained the girl, "with a foine gentleman that came soon after ye's lift, and was that glad to see her, I thought he'd never stop kissing her."

"That will do; you can go," sternly commanded Mr. Grey, and he slowly made his way into the little room he had left an hour before, with different feelings.

The light was burning brightly, the papers scattered about the open book, even the lace trimmed handkerchief that in her haste she had dropped upon the floor, all spoke eloquently of the dear little wife, and Fred groaned as he picked up with nervous fingers, a card from the table on which was written, "Gone with a handsome man," and on the other side "George Curtis."

Fred laid it down as quickly as though the innocent pasteboard had scorched his fingers, not noticing in his haste that the name was the maiden name of Rosa, and falling upon the sofa buried his face in the pillow and moaned:

"My little love—given to another—lost to me!"

Soon the sound of carriage wheels reached him. There was a soft rustle across the carpet, and two hands touched him, while a sweet, familiar voice whispered:

"Poor Fred! Are you sick? Brother George has come," she completed breathlessly, and he sat up, looking very pale and haggard. "He took me to the opera; I was so lonely."

Seeing the outstretched hands and twinkling eyes, Fred extended his own, crying:

"Welcome home, brother George! I must thank you for your care over Rosa in my absence."

"Not at all! Not at all!" responded George, as they heartily shook hands. "I am delighted to see the happy fellow who won my pet sister," and no further allusion was made to the affair.

"Fred," said Rosa, demurely, "is that friend of Davis' better? And"—very gravely—"how came you to attend the opera?"

"Rosa!" cried Fred, impulsively, and catching her in his arms, "don't tease me! How could you frighten me so, darling?"

"Did you care so much," whispered Rosa, nestling closer. "But you deceived me, and I felt so badly! If you had only told me! But we will be good now, won't we?" And she put up her mouth for the kiss of peace.

"Of course we will," said Fred, penitently, looking over the tender reproach. "I never will again, if you will forgive me this once. I was punished, I think. I thought I had lost my wife. But," he added, quickly, "we did call to see the friend first." And he had the grace to blush a little.

"Smart woman, that little wife of mine," he remarked to Davis, as he told him about it the next morning. "Turned tables neatly."

"Humph!" muttered Davis. "Told you so."

TOO GOOD FOR THIS WORLD.

"I would like to have an advertisement inserted."

This is a slogan that would resurrect a dead man from behind a newspaper counter, and the clerk turned as if by an electric current, and ejaculated:

"Yes sir; want the top of the column, I s'pose?"

"No, I'm not particular," said the advertiser.

"Want it inside, next to the leading editorial?"

"Either page will answer," replied the other.

"Want a cut of a death's head and marrowbones, or a sore leg, to make it attractive, or a portrait of the advertiser, with long hair and a turn-down shirt collar?"

"Clear type, black ink and white paper are good enough for me," was the response.

"All right; want head line in type an inch longer than Jenkins' ad. in next column, or will you have it put in upside down, or your name in crooked letters like forked lightning all over it?"

"No; a plain, straightforward advertisement, in space of four inches, will answer my purpose."

"Good enough. Want about ten inches of notice free, don't you? Family history; how your grandfather blacked Washington's boots once; mention of yourself as a member of a circulating library, church, fire company, co-operative store, base ball club and other important public positions?"

The customer said he did not care for any notice.

"Of course," said the clerk, "you want a free paper sent to each member of the firm, one for yourself, and the privilege of taking half a dozen copies off the counter every week because you advertise?"

The gentleman expected to pay for his paper, and asked the price of the advertisement. The delighted clerk figured it up, and then asked:

"If we send your bill around in about a year, you can tell the boy when to call again, can't you?"

"No, I will pay you now," said the other, taking out a roll of bills.

The newspaper man's eyes bulged as he said:

"Ah! you want to ask for 75 per cent. discount and 25 per cent. off for cash."

I am ready to pay a fair price for value received. Tell me your regular rates, and here is the money."

A beatific expression spread over the wan face of the worn clerk, and he murmured:

"Stranger, when did you come down, and when do you expect the Apostles along?"

"And how are you to-day, doctor?"

"First rate, and you to-day, doctor?"

"I'm all right. Got a good case of meningitis at your hospital, doctor?"

"Yes; come down and take a look at it. Anything special up your way, doctor?"

"Man fell from a scaffolding and broke his neck two days ago; still alive; may get over it. Pleased to have you call, doctor."

"Thank you, I will, doctor. Good day, doctor."

CLEVELAND'S
SUPERIOR
BAKING POWDER
DESERVES TO BE HIGHLY RECOMMENDED.

I have made a very careful analysis of CLEVELAND'S SUPERIOR BAKING POWDER, bought from grocers in this city, and have found it to be perfectly pure, and manufactured from the best quality of Cream of Tartar and other materials. It is entirely free from Alum, Acid Phosphates, Terra Alba and other substances, which are frequently used for the manufacture and adulteration of Baking Powders; and on account of its purity and healthful constituents deserves to be highly recommended.

FOUR DON'TS.

A little girl when recently asked her name said it was "Minnie Don't." Her mother so frequently said "Don't" to her that she thought it was her name. Still, it's a good word in its way, and we want to call your attention to four things which please don't do.

FIRST--
Don't imagine, when you want to purchase Clothing that it makes little difference where you buy. It makes a big difference, unless you are overrun with money. Prices are not the same everywhere Almost any store has its $10, $12 or $15 Suit; but, the quality for the money —there is where the difference comes in. Why, we owe one-half of our success to comparisons made between our goods and others. It pays to shop. But, if you dislike shopping, why buy of us once, and we will have your custom as long as you need clothes.

SECOND--
Don't suppose that all that looks like wool is so. They have got the thing down so fine now that an expert can hardly tell the difference. Wool has got to grow on a sheep's back; and that's where the wool comes from of which our all-wool Suits are made. You may not be able to see the difference between ours and some others at the same price; but you'll find it out in the wear—and don't you forget it.

THIRD--
Don't believe, or buy any goods of, anybody who professes to sell at half cost. It can't be done. A merchant can no more sell you a Suit at less than cost—unless it's an old-style, shop-worn thing he would be almost glad to give away—than you can afford to work for half a day's pay. We make no such foolish professions; but promise to give you the best value for your money that can be offered by any one who pays a fair price for the labor of manufacture and seeks only a fair profit.

FOURTH--
Don't take it for granted that all clothes fit alike. They don't. A famous London tailor said "he could take a meal sack and make a Suit worthy of a gentleman's wear." He meant that it would fit so well that the quality of the material would escape notice. And there is a good deal in the way a Suit fits, not only in appearance, but also in the wear. If we were to extol our garments half as highly as many of them do, you buyers would think we were blowing. Call and inspect them once, and you'll think they are up to the average of custom work.

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC RAILWAY

By reason of its central position and close relation to all principal lines East and West, at initial and terminal points, constitutes the most important mid-continental link in that system of through transportation which invites and facilitates travel and traffic between cities of the Atlantic and Pacific Coasts. It is also the favorite and best route to and from points East, Northeast and Southeast, and corresponding points West, Northwest and Southwest.

The Rock Island system includes in its main line and branches, Chicago, Joliet, Ottawa, La Salle, Peoria, Geneseo, Moline and Rock Island, in Illinois; Davenport, Muscatine, Washington, Fairfield, Ottumwa, Oskaloosa, West Liberty, Iowa City, Des Moines, Indianola, Winterset, Atlantic, Knoxville, Audubon, Harlan, Guthrie Centre and Council Bluffs, in Iowa; Gallatin, Trenton, Cameron and Kansas City, in Missouri; Leavenworth and Atchison, in Kansas; Albert Lea, Minneapolis and St. Paul, in Minnesota; Watertown in Dakota, and hundreds of intermediate cities, towns, villages and stations.

THE GREAT ROCK ISLAND ROUTE

Guarantees its patrons that sense of personal security afforded by a solid, thoroughly ballasted road-bed; smooth tracks of continuous steel rail; substantially built culverts and bridges; rolling stock as near perfection as human skill can make it; the safety appliances of patent buffers, platforms and air-brakes; and that exacting discipline which governs the practical operation of all its trains. Other specialties of this route are Transfers at all connecting points in Union Depots, and the unsurpassed comforts and luxuries of its Passenger Equipment.

The Fast Express Trains between Chicago and the Missouri River are composed of well ventilated, finely upholstered Day Coaches, Magnificent Pullman Palace Sleepers of the latest design, and sumptuous Dining Cars, in which elaborately cooked meals are leisurely eaten. Between Chicago and Kansas City and Atchison, are also run the Celebrated Reclining Chair Cars.

THE FAMOUS ALBERT LEA ROUTE

Is the direct and favorite line between Chicago and Minneapolis and St. Paul, where connections are made in Union Depots for all points in the Territories and British Provinces. Over this route, Fast Express Trains are run to the watering places, summer resorts, picturesque localities, and hunting and fishing grounds of Iowa and Minnesota. It is also the most desirable route to the rich wheat fields and pastoral lands of interior Dakota.

Still another DIRECT LINE, via Seneca and Kankakee, has been opened between Newport News, Richmond, Cincinnati, Indianapolis and Lafayette, and Council Bluffs, Kansas City, Minneapolis and St. Paul and intermediate points.

HALL'S HAIR RENEWER.
Vegetable Sicilian

The great popularity of this preparation, after its test of many years, should be an assurance, even to the most skeptical, that it is really meritorious. Those who have used HALL'S HAIR RENEWER know that it does all that is claimed.

It causes new growth of hair on bald heads—provided the hair follicles are not dead, which is seldom the case; restores natural color to gray or faded hair; preserves the scalp healthful and clean of dandruff; prevents the hair falling off or changing color; keeps it soft, pliant, lustrous, and causes it to grow long and thick.

HALL'S HAIR RENEWER produces its effects by the healthful influence of its vegetable ingredients, which invigorate and rejuvenate. It is not a dye, and is a delightful article for toilet use. Containing no alcohol, it does not evaporate quickly and dry up the natural oil, leaving the hair harsh and brittle, as do other preparations.

Buckingham's Dye
FOR THE WHISKERS
Colors them brown or black, as desired, and is the best dye, because it is harmless; produces a permanent natural color; and, being a single preparation, is more convenient of application than any other.

The "PERFECTION," All Porcelain.

WE TAKE pleasure in calling attention of our customers and all interested in sanitary matters to the all porcelain "Perfection," the only square top Hopper, with trap, made. For perfect cleanliness and simplicity of construction we invite comparison with any Closet, ever manufactured, either home or foreign. It combines, with the utmost simplicity, all the points of a strictly first class water closet. The square top will make itself apparent to all users, in doing away with a slop tray, the wash at all times thoroughly scouring all parts, whereas in the dry tray it cannot help but become foul underneath. It has a seal in Trap of 1½ inches, and the soil pipe vent of 2 inches diameter, as will be seen in the above cut, will prevent all syphoning of Trap. The two local or seat vents of 1½ inches diameter are intended for right or left ventilation, the one not being used to be closed. The large handhole in front gives free access to all parts of trap.

AUNT JESSICA'S RUBIES.

BY JAMES HARVEY SMITH.

"Come! come—what the mischief!" I could say no more as I slid rapidly down the steps under the impetus of a vigorous shove from the man coming out of the club. I arose with wrath in my eyes and then——

"Harry!"

"Fred! well this is a surprise—thought you were in Switzerland."

"Returned on last steamer. Very sad news. Aunt Jessica died last Wednesday week—you heard of it, I suppose?"

"No, I hadn't. I had been in Florida and just returned!"

"Very mysterious case altogether, old fellow," said Fred, after we had adjourned to the smoking room. "I don't mean Aunt Jessica's death, although that was very sudden—about her property, I mean. I am her only heir."

"Let me congratulate."

"No—don't. It isn't worth while. The fact is, there is no property."

"You surprise me! I thought your aunt was rich."

"So did I," said Fred, gloomily; "we were not on very good terms, and I didn't know much about her affairs, but I thought she was worth at least sixty thousand. Well, I find a house and some pretty fair furniture, pictures, and so forth, say ten thousand, all told, and no trace of the remainder."

"Hidden in an old stocking," I suggested, "or in the family Bible or secret panel; I've heard of such things."

"So have I," answered Fred, with a sickly smile, "and I've nearly torn the house to pieces in the past three days in my mad search."

"Don't give it up," I said, encouragingly.

"I won't," said Fred. "Help me, old fellow, will you."

I said I would, and of course I did. Fred and I went over Aunt Jessica's house from cellar to garret, turned every blessed thing inside out, explored every nook that could by any possibility contain gold, silver or bank notes, and even ripped up the floor in a dozen places. Nothing! I was in despair; so was Fred.

"Aunt Jessica's fortune is a myth," I said decidedly. "You had better believe it, Fred; it will make it easier to bear."

Fred thought so likewise, and so we separated, but the very next day he rushed into my office all ablaze with excitement.

"I am on the trail," he shouted

"Sit down," I said, shoving a chair towards him. "Where is it buried?"

"Nowhere," he replied, savagely, "it's spent!"

"Worse and worse," I cried in dismay. "Do you mean to say that your aunt squandered $50,000 in a year?"

"Listen, will you," roared Fred, "and stop guessing. You know Miss Carbrook—Violet Carbrook? Beautiful girl—very—dashing—sort of companion to Aunt Jessica?"

"Yes, well, I met her by chance last night and she cleared up the mystery in ten minutes. It seems that aunt, about six months ago, converted nearly all her property into cash and realized over $40,000. Then she bought—you cannot guess what she bought!"

"A ship?"

"Nonsense; a necklace of rubies!"

"What in the name of common sense did she want of such a thing?"

"It is my private opinion," said Fred, earnestly, "that she did it with the intention of keeping your humble servant out of her property—and she has succeeded admirably."

"You mean that the rubies have disappeared?"

"Entirely."

"Fred," said I with a gasp, "this is a very remarkable yarn. Who ever saw this necklace?"

"Miss Carbrook," replied Fred, promptly. "She described it as composed of thirty stones of the finest water—as I can very well imagine from the price—$45,000.

"Did your aunt ever wear it?"

"Never! she kept it in her dressing case, just like any common trinket."

"Was she the last one who saw it—Miss Carbrook I mean?"

"I suppose so, but see here!" with great violence, "do you mean to insinuate that the ——"

"No, no," I said hastily, "certainly not; if it has got to that stage I don't dare to suggest anything. Let us suppose that the earth opened and swallowed them!"

"It may be a joke for you," said Fred, with a groan, "but it's a very serious matter to me."

"I know it," said I soothingly, "and I'll go and help you to pull down the house any time you say the word. In the meantime, let us go down to the club and take dinner." We had a nice little dinner, and Fred's gloom began to fade under the influence of good fare.

Presently he looked up and caught the waiter's eye.

"Mr. Spofford, how do, sah, how do?" said the sable attendant, with a grin; "glad t' see you sah! Hope you 'joyed Yurrup, sah!"

"Ah! Henry, you rascal," said Fred "I thought you had been hung long ago for your impudence."

"No, sah!" laughed Henry. "Jes the same ole Henry, sah, no betta', no wuss."

"How's the family, Henry? Wife all well, and the children three, Henry?"

"Fou' now, sah! an' all fust rate, sah, fust rate. De ma'ams doin' ov nussin, off an' on. Wor in tendance on your aunt, sah, in her last illness."

"She was?" cried Fred, with a start; "perhaps, perhaps, shaw! What's the use?"

"What has bit you now?" I ventured to inquire.

"An idea," replied Fred. "Brilliant or otherwise, remains to be seen. In my present situation I cannot afford to let any clue drop. Why not see Mrs. Henry?"

"Why not, indeed," I assented blankly. "But why?"

"About the—you know what," cried Fred, checking himself as he caught Henry's inquiring eye. "Would it be out of place, Henry, if I were to make a call on your wife, say to day?"

"No sah," replied Henry; "proud ov de honor, sah. If you'll wait till 6, gem'un I'll 'scort you."

"Agreed," said Fred, as he dropped a dollar into Henry's nimble palm, and we arose from the table and sought the smoking-room.

Six fifteen p. m. found us ushered into the neat sitting-room of Henry's home, confronted with Eliza and four coffee-colored children. We both knew Eliza, so no introduction was necessary.

"Lawd bless you, sah!" she exclaimed, in response to the first question; "'deed and I were wid her, and I mus' say, sah, but she wer very tryin'—wery much tryin' onter a pusson's nerves. Sich complaints and fault-findin's. Well, sah, I earned my money, 'deed I did."

"I don't doubt it," said Fred, sympathetically. "But tell me, did you notice anywhere in the room before or after my aunt's death a necklace of rubies?"

"No sah," answered Eliza, decidedly. "Never seed no sich thing."

"You know what rubies are?"

"Law, yes, 'deed, sah, I do," replied Eliza, with some haughtiness of manner "Dar's mighty few things I don't know. I wor in de best ov sassiety afore I wor married wid Henry." And that individual, in the corner of the room, grinned approval of the speech, which might have been construed unfavorably to him.

"It's no use," I whispered to Fred; "it's a blind trail."

"So it is," said Fred, despairingly. "Let us go."

"Don't either of you gentlemen want to buy a dog?" Henry asked, suddenly.

He disappeared into an adjoining room, and returned, leading a little bull pup, the nastiest creature imaginable. He held it out to Fred, and, to my surprise, it was eagerly snatched.

"How much?" demanded Fred, hoarsely.

"Fiv—seven dollars," said Henry, noting his eagerness.

In ten seconds Fred had the money in Henry's hands. Then, with an apparent effort to be calm, and at the same time covering the animal with his top coat, he asked: "Where did you buy the collar?"

"Dot wor mine," put in Eliza, grinning. "I foun' it on de flur ov yer aunt's room—pretty beads, sah, but dey hain't no 'count. We don't charge nuffin fur de coller, does we Henry?"

Once in the open air, Fred grasped me by the arm and, holding up the bull pup to my view, said in an awe-struck voice:

"Look at this collar! It is the ruby necklace!"

* * * * * * *

"So you are to be married next month?"

"Yes; you will come to the wedding, old chap?"

"Of course. Your present to the bride will be, I suppose, a ruby necklace?"

"Not exactly; can't afford to carry round so much idle capital, and I've converted the rubies into cash. Violet will wear diamonds; rubies are unlucky; that is, they nearly proved so to me, old fellow."

ICE WATER BAD.

An authority on the subject says:—"Americans are a dyspeptic people; they drink much iced water at meals, ergo, iced drinks at meal time are bad! They may be when carried to excess; this is not denied. But iced drinks are not the cause of the widespread dyspepsia in the United States. There are other potent factors in action. Iced drinks are very grateful to the thirsty but too much indulgence therein produce a torturing thirst, as the person who indulges in eating snow in the Arctic regions discovers quickly. Just as snow-balling causes the hand first to feel cold, and then to glow with heat if continued, so that the constant application of an iced fluid to the fauces, at first grateful, becomes a source of intense discomfort; for the blood vessels are first contracted and ultimately paralyzed, and then the fauces glow with warm blood, like the skin of the snow-baller's hands. Iced fluids are not desirable for dyspeptics, to say the least of it. Ordinarily at dinner the ice pudding is followed by a glass of liquor, 'to correct it.' A certain temperature is requisite for digestion, and too much cold is considered bad."

PROVERBS OF THE TALMUD.

Have friends or die.

A woman spins and talks.

He who has no wife is no man.

If your wife is little, bend to her.

Among the thorns the rose blooms.

A woman's wisdom is in the spindle.

The myrtle among the thorns is a myrtle still.

Woman is a mass of corruption, yet all men pursue.

At sixty her feet tingled at the sound of the cymbals.

Take a wife from beneath, a friend from above you.

When cabbages are plentiful, there take them to market.

With her foot in the grave a woman clings to vanity.

Be the goat white, be the goat black, so she gives good milk.

If your friend be deaf when you call turn your back on him.

Ten measures of talk were sent down from heaven, and a woman took nine.

A woman would sooner have one measure of forwardness than forty of modesty.

FOR MARRIED WOMEN.

Always remember that you are married to a man and not a god; be prepared for imperfections.

Once in a while let your husband have the last word. It will gratify him and be no particular loss to you.

Do be reasonable; it is a great deal to ask under some circumstances. Reasonable women are rare; be rare.

Anticipate the discovery by your husband that you are "only a woman." If you were not he would not care about you.

Remember that servants are made of the same material as you are—a little coarser grained, perhaps, but the same in essentials.

Let your husband read the newspapers at the breakfast table. It is unsociable, but then it is only a trifle, after all, and he likes it.

Read something in the papers besides fashion notes and society columns; have some knowledge of what is going on in foreign countries.

Try and forget yourself; as to your husband, forget that you married him, and remember that he married you; he will then probably do the reverse.

Be a companion to your husband if he is a wise man, and if he is not, try and make him become your companion. Raise his standard; do not let him lower yours.

Let your husband know more than you do once in a while; it keeps up his self-respect and you will be none the worse for admitting that you are not actually infallible.

Respect your husband's prejudices, respect his relations, especially his mother—she is not the less his mother because she is your mother-in-law; she loved him before you did.

FREEHOLDERS' PROCEEDINGS.

OFFICIAL.

ELIZABETH, N. J., May 19th, 1886.

Pursuant to adjournment the board met on Wednesday, May 19, 1886, at 2 o'clock, p. m.

Present—Director Martine and Freeholders Astfalk, Chapman, Doty, Debbie, Dardis, Hubbard, Howard, Halliday, Isenmann, Oliver, Pierson, Pitcairn, Roll, Vanderbeek, West, Wright—17.

Absent—None.

The minutes of the last meeting were read, and, on motion, approved as read.

COMMUNICATIONS.

A communication, signed by the street commissioner, committee on streets and chosen freeholders from the city of Rahway, asking the board to investigate the damage caused by the flow of water from under two bridges on Linden avenue, between St. George and Scott avenues, was read.

On motion of Freeholder Hubbard, received and referred to special committee on Rahway bridges.

The following, from the grand jury for the May term, 1886, was read:

To the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the County of Union:

The grand jury for the May term passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the attention of the Board of Freeholders of Union county be called to the limited accommodations of the county jail, and that said board be recommended to furnish increased accommodations for the prisoners confined therein, as soon as convenient, by enlarging the jail if necessary.

C. A. SWIFT, Clerk.

On motion of Freeholder Doty, received and ordered on file.

COMMITTEE REPORTS.

From committee on appropriations:

To the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the County of Union:

GENTLEMEN—Your committee on appropriations would respectfully report that after a careful consideration of the subject comparing appropriations with expenditures for the last three years, they have fixed upon the amounts to each account as shown by the accompanying resolution.

The levy must necessarily be larger than during the last few years; in each of those years a large amount of taxes was due the county, a portion of which, together with moneys to come in hand during the year, was appropriated to meet the current expenses of the county. This amount has been gradually decreasing; at one time it was nearly sixty thousand dollars; now the amount of taxes due is only fourteen thousand two hundred and sixty-eight dollars (not including the interest.) To this must be added cash on hand and miscellaneous moneys to come in hand during the year of nine thousand, two hundred and ninety-two dollars, and we then have only twenty-three thousand five hundred and sixty dollars available for appropriation as against forty to sixty thousand dollars in the three preceding years.

If during the coming year the warrants of the board or our current expenses are exactly as they were last year they will amount to

		$104,000
To this we must add bonds to pay	$27,000
Coupons to pay	22,200
Temporary loans	18,500
		67,700
So that if the expenditures are the same this year as last, the appropriation would be		171,700
To meet a portion of this we appropriate of taxes due the county and moneys from miscellaneous accounts to be received during the year		22,700
This would make the tax levy		149,000

At this time it is necessary for us to make these appropriations. The people expect and demand that they should be as low as possible. As taxpayers and citizens, our interests are identical; as officials, the law requires and compels us to make them sufficient to meet all just demands upon the county and many of the heaviest drafts are entirely beyond our control. Our only duty seems to be to raise the money at this time and pay the obligations as they may fall due according to law without even consulting the wishes or desires of the members of the board as to their payment. We are left very little discretion in the matter; refusing to make a sufficient appropriation knowingly would be punishable as malfeasance in office. To exceed or incur an obligation beyond the appropriation would be punishable as malfeasance in office. The limit of the penalty is "a fine of one thousand dollars or imprisonment for three years, or both."

For these reasons we deem it unwise, if not criminal, to bind ourselves to the above one hundred and forty-nine thousand dollars. As shown, the court account last year was low as compared with other years. The lunacy account shows a steady advance of from one thousand to two thousand four hundred dollars each year; the jail account from two to three hundred dollars a year; in fact, all the accounts depend very much upon uncertainties; therefore, we recommend

That there be added to the	$149,000
fifteen thousand dollars which may include the amount of ten thousand dollars to be added to the amount expended last year on buildings, to be used on the contemplated enlargement of the jail	15,000
This would fix the levy for the year, as shown by accompanying resolution at	$164,000

If the jail is not enlarged the levy may be reduced ten thousand dollars, but as it requires only a half mill tax to build the contemplated additions, and as there is, beyond all question, an absolute necessity for it, we would recommend that the ten thousand dollars be added to the amount expended in building account last year, that the additions may be made.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

JOHN E. ASTFALK,
GEORGE W. DOTY,
J. F. HUBBARD,
JOHN ISENMANN,
WILLIAM HOWARD,
Committee.

Elizabeth, May 19, 1886.

Freeholder Oliver moved the report be received and placed on file.

Which was carried.

From committee on Plainfield bridges:

To the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the County of Union:

GENTLEMEN:—Your committee on bridges in the city of Plainfield would respectfully report that the line bridge over Green brook on Netherwood avenue was condemned by your committee as dangerous. It is past repair. The walls are good and need no repairs, except to be raised about twelve inches. It is a span of fifty feet. We would recommend that a new superstructure of iron be placed upon these walls with a roadway of twenty feet, and that your committee be authorized to meet with the Somerset committee and rebuild the same if the cost does not exceed $900 to this county. We would also report that the line bridge over the same stream at Cadmus mill is in a bad condition. The walls are cracked and poor. If anything is done at this point it will probably cost $900 to this county. If the Somerset board desire to do this work we ask that your committee be authorized to act jointly with them and rebuild, if the expense does not exceed $900 to the county.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

J. F. HUBBARD,
GEORGE W. DOTY,
JOHN E. ASTFALK,
W. M. OLIVER,
A. VANDERBEEK,
Committee.

Elizabeth, May 17, 1886.

Freeholder Debbie moved the report be received and placed on file, and the recommendation adopted, which was carried by a unanimous vote.

From committee to take collector's bond:

To the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the County of Union:

GENTLEMEN:—Your committee on collector's bond beg leave to report that we herewith submit the collector's bond, which we have approved, after making inquiry as to the parties signing it.

It is the same amount as last year.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

JOHN ISENMANN,
JOHN E. ASTFALK,
WM. T. WEST,
Committee.

Elizabeth, May 19, 1886.

Freeholder Chapman moved that the report be received and the accompanying bond be deposited in the office of the county clerk.

Which was carried.

From Fanwood bridge committee:

To the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the County of Union:

GENTLEMEN—Your committee on bridges in Fanwood township find that the line bridge over Green brook at Scotch Plains is in a dangerous condition and will not warrant the expenditure of money upon it; the walls have been laid up without cement and will need to be relaid or newly built if the present bridge is replaced by an iron structure; it is about a fifty foot span with a twenty foot roadway and one six foot sidewalk. We would recommend that the committee be authorized to meet with the Somerset freeholders and jointly rebuild these or new walls and place upon them an iron superstructure if the same can be built and completed at an expense to this county of not over $750.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

C. W. L. MARTINE,
J. F. HUBBARD,
GEORGE W. DOTY,
WM. M. OLIVER,
ROBERT DARDIS,
Committee.

Elizabeth, May 19, 1886.

On motion of Freeholder Debbie, the report was received and recommendation adopted by a unanimous vote.

NEW JERSEY CROPS.

The condition of the crops in this State has seldom been more promising than at the present time. The grain and grass and clover never were better. The copious rains have given them rare luxuriance, and they present a very fresh and vigorous and beautiful appearance. The small fruits also promise well. There was an abundance of bloom and the cherry, peach and apple crops will be unusually large, unless something untoward yet occurs. The strawberry crop also promises well. The recent frosts that have had a damaging effect further north have not injured the crop in New Jersey, at least in the middle and southern parts of the State. The effects of these northern frosts will doubtless be to insure a good price for the New Jersey strawberry crop. When the prolonged wet and cool spell shall be succeeded by warm suns, vegetation in New Jersey will fairly jump, so that the pulsings of nature can almost be heard.

A BEWILDERED WESTFIELDER.

MESSRS. EDITORS:—If you are not already aware of the fact it may not be uninteresting to you to learn that Westfield is to be congratulated on the extraordinary literary force of its newspaper. In proof thereof let me cite the following: Being informed by a correspondent that one of his hens was sitting on two kittens and asked to explain the phenomenon, our Editor launches into the following brilliant commentation:

"This appears to be a remarkable case of stepmother and belongs to a catalogue of phenomenal idiosyncrasies traceable largely, if not wholly, to the peculiar mental condition incident to the period in animal life when maternal instincts predominate."

And then, with a candor to be admired, unwilling to assume the functions of a prophet, he proceeds to say that

"Such cases are rare and it is impossible, on any reasonable hypothesis, to predict their recurrence."

That he cannot tell us when the hen will sit on kittens again is, of course, to be regretted, but, should we not honor the man for his integrity that he will not presume to predict the recurrence on any unreasonable hypothesis? Until now the good people of Westfield were unaware that chickens possessed a military idiosyncrasy, believing such an attribute exclusively human—but our paper has taught us otherwise, and hereafter we shall wonder, as we gaze upon our chickens, which of them will develop the strongest "phenomenal idiosyncrasies."

Yours in bewilderment,
JOHN HODGES.

W. C. T. U. COLUMN.

BY THE LOCAL SUPERINTENDENT.

"Rise up, ye women that are at ease; speak, exhort and rebuke with all authority."

The W. C. T. U. held their monthly business meeting June 1st. Interesting reports were given of work in the many departments. Committees were appointed to arrange for the State Convention to be held here in October next.

Every day we see young men entering the saloons of our city. The man who must have his daily drams may not come before a court for disorderly conduct but in time he will be powerless for any exertion, physical or mental, a wreck of his former self and a creature for the compassion of those about him. Constant tippling leads to idiocy of various degrees. Every indulgence in the use of intoxicants strengthens the desire for more and weakens the will and moral power to resist temptation.

One day a young man entered the bar-room of a village tavern and called for a drink. "No," said the landlord, "you have had the delirum tremens once, and I cannot sell you any more." He stepped aside to make room for a couple of young men who had just entered, and the landlord waited on them very politely. The other stood by silent and sullen, and when they had finished, he walked up to the landlord and addressed him as follows: "Six years ago, at their age, I stood where those young men are now. I was a man with fair prospects. Now, at the age of twenty-eight, I am a wreck, body and mind. You led me to drink. In this room I formed the habit that has been my ruin. Now sell me a few more glasses and your work will be done. I shall soon be out of the way; there is no hope for me. But they can be saved. Do not sell it to them. Sell it to me and let me die, and let the world be rid of me; but for Heaven's sake, sell no more to them.—Temperance Banner.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND.

Grover Cleveland, a Democrat, has been President of the United States fifteen months, and within that time has, through wise conservatism and an intelligent and faithful discharge of official duty, proven himself to be one of the very best Chief Magistrates that ever filled the chair of Washington.

That is saying much, but not a whit more than truth authorizes.

We are aware of the fact that some men, calling themselves Democrats, raise puny objections to President Cleveland because he is too earnest a patriot to suit their clouded view of political integrity, and that others, wearing the badge of partisan Republicans, evince hostility for the only and ignoble reason that he is a Democrat, but, passing beyond all such untenable opposition, we clearly discover that the patriotic masses, the vast majority of voters, who value good government a hundred fold dearer than personal ambition or party aggrandizement, are zealous supporters of our Democratic President, and why?

Because he is an able and honest official, and nobly dares to do what he conscientiously believes to be right and for the public welfare.

That is the distinguishing trait of Grover Cleveland.

That makes him the trustworthy Executive.

That justly gives his name honorable mention, and renders him by far the most popular public man in the Union to-day.

It is a glorious fact we thus chronicle. Raise personal honesty into governing authority and the country is safe.

Danger abides in the opposite.

This is the time to drive through the country. The crops are looking remarkably fine, the trees are in full foliage and the scenery is prettier than at any other time of the year. The air is pure, and a ride by meadow and field, by stream and over hills is good for your lungs. Try it.

Tobacco blindness is becoming a common affliction. At present there are several persons under treatment for it at one London hospital. It first takes the form of color blindness, the sufferers who have smoked themselves into this condition being quite unable to distinguish the color of a piece of red cloth held up before them. Sometimes the victim loses his eyesight altogether.

The third anniversary of the opening of the Brooklyn bridge occurred on the 24th ult., when flags were displayed from the towers in honor of the event. During the three years more than 45,000,000 persons have crossed the bridge, and the receipts have been over $1,000,000. The average travel is now 800,000 a week, and last week's receipts were the largest in its history. The bridge is counted a success.

Secretary Manning, whose health is seriously impaired, tendered his resignation to the President on the 20th of May. Mr. Cleveland declined to accept the same and advised Mr. Manning to take a vacation until the 1st of October. The Secretary has concluded to do so, and his resignation is held in abeyance, but the probabilities are that he will withdraw from the Cabinet in October. His best friends do not believe that he will ever be able to stand the wear and worry of his Secretaryship again.

Small fruit of all kinds promise a greater crop than ever before in New Jersey. Currants and raspberries never blossomed more freely, and cherries, that are now beginning to ripen, are in such abundance that large branches are breaking with the burden of the fruit. They seem free from insect stings. The wild huckleberry are now in blossom, the bushes being masses of flowers. Strawberries are just arriving from this State, and are of large size and superior in flavor. The crop is immense.

A relentless Nemesis seems to be on the track of every one of the rascals who helped to consummate the great fraud of 1876. The latest report from them is that Ferry, the President of the United States Senate, whose insistment upon the right to count the electoral vote defeated the participation of the lower House of Congress in the count and led to the complications that were afterwards settled by the Electoral Commission, is in Europe, a fugitive from justice. He has been forging notes and checks in Michigan, and one of the grand juries of that State has indicted him for his crimes.—Jersey City Tattler.

Again Chosen Chief.

The annual meeting of the New Jersey Detective Association was held last week at Jersey City. Ex-Chief John Keron, of Elizabeth, was selected Chief of the Association for the ensuing year; Richard Onslow, of Jersey City, Captain; Judge N. Davis, of Jersey City, Secretary and Treasurer. Chief Keron will open an office in Elizabeth.

June.

May was a long month, but June is here at last—the month of roses and strawberry festivals and Sunday school celebrations; the month of commencements and graduations; the month when the evenings are longest and the little folks can't understand why they should go to bed before the real dark comes; the month when the summer boarder shuts up his house and the country boarding house opens for the season. Lots of things happen in June.

The Annual Commencement of the North Plainfield Public School, will be held in Warren Mission chapel, Thursday evening, June 24th.

The fourth visit to Plainfield of Dr. Dupree, the successful Chiropodist, whose dates at the City Hotel are announced in "Want" column of this issue, is the result of most earnest solicitation of many people in this city and vicinity. He desires always to comply with a popular and universal demand, hence his determination to come here the last four days of the coming week, commencing his visit on Wednesday next, June 16th. All who suffer in any way with sore feet, will display wisdom by not neglecting this very last chance of being cured by this famous expert. His ability is undoubted as hundreds of happy witnesses are residing in our midst. Corns and bunions are terrors to everybody, but Dr. Dupree cures them almost instantly and absolutely without pain.

Augustus C. Dolbier, aged twenty-three and a half years, the oldest son of Erastus M. and Lydia Dolbier, died at the residence of his father on Pieton street, on Monday afternoon last. The funeral services were held on Wednesday afternoon. Interment in the family plot in the Scotch Plains church yard.

Dr. William Gale has made a fine improvement to his recently purchased lot on Elm street, in grading and setting out shade and fruit trees.

A great many complain of empty purses, but what man was ever rendered unhappy by the conscious possession of an empty head.

The ladies of the W. C. T. U. held a strawberry and ice cream festival at their Temperance Hall on Broad street. It was largely attended, and liberally patronized.

In the matter of the laying of North avenue, from Central avenue to Elmer street, Ezra Miller filed a caveat against recording the same, which puts the recording over until the next October term of the Court of Common Pleas.

The plank walk on Broad street in front of the store of C. F. W. Wittke, need considerable repairs. Some portions of it are dangerous to foot passengers, and should be repaired immediately by the overseer of the road, whose duty it is to look after the same, as there was a sum of money voted extra for the repairs of sidewalks.

Robert Woodruff, Jr., was experimenting with his new sprinkling cart on Broad street, Tuesday afternoon. He is in hopes when he comes around soliciting subscriptions for the purpose, all the residents and owners of property of our town will contribute towards the sprinkling of our streets. A small contribution from each person living on the line of the streets will make it a perfect success.

A committee of the Board of Chosen Freeholders were in our town on Monday afternoon last, and viewed the point on Ackerman avenue, on side of mountain, where it is proposed to erect a bridge, there being a deep ravine which the line of road crosses in its ascent up the mountain. The committee decided to build a bridge. It will be either an iron or wooden truss bridge. It is proposed to cart all the crushed stone from the Hoffman crusher as soon as it is in operation over this new avenue, it being a lower grade than the old road up to the top of the mountain.

The burial of Miss Mary A. Mooney, sister of George A. Mooney of Elizabeth, occurred on Wednesday afternoon, in Fairview Cemetery. The funeral services were held at the residence of her brother, No. 13 Catharine street, Elizabeth, and were conducted by the Rev. Jno. T. Kerr, who made an appropriate address, in which he dealt on her Christian character. At the head of the casket was a pillow with the word "Mary." The floral gift of her class of the Sunday school was an anchor and a harp with a broken string. The funeral procession drove from Elizabeth to Westfield. Interment in the family plot. The parents of the deceased were old residents of our town, who owned and lived on the Tompkins farm about one mile from town.

On Friday last a Sheriff's Jury of twenty-four men was summoned to appear before Robert E. Chetwood, Edward O'Riley and James T. Pierson, three Commissioners appointed by the Chancellor to inquire into the sanity of Edw. Duffy. The proceedings were held in the town rooms, and a number of witnesses were sworn, including Drs. Harrison and Cooper. The jury after deliberating for a short time, decided by a vote of 16 to 8 that Edw. Duffy was not of sound mind, but had lucid intervals. The report was signed by the sixteen jurymen and the three Commissioners, to be presented to the Chancellor. Edward Duffy, whose correct name is Edward Griffith, came to this country from the north of Wales about fifteen years ago, and soon thereafter came to Westfield to work on the railroad, and boarded with the family of Thomas Kenney, and has boarded there nearly all the time since. He has paid his board promptly each month. Last August Mrs. Kenney observed that he was acting very strangely. He seemed to be worried about his money, of which he had accumulated about $2,000, having a portion of it on bond and mortgage, the balance in gold. Last November he refused to pay any more board. When asked the reason he said he owned the house and lot that Kenney occupied, as he had won it by running his watch against Kenney's clock, thereby making him (Duffy) the owner, and ordered Kenney to move out and vacate the premises. There is no doubt in the minds of many of our residents that the jury arrived at a proper conclusion, and that Duffy ought to have a guardian appointed to look after and take care of his person and property, which there is every reason to believe the Chancellor will do.

AFTER DINNER.
Persons who suffer from Indigestion can arrest the progress of that painful malady by the use of an after-dinner pill, so composed that it will give tone to the stomach, prevent heartburn, rouse the liver to healthful action, invigorate the kidneys, and thus, through the activity of these organs, promote the natural movement of the stomach and bowels. AYER'S PILLS are so compounded that their action, though mild, effectually produces the above results. They also, in curing Constipation, remove the cause of Biliousness, Liver Complaint, Kidney Disease, Rheumatism, and many other serious ailments.
AYER'S PILLS
contain no mineral nor poisonous substance, and do not gripe unless the bowels are irritated, and even then their influence is healing. To continue their effect in constipated or chronic cases, they need only be taken in diminishing instead of increasing doses. For seamen, and inhabitants or travelers in sparsely settled countries where physicians are not at hand, they are of inestimable value. There is hardly a sickness they will not alleviate, and in most cases cure, if taken promptly. To young girls just entering upon womanhood, and to women whose period of maternity is drawing to a close, Ayer's Pills, in moderate doses, merely sufficient to ensure regular action of the bowels, will be found of Incalculable Value.

FOUR DON'TS.
A little girl when recently asked her name said it was "Minnie Don't." Her mother so frequently said "Don't" to her that she thought it was her name. Still, it's a good word in its way, and we want to call your attention to four things which please don't do.
FIRST—
Don't imagine, when you want to purchase Clothing, that it makes little difference where you buy. It makes a big difference, unless you are overrun with money. Prices are not the same everywhere. Almost any store has its $10, $12 or $15 Suit; but, the quality for the money—there is where the difference comes in. Why, we owe one-half of our success to comparisons made between our goods and others. It pays to shop. But, if you dislike shopping, why buy of us once, and we will have your custom as long as you need clothes.
SECOND—
Don't suppose that all that looks like wool is so. They have got the thing down so fine now that an expert can hardly tell the difference. Wool has got to grow on a sheep's back; and that's where the wool comes from of which our all-wool Suits are made. You may not be able to see the difference between ours and some others at the same price; but you'll find it out in the wear—and don't you forget it.
THIRD—
Don't believe, or buy any goods of, anybody who professes to sell at half cost. It can't be done. A merchant can no more sell you a Suit at less than cost—unless it's an old-style, shop-worn thing he would be almost glad to give away—than you can afford to work for half a day's pay. We make no such foolish professions; but promise to give you the best value for your money that can be offered by any one who pays a fair price for the labor of manufacture and seeks only a fair profit.
FOURTH—
Don't take it for granted that all clothes fit alike. They don't. A famous London tailor said "he could take a meal sack and make a Suit worthy of a gentleman's wear." He meant that it would fit so well that the quality of the material would escape notice. And there is a good deal in the way a Suit fits, not only in appearance, but also in the wear. If we were to extol our garments half as highly as many of them do, you buyers would think we were blowing. Call and inspect them once, and you'll think they are up to the average of custom work.

OH! trim the trees.

THE Public Cemetery plot is progressing, and we will tell you something definite about it in a few weeks.

THE object of the excursion of No. 2 Engine Co., this year, is a most worthy one—the benefit of its relief fund.

NOT only to let the light through, but that fresh air may circulate and absorb the dampness that lies beneath—trim the trees.

FROM the applications for ground it is pretty certain that there will be a larger number of camping parties at Lake Hopatcong this year than ever before.

DR. FIELD is enjoying himself as only a surgeon can, among the hospitals of Germany, at present. It is possible that he may not return until September.

BEEHM'S Aromatic Stomach Bitters, a splendid appetizer. Also other Bitters, Cordials, &c., retailed at wholesale prices by C. Bock, the 2d street liquor dealer.

THE practice of Sunday bathing in the New Brooklyn pond must stop at once, or arrests will result that will cause much discomfort, and fines that will prove expensive.

MESSRS. BARKALEW & DUNN, by fair dealing, close attention to the wants of the public, reasonable prices and fresh goods, are building up an enviable reputation as merchants and an extensive business.

To the new Superintendent of the District Messenger Co., Mr. Councilman Goddard, is due all the credit for the omission of the ringing of the twelve o'clock bell on Sundays. Thanks to anyone else are misapplied.

THE President of the Board of Education, Mr. John W. Murray, is not expected to return from Europe until the latter part of the present month, though he may be home in time for Commencement. It's quite a treat to miss.

EXTRAORDINARY bargains in carpets are offered from the "peremptory trade sale" by Messrs. Isaac N. Doty & Co., at 159 and 161 Market street, Newark. Even those who do not propose to furnish until Fall, would save money by buying now.

WE have lately been thoroughly convinced of the fact that a muzzle doesn't muzzle. The contrivances placed on the noses of the majority of the dogs about town in order to conform to the law, wouldn't prevent their chewing the leg off an iron pot.

THE ordinance to prevent the running-at-large of dogs during the months of June, July, August and September, was adopted at the Council meeting of Monday evening. The authorities should now prepare a definition of what constitutes a "muzzle."

IT is a most unusual thing to notice the long list of young men that is included in the graduating class of the High School of the present year. Perhaps the coming generation of this sex in Plainfield is as studious and as persevering as the girls.

THE festival given at the M. E. church by the Ladies' Aid Society, during Thursday and Friday of last week, resulted in the usual success of such affairs given at that place. All of which adds more credit to the managers, and additional funds to the treasury.

RANSFORD W. BRINKERHOFF, for many years a resident of this city, and, until recent ill-health compelled him to give up active work, connected as Engineer with the establishment of Messrs. Scheplin, Baldwin, Tweedy & Co., died during Tuesday of last week, aged 33 years.

THE Valedictorian at the High School Commencement, this year, is to be Miss Edith R. Leonard, who, last year, took first prizes in both English Composition and Penmanship. She is undoubtedly one of the brightest scholars that was ever graduated from Plainfield's schools.

THE arrangement of Sunday services in the Netherwood chapel will, this Summer, be under the charge of the Rev. E. M. Rodman, of Grace church. He will secure the pulpit "supplies," and the Episcopal forms of worship are to be observed. The organization of a choir is also to be accomplished.

A LARGE circle of the young people of this city remember with much pleasure Mr. O. T. Roberts who for the past few years has been living at Mandan, D. T. The news that he is to be married on the 22d inst., will call forth the sincere sympathy of the friends of his own sex, and the deep regret of the young ladies.

ENGINE CO. No. 2 will excurt, this year, to Eureka grove, which is about twenty miles up the river and affords a delicious sail. There will be ample accommodation, fine music and plenty of everything that will result to the gratification of all. The arrangements are, as usual, in the hands of a most efficient committee.

THE gallery of Reform Hall, Monday evening, was a veritable fire-trap, as well as a hot-box. If an alarm had been started, not more than fifty of the two hundred packed there could have escaped. The crowding of so many in any one place, with the passage way blocked with chairs, should not be permitted anywhere.

WE publish in full this week the annual report of the Board of Directors of Plainfield Public Library and Reading Room for the year ending June 1st. You will read with interest the information it contains, and with satisfaction the assertion of its opening as a circulating library on Oct. 1st, with 5,000 volumes on its shelves.

WHO'LL join THE CONSTITUTIONALIST in giving their employees a half holiday on Saturdays during the Summer months? All speak at once, and let every employer agree to close at noon on Saturdays. There'll be no loss of trade in the end, and your employees will gain rest and strength that will fit them to work the harder and the more willingly.

A NEW billiard parlor has been opened opposite the station under the management of Mr. Charles Krewson who has made so many friends by the uniform courtesy extended by him to all during his past connection with the rooms on Front street. Lovers and patrons of this game of skill will find at the new establishment three Brunswick, Balke & Collender tables, with quick cushions.

DURING Saturday afternoon on the Somerset street ball grounds, the Athletics defeated the Stars by the score given below. The latter could not get on to Buckley's pitching, and sixteen of them were struck out in the seven innings, with Gamey Nelson behind the bat to capture the curves. Kline pitched for the Stars, and Davenport caught.

Athletics	1	0	1	0	1	0	2—5.
Stars	1	0	1	0	1	0	0—3.

OH, trim the trees!

MR. SEELY EDSALL is still confined to the house, but is slowly recovering his good health again.

THE "ever glorious" is only about three weeks away, and as yet no celebration is announced to take place in this city.

THE Forty-seventh Anniversary Exercises of Pennington Seminary will take place during June 20, 21, 22, 23 and 24th insts.

THE school census in the City for 1886 shows an excess of males, which is most unusual. It is as follows: males, 1,188; females, 1,167; total, 2,355.

MESSRS. A. M. RUNYON & SON have just added a massive and elegant hearse of plate glass and ebony to the funeral appurtenances of their establishment.

THE apple crop, from accounts all over the State, will be one of the largest in years. Peaches promise a big yield, too, but there will be but few pears in Jersey this year.

THERE will be a "musical morning," next Friday, at the High School, that will prove novel and enjoyable to the friends of the school who are invited to be present.

THE Sunday School of the M. E. church will go to Long Branch and Ocean Grove, Friday, July 9th. The fare for the round trip will be $1 25, and the start will be made from this city at 7:30 a. m.

THE special policeman that shot an unmuzzled dog recently, was most unfortunate. The law permitting him such power did not become a law until its publication in THE CONSTITUTIONALIST today.

THE Plainfield Electric Light Company is securing its rights of way for poles and wires with most satisfactory success. The erection of the plant may now begin at any time, and will be completed very rapidly.

AN adjourned meeting of the Young Men's Christian Association, for the election of officers and a Board of Directors, and for the transaction of other business, will take place this (Thursday) evening, at eight o'clock.

BECAUSE our columns are crowded with more interesting matters, we are prevented from giving any but condensed reports of Council and Fire Board meetings—but which, however, contain all of importance transpiring.

THE Crescent avenue church's new organ will be in position the first Sunday in July. It is finished and being tested at the factory, where it already gives promise of being worthy to occupy the want it is at last to fill.

"THEY" have already commenced to build an addition to the Warren Mission chapel that will provide accommodation for about two hundred more. This wonderfully successful organization has outgrown its quarters again.

A RECEPTION by Miss Bovee's class in elocution will be given at Assembly Hall, next Tuesday evening, for which invitations have been issued. There will be music also, and a very interesting and entertaining affair throughout.

CHAPTER twenty-one of the laws of 1885 provides that when a constable has charge of a jury for over eight hours the presiding judge may direct that he be paid extra compensation at the fractional rate, calling eight hours a day.

THAT well-known picnic resort, Boynton Beach, near Woodbridge, N. J., is now open to the public. Advertisement of, the place will be found in another column. Prof. Sam. Frazee will furnish music on the grounds the coming season, opening on the Fourth of July.

THE funeral services after the death of the late wife of Deacon Manning Steele, took place at his residence during the afternoon of Monday last, and were attended by a large number of relatives and friends. The Rev. Dr. Yerkes delivered the prayer and address.

THE circus procession of Tuesday morning wasn't so very astounding, yet it frightened one of Boice's teams so that they dumped their load of coal baskets and a driver, and traveled a block or two so fast that the horses must have been the most surprised of all concerned.

GENERAL WARD, Newark's postmaster, and Grand Representative of the Supreme Lodge, Knights of Pythias, was present and addressed Unity Lodge of this city, Wednesday evening, followed by District Deputy John Nagle, of Bound Brook, and Bros. Stiles and Lorton of Unity.

AT the Trinity Reformed church, next Sunday afternoon, there will be special and beautiful services in commemoration of Children's Day; and in the evening the pastor will preach a sermon appropriate to the occasion of the anniversary of the Ladies' Christian Work Society of the church.

A SALE at public auction of valuable and desirable building sites on South avenue near Evona station, is advertised to take place at four o'clock in the afternoon of Thursday next on the premises unless the day should be too stormy, in which case the sale would occur at Miller's hotel.

THE amount of perishable property in North Plainfield subject to the fire tax is $591,800, and in this city, $3,076,250. The proportion of tax, therefore, is—North Plainfield, $1,775 40; Plainfield, $9,228.75. A total of $11,004 15, which would keep things in proper shape if it all could be collected as it ought to be.

THE cost of the revival meetings, recently held in this city, is about $1,000, to be paid according to an equable assessments upon all the churches. The Crescent avenue church pays $300, the First Baptist a little less because of the expense it has been put to by the use of that building, and so on down the list.

A VERY complete report of the very interesting proceedings of the annual conference of the paid employees of the young men's christian associations of the United States and British Provinces, held in the Hall of the House of Representatives at Harrisburg, Pa., last week, is crowded out of this issue, but will appear next week.

ANOTHER stone crusher has been placed in position on Johnston Drive, near the "Notch," on lands belonging to Mr. Chase, who recently purchased the Taylor Water-Cure property, on Somerset street. With three crushers at the "Notch," it would seem as though crushed stone for macadamizing our roads ought to be plenty and cheap.

THE annual closing exercises of the Industrial School took place, in the Warren Mission chapel during Saturday afternoon last. By the report of the Secretary the success of the organization and the continued increase of its good work and its good results, was shown. There are over 200 scholars on the roll, and the average attendance during the past thirty-five weeks was 135.

A PUBLIC drinking fountain, of pure cold water from the spring-fed depths of mother earth, has been erected by Messrs. Carney Bros., at Nos. 7 and 9 Somerset street. Man and beast may there quench their thirst throughout the Summer. An Economic gas engine in their window raises the water to the top of the building from whence it returns.

THE amateur comedians that so entertained us in many ways at Music Hall, during the evening of May 27th, have organized themselves into a dramatic club and propose to repeat their success upon many occasions in the future. Of course the financial result will not be so great in after appearances for several reasons, but there is no evidence that much can not be earned in this way for divers charities of more general interest than the last. Then the forty-one dollars that went to the benefit of the orchestra will, probably, be bestowed upon objects more worthy, next time.

Netherwood Union Chapel.

Episcopal services will be held next Sunday morning at 11 o'clock, in the Netherwood Union Chapel, and continue every Sunday, during the summer months, under the supervision of Rev. E. M. Rodman, rector of Grace Episcopal church of Plainfield. Seats free as heretofore. All welcome.

Music Hall Officers.

At the annual meeting of the Board of Directors of Music Hall, held at the office of the Secretary, Wednesday evening, the following officers were re-elected for the coming year: President, W. R. Potts; Secretary, C. A. Marsh; Treasurer, O. T. Waring. The following committees were chosen: Executive—Messrs. A. Gilbert, C. Tweedy, J. B. Dumont, C. A. Marsh and the President ex-officio. Entertainment—Messrs. Gilbert, Tweedy and Marsh.

Results of Revival.

The Trinity Reformed and the First Baptist churches were both spiritually blessed on Sunday morning last, thirty-three persons joining the former and twenty-six the latter. This is really the first installment of 255, converted through the recent religious meetings under Messrs. Moody and Whittle. At both churches the solemn and impressive service of the sacrament of the Lord's Supper was partaken of by old and new christians together. In some instances whole families, father, mother and children, were among those accepting Christ.

Five of One, and Half-a-Dozen of the Other.

The following are the names of the P. H. S. graduates to be turned loose upon the world after the Commencement of the 24th inst:

Edith R. Leonard,
Flora R. Petrie,
Laura E. Runyon,
Frank T. Clawson,
Fred T. Cuthbert,
Theodore J. Gillies, Jr.,

Frank E. Newman,
Herbert W. Peck.

North Plainfield Borough Council.

The Councilmen of the Borough of North Plainfield were all present at the regular meeting of last Friday evening, and in the absence of the Mayor, Councilman Weaver was chosen to preside. Another proposition for a water supply was presented and referred with the others. A contract was ordered to be made with Surveyor F. A. Dunham for the maps necessary for the establishment of an official grade. Repairs to sidewalks and street improvements, received much attention. The Chairman of the proper committee has promised that some arrangement for the convenience of the press reporters will be made.

Plainfield's Firemen's Relief Association.

At the annual meeting of this association, held Wednesday evening, the report of Treasurer, Joseph A. Hubbard, showed the amount that had been received during the year from all sources to be $1,904 73; and paid out in relief to sick and disabled firemen during the same time, $737 50. Thus a gain is apparent, although more has been paid out for relief than in past years. The Association now holds in bonds, mortgages and other securities the sum of $5,250, paying six per cent. interest. The officers elected for the coming year are: President, T. O. Doane; Vice President, Wm. R. Cook; Secretary, Edw. M. Mosher; Treasurer, Joseph A. Hubbard.

The Kirmess.

The ladies of All Saints Episcopal church, Scotch Plains, have decided to hold a Kirmess this year instead of their customary June fair. The Kirmess will take place on Wednesday, June 16th, at the Clapp House, near the Fanwood depot, between the hours of four and ten p. m. Pleasant grounds surrounding the house will lend additional attraction to this novel affair—novel, at least, in this part of the world. It is hinted that charming costumes of quaint design will make the young ladies who preside at the tables look especially fascinating. Ample facilities will be afforded for gentlemen who may like to take their supper, "for sweet charity's sake." If the day should prove stormy the festival will be postponed until the first pleasant day following.

The Girls Should Read This.

It may not be out of the way for some young men to read the following paragraph, which is clipped from an exchange, and which is closely connected with church-going Sunday evenings: "The practice of young men standing around a church door evenings, to see girls home, is largely indulged in at most country places, but is going out of style since girls have the sand to say, 'No, thank you; I came alone and can go home alone.' The young man who has not got the manliness to escort a girl to church, but waits till church is out and she has got away from the glare of the lamps, where no one can see him, and then he offers his elbow is a soft-headed fool, and the girl who will accept such escort is another." This is pretty severe, but the provocation calls for pretty strong terms.

Acquitted of Perjury.

An important criminal trial occupied the attention of the Union County Court last Friday. It was the case of the State against Edward Kelly, on an indictment for perjury. The defendant in May, 1885, was a bar-tender in the City Hotel in this city. On the evening of the 24th of that month two or three men were arrested for drunkenness, and in the hearing before the Justice said they obtained the drinks at the City Hotel. Daly, the proprietor of the hotel, and Kelly, his barkeeper, were charged with violation of the city ordinance and convicted upon the testimony of the men, who swore that Kelly served them with the drinks. Kelly, in defence, testified that he did not sell the drinks, and that on the Sunday alleged he was in New York city. He was indicted for perjury. His defence was in part an alibi, and he showed by two witnesses that he was in New York on the day named. The State's witnesses were positive in their identification. The jury retired at three o'clock in the afternoon, and in a short time brought in a verdict of acquittal. Gen. J. Augustus Fay was counsel for the defendant.

Council Meeting.

The Council held its regular meeting on Monday evening, all present excepting President Beguelin and Messrs. Gallup, Dumont and Voorhees. A number of petitions for permission to erect frame sheds, more telegraph poles, a new plan of public water supply, proposition of a system of fire alarm boxes and a quantity of bills, were presented and properly referred. The three retiring trustees of the public library, Messrs. Baldwin, Yates and Stillman, were renominated by the Mayor and confirmed by the Council. Corporation Counsel Marsh requested a leave of absence during the coming two months, which was granted. The petition of the Hotel Netherwood for a license to sell liquor, was reported as correct but tabled—the six votes necessary for its granting not being present. A number of ordinances were adopted, one of which we publish elsewhere to be followed by the others upon their approval by the Mayor. The Street Committee was instructed to report ways or means for checking the practice of sprinkling the streets too abundantly; and the committee that had in its hands the investigating of the building being erected by Messrs Cook Bros., was, at its own request, discharged. The Council then adjourned for two weeks.

Personals.

President of the Common Council, Tell A. Beguelin, wife and daughter arrived in Paris on Sunday last, on the steamer Labrador. Mrs. B. is still an invalid.

Miss Caroline A. Bache, daughter of Mr. Andrew J. Bache, formerly of this city, was married on Wednesday last in the Church of the Incarnation, New York city, to Mr. John Bonsall Ayres, of Morristown, N. J.

Just Such A Spring.

It has been observed that forty years ago we had just such a spring as we are now having. Many farmers were unable to plant corn, owing to the wet ground, and those who did plant had green corn to husk and crib. If this cool, wet weather continues, we shall have to rake up the files of the forgotten past and bring to light some of the more interesting facts in regard to the cold summer, which is still well remembered by some of our oldest inhabitants.

Warning.

The 7.59 a. m. express train from this city is a very popular one, and carries a large number of our citizens to New York. This train runs down to the switch before stopping at the depot and backs up for the four passenger coaches on the side track. The rapidity with which this train passes the depot to the switch will certainly be the means of killing or maiming somebody for life, unless some greater precaution be taken than now exists. There have been some narrow escapes. The 7 a. m. train from New York is due at Plainfield at 7.58, and when this train is on time and at the depot, the danger to life is still greater while the down train is passing to the switch. Better slow up and lose a minute, than lose a life.

Public Library and Reading Room.

The Board of Directors of the Plainfield Public Library and Reading Room, in pursuance of the requirements of the act of the Legislature under which the Library and Reading Room was established, hereby make this, their annual report, stating the condition of their trust on the first day of June, 1886. The year ending June 1, 1886, will ever be memorable in the history of the organization, for in that year it received accessions which place it on a firm and enduring foundation. The Hon. Job Male, in fulfillment of a purpose long since expressed by him, has donated to the Board of Directors the parcel of land at the South Easterly corner of Park avenue and Eighth street, one hundred feet in width on Park avenue and in the rear, and one hundred and twenty feet in depth, with the substantial and commodious building thereon designed for a free Public Library, Reading Room, and an Art Gallery and Museum, and in addition to this valuable gift, a fund, made up of money and works of art and other articles suitable for use in connection with the Library and Art Gallery, to the aggregate amount or value of $20,371, has been raised and donated by other persons. In furtherance of the objects for which this fund was raised, a part of the moneys included in it was expended for books and works of art before the fund actually came to the possession of the Board by a committee designated by the donors to collect and apply the same; and at the time the property was transferred to the Board this fund was represented by books and works of art, and other articles donated and purchased for the purposes of the Library and Art Gallery, valued at $14,682.44; money, $5,688 56. These making together the entire fund of $20,371.00. The land and building donated by Mr. Male, valued at $25,000, and the above mentioned fund consisting of books, works of art and other articles donated and purchased, and money, to the aggregate amount or value of $20,371, have, by a formal deed of conveyance recorded in the office of the Clerk of Union county, been duly vested in the Board of Directors as special trustees for the public uses and purposes for which the same were designed; so that during the year ending June 1, 1886, the Board has received from the two sources above mentioned, money and other property to the aggregate amount or value of $45,371. The Board has also received small donations of books, (forty one volumes) from other persons. The condition of the various matters in charge of the Board on the first day of June, 1886, is shown somewhat in detail by the following summary statement:

The sum of $5 688.56 received from donations as above stated has been deposited and remains in the First National Bank to the credit of the Board of Directors. This fund, however, is not applicable to the general expenses of the Library, but by the terms of the donation is applicable only to the purchase of books. The books added to the Library during the past year comprise many large and expensive dictionaries, encyclopedias and other books of reference, with numerous books of history, philosophy, biography, poetry, science and art, and considerable classical literature, making a very substantial and valuable foundation for the Library, and accessions of new books are constant. The work of selecting, purchasing, arranging and cataloguing books involves the exercise of great care and the expenditure of much time and labor; but it is all important that this foundation work be well done. To aid in this the Board of Directors has secured the services of Mr. Arthur W. Tyler, a person of large experience in similar work, and the Board hopes with his valuable aid as Librarian, to put the Library in such condition that by October 1, 1886, it may be ready for use as a general circulating Library, with about five thousand volumes on its shelves. In addition to the books a good collection of daily and other newspapers and periodicals, may now be found in the Library, and in the Art Gallery is a respectable collection of valuable paintings. In this public institution, established for the benefit of the people, the clergyman, the physician, the lawyer, the merchant, the farmer, the mechanic, the old and the young, both sexes and all classes will find much to interest and instruct, and all are earnestly invited and urged to freely visit and use it. The library and reading room is open from 9 a. m. to 12 m. and from 2 to 6 and 7.30 to 9 p. m.; and the art gallery is open from 10 a. m. to 12 m. and from 3 to 5 p. m., daily, (Sundays excepted) and every visitor will be cordially welcomed. And now for this public institution thus fairly started on its career of usefulness, which will grow and be more and more appreciated as the years go by, and which will prove of inestimable value to this community, the Board invokes the hearty good-will and active interest and support of every citizen. All of which is respectfully submitted.

JOB MALE, President.
WM. M. STILLMAN, Secretary.

Post Office Notes.

Until further notice the post office will be kept open on Sundays from 9 to 10 o'clock, a. m. This change is made in consequence of the arrival of the mail in accordance with the recent change of time table by the railroad company. The time of arrival and close of mails will be found at the top of the first column of our local page.

The side walls of the post office have been papered in a handsome manner under the skillful workmanship of Mr. Wm. Paine, employee of Mr. James Morrison, who received the contract for doing the work. As soon as the painters perform their duties on the wood-work, the office will receive a general renovation.

Fire Board Meeting.

At the regular June meeting of the Board of Managers of the Plainfield Fire Department, held Tuesday evening, Commissioners McClure and Cutter were not present. Commissioner Knowland of the special committee appointed for the purpose, stated that a new steamer had been ordered for No. 2 Engine Co., to arrive during the coming month. The rate of fire tax was fixed by resolution at thirty cents on each one hundred of dollars of property liable to damage from fire within the limits. The resignation of Commissioner Cutter was received and accepted; and George P. Suydam, Esq., was appointed Counsel to the Board. It was resolved to sit as Board of Appeals during the afternoon of Monday, July 12.

Seminary Exercises.

The annual French dialogue that blooms in the early Summer at Miss Kenyon's Seminary on Seventh street, was executed (we don't mean the language was murdered), Friday of last week, with the customary eclat and the usual amount of perfection. Those present who were able to discover what it was all about, were highly edified by the moral of the play, while the others were lost in wonder at the ease with which the talented scholars wrestled with the language. Monday morning the large audience of elegantly dressed ladies enjoyed a treat in the efforts of the little ones to do justice to the training of their efficient teachers. The exercises consisted of "The War of the Roses" and "The Butterflies' Carnival"—the former of which was interpreted by buds of beauty, becomingly dressed and representing by the flowers they carried the blossoms they personated; and the latter participated in by scores of graceful maidens with gilded wings, who carried out the illusion in many colored costumes of illusion, assisted by gnomes and other sprites of the opposite sex. So charming a sight as was the entire entertainment of the morning, never before flooded with so much brilliancy a like occasion in this city. Everybody was fascinated with the comeliness and the smoothness of each character, tableau and action, and the charm of dress and music; so the "Carnival" is to be repeated this (Thursday) evening, at the same place, for the benefit of those who did not see it then, and the Children's Home.

Miss Emily Sandford favored the gathering with such piano solos as few besides her can perform; and, also, during the operettas, Miss Anna Titsworth accompanied the little ones most ably in the musical parts. The several characters in the "Butterflies' Carnival" were taken by the young scholars of the Seminary. Titania, Queen of the Fairies, was Miss Annie Coslies; Airie, Queen of Butterflies, Miss Mildred Potter; Prince Oberon, Edward Field; Puck, Archie Cox; Moth, the Miller, Howard Corlies; Uglio, the Ogre, Howard Coolidge. Queen Titania was attended by four favorites, and Queen Airie by two. Besides these were other butterflies, fairies, and prince's guards, hunters, gnomes, grasshoppers and crickets.

The characters in the "War of The Roses," were taken by the older ones as follows: Queen, accompanied by three attendants, Lulu Lewis; Gentilla, The Wanderer, Elsie Van Zandt; Ruba, Edith Potts; Viola, May Ackerman; Lilia, Minnie Brooks; Eglanteria, Ethel Daniel; Columbine, Nella Whiton; Amaryllis, Margaret Yates.

The Commencement exercises and soiree musicale that occurred during Tuesday evening, was one of the most enjoyable, in every way, of them all. It was the seventeenth annual affair of the kind, and was attended by a large gathering of those favored with invitations from Miss Kenyon. The programme's unusual variety and excellence overcome the customary dreariness of most commencements, and the satiating effect of most musicales. Miss Brunson and Miss Clark were the saccharine girl graduates, and their "essays" were put together with care and complacency. Undoubtedly the principal regret felt by our readers that this year's reunion of the "Owl Club" was held privately, was the consequent impossibility of public enjoyment of the literary abilities of Miss Clark and the other owlettes. So much of it as we were obliged with, Tuesday evening, through the efforts of the graduates, was, however, thankfully received. The Rev. A. V. V. Raymond presented the diplomas, and addressed the audience and the young ladies with pleasing and appropriate observations. Although his task has proven so difficult a one to others, his words were both fit and felicitous, and the usual advice was becomingly clothed in sentiment and poetry neither hackneyed nor incongruous. The credit reflected by her pupils upon Miss Kenyon and her assistants, was only equalled by the great successes of those whose musical education had been intrusted to the efficient care and tuition of Mr. A. Vesino. Miss Emily Sandford's taste, method, appreciation, correctness, touch and expression are not equalled by another amateur in this city. The composition with which she proved all this was too long, and should have been given earlier in the evening; and the duett of violin and piano would have pleased better and satisfied as well if one or two of the first movements had been omitted; but the wonderful talent shown by the pupil and teacher, and the charm of Mr. Kuenzlen's violin, overcome, somewhat, the effect of too much of a good thing. The eight-handed piece was a marvel of accuracy, and highly appreciated by all for such uncommon effect. Miss Fairbairn rendered Gottschalk's difficult composition, "The Banjo," very commendably and realistically, while the sweet fascination of Miss Mildred Potter's performance was felt by all. She proved herself to be a most accomplished little lady, and her part of the evening's entertainment was as bright a gem as the diamond pin that nestled in the centre of one of the bouquets presented her. The Æolian Glee Club, a chorus of fifteen rich, full voices, under the leadership of Mr. Vesino, added to the evening's great success by their part songs.

The following is the programme in full, followed by the usual reception, refreshments and dancing:

The Feininger Recital.

The second annual concert by the pupils of Mr. and Mrs. Carl Feininger, at Reform Hall, Monday evening, was much more satisfactory to the over-crowded and super-heated audience, in many respects than the first. There was less of a striving after the unattainable—although in some cases the selections were yet a little beyond the ability of the pupil. The programme—as long as usual, though combined in a way to give more variety—closed with a larghetto movement for the violins of Mr. Feininger, Masters Long and L. Feininger and Miss Sopha L. Maltby—the latter a new amateur claimant for public favor. The selection was quite delightful, and, being in better tune than the string quartette that closed the last concert, gained by comparison. This was preceded by two compositions of L. M. Gottschalk—the "Last Hope," and "Il Trovatore,"—rendered respectively by Miss Handren and Miss Emma McGee. The first was exceedingly well played, but since its universal adoption by hand-organs and music boxes, the people have long ere this cried "Satis"—which, being interpreted, means, "it makes us tired." Miss McGee's selection was given with firmness and good taste. Master Leonell Feininger evidenced in his playing of a violin work of DeBeriot's, the inborn talent he inherits. Remarkable advancement since his last appearance here was shown, and should he as steadily improve each year, he will surpass his father before reaching his age. Master Eli Long, however, was not to be so highly commended. He has talent but the selection was too far beyond him. The teacher must be blamed for that; and that the performer was not always in tune resulted from his attempting too much. Miss Jackson, who is the most finished pupil of them all, rendered Chopin's "Berceuse," and the Liszt-Schubert "Erl King," with marked and appropriate contrast—the first plaintively with soft expression, the second firmly and brilliantly. Miss Ketcham sang an aria from Gounod's "Reine de Saba" in very good style, and thus with manifest improvement. Beethoven's sonata in E flat, arranged for piano and violin, was performed by Mr. Feininger on the latter instrument, and Miss Marsh, Miss Dewey and Miss Mattison successively on the former, in the three distinctive movements. That old hymn "China" is a pretty and lively tune by comparison with the Adagio movement that fell to the lot of Miss Dewey, but the light, delicate Rondo that followed revived the drooping spirits of all and incited the kindest feelings toward Miss Mattison. Execution and Beethoven's name, however, was all that saved the combination. Very sweet looked Miss Dorman, and very sweetly sang Miss Dorman, in "Tell Me Beautiful Maiden," by C. Gounod. With Mrs. Feininger and Master Feininger's piano and violin obligati, the trio was complete. Miss Dorman's voice was so melodious and gentle, the words so distinct and her method so near perfection, that the only encore of the evening was accorded her. Miss Tomlinson sang a selection from Haydn's "Creation" very clearly and in perfect tune throughout, in spite of her recent illness and an appearance unexpected to herself. Miss Wooden gave the Rhapsodie Hongroise of H. Litolff with a firmness of touch unusual in so young a girl; while Miss Holmes so brilliantly executed a Sonata Appassionata as to display increased proficiency since last year, which was hardly necessary. Going backward over the ground covered by the programme, brings the first, last; but in excellence the six handed piece that began the evening ranked with the best. It was performed with perception and precision by the Miss Potters and Miss Wooden.

PAPER VIOLETS.

Miss Priscilla Curtis was forty-five years old, but no one would have known it if she had not frankly confessed to that age, and plead guilty to the fact of being an old maid.

She was a pleasant, kind-hearted little body, with a fresh, youthful face, the cheeriest laugh imaginable, and a smile that won the instant love of everybody.

She had a comfortable income, lived in a cozy little cottage, and having nothing else to do, was accomplished and charitable—that is, she painted, sketched, made crazy quilts, and crocheted afghans, hammered brass plaques, and manufactured all sorts of quaint and wonderful articles of house adornment; was president of three or four charitable societies, and made a daily round of visits to the humble homes of a score of her pensioners.

People wondered why she had never married, and some of her more intimate friends ventured to ask her the question.

She always replied with a laugh and these words: "My Willie is off o'er the sea," in such a jaunty, nonchalant tone, that no one really believed that there was an actual flesh-and-blood Willie over the seas, for whose return the bright-faced little spinster was waiting patiently.

Visitors to her little cottage had noticed a crayon portrait of a young and good-looking man which hung above the mantle in her cozy parlor; but they thought it the picture of some relative, and never connected him with the mysterious Willie.

It was in reality the face of Mr. William Arnold, and he and Miss Priscilla Curtis had been lovers when he was a young man of twenty and she a girl of seventeen.

Cruel parents had separated them, and he had gone away across the seas, where, it was afterward reported, he had married a titled lady—for his people were rich, and at the time of the love-making Miss Priscilla's surroundings were very humble.

In a drawer of her bureau, which she seldom opened, there was a bundle of letters, yellow and faded with age, and a bunch of withered violets.

The violet was her favorite flower, and she had great pots of them in her conservatory, and they were the device embroidered on all the little articles of household adornment that her skillful needle had wrought.

She always wore a bunch of them at her throat when she went out, and a nosegay of them nestled under her rounded chin this morning, when, with an alligator-skin reticule on her arm, and a cheery smile on her face, she tripped down the steps of her cottage to begin the daily round of visits among her pensioners.

She was intensely practical in her charity, and believed in helping only those who made an effort to help themselves.

Her first visit this morning was to a neat little house in a back street, where lived Alma Zane, sole support of an invalid mother and a half dozen little brothers and sisters.

Alma was seventeen, rather pretty and previous to her acquaintance with Miss Priscilla Curtis, had worked in a mill, where her earnings were just sufficient to keep a shabby tenement roof above their heads and put bread and butter into the mouths of her hungry little brothers and sisters.

She had a fair education and a refined taste. Miss Curtis helped her to move into the quiet little house, which was cheaply, but neatly furnished, aided her to put warm clothing on the children, and to buy a great easy-chair for the invalid mother.

She taught Alma to embroider, to paint pretty little cards, and to fashion, out of cloth, paper and wax flowers so natural that it required no great stretch of the imagination to smell their perfume.

Alma found ready sale for the product of her deft fingers in the stores, and her two eldest brothers hawked them from door to door and on the street.

The income thus derived was double that she had received in the mill, and enabled the family to live very comfortably.

Alma had a lover—an honest, steady young man, who worked in the mill which she had left, and was, like her, the sole support of a large family.

John Brainerd was shrewd and intelligent, and seemed determined to rise in the world, although he found it pretty up-hill work.

He studied hard at nights, and had lately become much interested in constructing a model of a little appliance to be added to the machinery of a loom, that would save much labor.

He had shown his drawings of the improvement to the mill owner, and the latter had promised to give him twenty-five hundred dollars for the invention as soon as he should perfect it.

"It's bound to be a success," he said, confidently to Alma, "and we can afford to get married when I get the money."

Miss Priscilla Curtis had taken much interest in the young mechanic, and entered heartily into his plans for the future.

When she called upon Alma this morning she found the young girl in tears.

"What!" she cried, lifting up the young girl's face. "Crying? What's the matter?"

"It's about John, Miss Priscilla. He got caught in the belt at the mill and his arm is broken!" sobbed Alma.

"That's too bad!" was Miss Priscilla's comment. "But he's stout and healthy, and broken bones soon mend."

"Yes; but it will force him to remain idle for several weeks, and all the money that he's saved up to perfect his invention will be spent."

"Oh, I guess not!" said Miss Priscilla, with one of her queer little laughs. "I know of a certain young lady who might be able to help him, if she would."

"I thought of that," said Alma, her face brightening; "but lately the boys have not been able to do as well as formerly. I have a splendid stock of roses, and tulips, and pond lilies on hand, but no one seems to want them. The great craze now is for violets. You never showed me how to make them, and when I tried myself, they were such wretched imitations that I grew discouraged and threw them into the fire."

She did not notice that Miss Priscilla's smiling face grew suddenly grave, and that her blue eyes became suspiciously moist.

A silence followed Alma's words, which lasted so long that she looked up quickly, just as the old smile came back to Miss Priscilla's face, and she wiped the moisture from her eyes.

"Get your things out," she said, in a voice that trembled in spite of her, "and I'll teach you to make violets," adding mentally, "for love's sake."

After several attempts, Alma was able to make a tolerably fair imitation of a violet; and she resolved to practice all day, and select an assortment of the best for the boys to sell that evening.

Miss Priscilla paid the rest of her visits, calling finally upon the wounded mechanic, whom she cheered and encouraged so much, that he forgot all about his pain, and rather accepted his misfortune as a blessing.

That night she opened the bureau drawer at home, took out the bundle of yellow letters, and the bunch of faded violets, and seating herself in front of Willie's picture, read them all over, crying softly.

"I'm a foolish, sentimental old woman," she said, at last, and went to bed.

When she called the next day on Alma, she found the young girl in the best of spirits.

"Oh, Miss Priscilla!" she said, "the violets brought me good fortune. The boys sold all that I made; and one gentleman wanted a pot of the paper violets, and Jimmy gave him my address and he's coming here this morning."

There was a knock at the door, and before Miss Priscilla could retreat into the adjoining room, the door opened, and a stout, middle aged man walked in, smiling pleasantly.

"I came to see about the pot of violets—" he began, but stopped suddenly, and stared fixedly at Miss Priscilla's crimson face.

"Priscilla!" he cried, at last, and took a step toward her, holding out his arms.

"Willie!" she cried, and, with a sob of joy, sprang into his outstretched arms.

At first, Alma was so astonished that she did not know what to do; but finally she stole softly from the room, and it was a half hour before she heard Miss Priscilla's voice, bidding her return.

Miss Priscilla and the stout gentleman rose as she entered the room.

"Alma," said Miss Priscilla, "this is Mr. William Arnold; and"—blushing coyly, and looking up into his face—"we were friends many years ago, and some day—"

"You'll write yourself Mrs. William Arnold—hey, little woman?" cried he; and, despite Miss Priscilla's protest, kissed her then and there.

"I'm sure I'm very glad," said Alma, not knowing what else to say.

"Glad?" cried Mr. Arnold, in a hearty voice. "So you ought to be. You've made two people just as happy as—as turtle doves; and I can't forget that it was your violets that brought about this meeting. Lord bless me! It's been a quarter of a century, or more, since we were young together, and just as deeply in love as we are now. I went away across the ocean, and they told me that Priscilla—Miss Curtis—was dead. I, of course, believed it; but I never ceased to think of her, and when I saw those violets in your little brother's tray last night, and remembered how she used to love them, I determined to get a potful that would always be in bloom."

Well, Mr. William Arnold and Miss Priscilla went away together, and for days thereafter there were busy preparations in the little cottage, and finally a wedding of two people old in years but young in heart.

Mr. Arnold interested himself in John Brainerd and his invention, and assisted him to get it patented when it was perfected.

It proved a success, and with the money its sale brought him, John and Alma were married.

So, as Mr. Arnold quaintly put it, "four hearts were made happy through a bunch of paper violets."

A PROHIBITION PLANK.

Cator's Prohibition platform, among other things, says:

"We reaffirm our allegiance to the National Prohibition party and favor both State and National constitutional prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of all alcoholic beverages. We affirm that all who license, or in any way favor the continuance of this traffic, and all Legislatures which license, and all political parties which favor license, and all men who vote for parties which, license, or for parties which will not declare for prohibition (where there is a Prohibition party), do make themselves accessory to the liquor crime and equally guilty with the man who carries on the traffic. We declare that total abstinence for the individual and the prohibition of the liquor traffic by the State lie at the threshold of labor reform."

In effect the above means that every Democrat and Republican who will not vote to make Gen. Fiske Governor, is "accessory to the liquor crime and equally guilty with the man who carries on the traffic." The platform also favors free competition of railroads and laws requiring physiology and hygiene to be taught in public schools and pledges the legislative nominees of the Prohibition party, if elected, not to enter the caucus of any other political party.

FOR THE HOUSEKEEPER.

In washing bedsteads use strong brine or hot alum water.

Wash grained wood with cold tea, wipe dry and rub with linseed oil.

Cayenne pepper blown where mice or ants congregate drives them away.

Before trimming rubber dip the knife in water and it will cut more readily.

Sprinkle hellebore on the floor to kill cockroaches. Sweep it up each morning.

A little carbolic acid put in your glue or paste-pot will keep the contents sweet for a long time.

Rub window sills with fine wood ashes and rinse with clean water to remove flower-pot stains.

When hard-finished walls have been calcimined, the soiled coats should be washed or scraped off before a new one is put on.

Beat carpets on the wrong side first, then on the right side. Spots may then be removed with ammonia and water or ox-gall.

When drain pipes or other places get sour or impure they may be cleansed with lime water, carbolic acid or chloride of lime.

Furniture may be washed with warm soapsuds quickly, wiped dry, and then rubbed with an oily cloth. To polish rub it with rotten-stone and sweet oil. Clean off the oil and polish with chamois skin.

Two ounces of soda dissolved in a quart of hot water makes a ready and useful solution for cleaning old painted work preparatory to repairing. The mixture should be applied when warm and the woodwork afterward washed with water to remove all traces of the soda.

CLEVELAND'S
SUPERIOR
BAKING POWDER

Has been before the public fifteen years, and wherever introduced during that time has, on account of its purity and great merit, superseded very largely all other similar preparations for producing delicious, light and healthful bread material.

The manufacturers of CLEVELAND'S SUPERIOR BAKING POWDER, recognizing the fact that the public have a right to know what they are using as food, have for many years published their formula, which has been confirmed by analyses made by the Government chemists, State chemists and leading scientists of various States, showing that their Baking Powder contains only purest grape cream of tartar, bicarbonate of soda and a little wheat flour, the latter to preserve the strength of the powder, and that it does not contain ammonia, alum, lime, or any adulteration whatever. The public thus has not only the assurance that CLEVELAND'S SUPERIOR BAKING POWDER is "absolutely pure," but also a knowledge of all the ingredients that enter into its manufacture. This latter information is too often withheld by other baking powder companies.

The scurrilous advertisements of rival manufacturers will not deter the citizens of this vicinity from giving an article so flatteringly recommended as CLEVELAND'S SUPERIOR BAKING POWDER the trial which its merits so justly deserve.

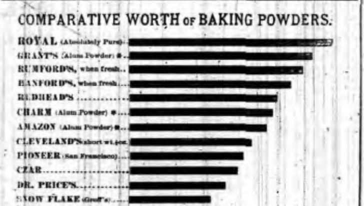
COMPARATIVE WORTH OF BAKING POWDERS.



REPORTS OF GOVERNMENT CHEMISTS

As to Purity and Wholesomeness of the Royal Baking Powder.

"I have tested a package of Royal Baking Powder, which I purchased in the open market, and find it composed of pure and wholesome ingredients. It is a cream of tartar powder of a high degree of merit, and does not contain either alum or phosphates, or other injurious substances. E. G. LOVE, Ph. D."

"It is a scientific fact that the Royal Baking Powder is absolutely pure. H. A. MOTT, Ph. D."

"I have examined a package of Royal Baking Powder, purchased by myself in the market. I find it entirely free from alum, terra alba, or any other injurious substance. HENRY MORTON, Ph.D., President of Stevens Institute of Technology."

"I have analyzed a package of Royal Baking Powder. The materials of which it is composed are pure and wholesome. S. DANA HAYES, State Assayer, Mass."

The Royal Baking Powder received the highest award over all competitors at the Vienna World's Exposition, 1873; at the Centennial, Philadelphia, 1876; at the American Institute, New York, and at State Fairs throughout the country.

No other article of human food has ever received such high, emphatic, and universal endorsement from eminent chemists, physicians, scientists, and Boards of Health all over the world.

NOTE—The above DIAGRAM illustrates the comparative worth of various Baking Powders, as shown by Chemical Analysis and experiments made by Prof. Schedler. A pound can of each powder was taken, the total leavening power or volume in each can calculated, the result being as indicated. This practical test for worth by Prof. Schedler only proves what every observant consumer of the Royal Baking Powder knows by practical experience, that, while it costs a few cents per pound more than ordinary kinds, it is far more economical, and, besides, affords the advantage of better work. A single trial of the Royal Baking Powder will convince any fair minded person of these facts.

* While the diagram shows some of the alum powders to be of a higher degree of strength than other powders ranked below them, it is not to be taken as indicating that they have any value. All alum powders, no matter how high their strength, are to be avoided as dangerous.

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC RAILWAY

By reason of its central position and close relation to all principal lines East and West, at initial and terminal points, constitutes the most important mid-continental link in that system of through transportation which invites and facilitates travel and traffic between cities of the Atlantic and Pacific Coasts. It is also the favorite and best route to and from points East, Northeast and Southeast, and corresponding points West, Northwest and Southwest.

The Rock Island system includes in its main line and branches, Chicago, Joliet, Ottawa, La Salle, Peoria, Geneseo, Moline and Rock Island, in Illinois; Davenport, Muscatine, Washington, Fairfield, Ottumwa, Oskaloosa, West Liberty, Iowa City, Des Moines, Indianola, Winterset, Atlantic, Knoxville, Audubon, Harlan, Guthrie Centre and Council Bluffs, in Iowa; Gallatin, Trenton, Cameron and Kansas City, in Missouri; Leavenworth and Atchison, in Kansas; Albert Lea, Minneapolis and St. Paul, in Minnesota; Watertown in Dakota, and hundreds of intermediate cities, towns, villages and stations.

THE GREAT ROCK ISLAND ROUTE

Guarantees its patrons that sense of personal security afforded by a solid, thoroughly ballasted road-bed; smooth tracks of continuous steel rail; substantially built culverts and bridges; rolling stock as near perfection as human skill can make it; the safety appliances of patent buffers, platforms and air-brakes; and that exacting discipline which governs the practical operation of all its trains. Other specialties of this route are Transfers at all connecting points in Union Depots, and the unsurpassed comforts and luxuries of its Passenger Equipment.

The Fast Express Trains between Chicago and the Missouri River are composed of well ventilated, finely upholstered Day Coaches, Magnificent Pullman Palace Sleepers of the latest design, and sumptuous Dining Cars, in which elaborately cooked meals are leisurely eaten. "Good Digestion waiting on Appetite, and Health on both." Between Chicago and Kansas City and Atchison, are also run the Celebrated Reclining Chair Cars.

THE FAMOUS ALBERT LEA ROUTE

Is the direct and favorite line between Chicago and Minneapolis and St. Paul, where connections are made in Union Depots for all points in the Territories and British Provinces. Over this route, Fast Express Trains are run to the watering places, summer resorts, picturesque localities, and hunting and fishing grounds of Iowa and Minnesota. It is also the most desirable route to the rich wheat fields and pastoral lands of interior Dakota.

Still another DIRECT LINE, via Seneca and Kankakee, has been opened between Newport News, Richmond, Cincinnati, Indianapolis and Lafayette, and Council Bluffs, Kansas City, Minneapolis and St. Paul and intermediate points.

PYÆMIA

Is the most virulent form of blood-poisoning. Less speedily fatal, but not less certainly so, is the vitiation of the blood of which the first symptoms are Pimples, Sties, Boils, and Cutaneous Eruptions. When the taint of Scrofula gives warning of its presence by such indications, no time should be lost in using AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, the only perfect and reliable medicine for the purification of the blood.

SCROFULA

Is a foul corruption in the blood that rots out all the machinery of life. Nothing will eradicate it from the system and prevent its transmission to offspring but AYER'S SARSAPARILLA. This preparation is also the only one that will cleanse the blood of Mercurial poison and the taint of Contagious Diseases. Impoverished blood is productive of

ANÆMIA,

A wretched condition indicated by Pallid Skin, Flaccid Muscles, Shattered Nerves, and Melancholy. Its first symptoms are Weakness, Languor, Loss of Nerve Force, and Mental Dejection. Its course, unchecked, leads inevitably to insanity or death. Women frequently suffer from it. The only medicine that, while purifying the blood, enriches it with new vitality, and invigorates the whole system, is

"I NEVER TEMPTED HER!"

They stood looking at each other.

Her trembling hands were firmly clasped in his slim brown ones.

His dark eyes burned with suppressed passion and bravely-borne mental anguish.

Her blue ones widened at the horror of their position, and darkened with the unspeakable despair that had settled on her soul like a black pall.

She, a wife—the wife of a coarse, brutal man, it is true—and he, her friend for years!

Without one word, one act, the knowledge had this day come to them that they were dearer to each other than the law of man would allow.

He spoke.

"You think I am a good man?"

"I do—the best, grandest, noblest!"

"And you know there never will be any happiness for us together?"

"Nor apart!"

"After to-day we must never meet again!"

She raised her streaming eyes to him.

Those tears.

They unmanned him.

With a wild impulse he put out his arms and drew her to his side, almost fiercely. He crushed her slight form to his heart.

"Valeria, I cannot bear it! I must go!"

"Manly, must I tell you to go? Must I give you up forever?" she moaned, tenderly putting her arms around his neck, and dropping her chestnut head on his breast.

He did not speak, only held her more closely. He did not say, "Fate is cruel!" or, "We will be happy in our own way!" or, 'Go with me!" No, he did not tempt her by word or act to break the bonds that held her to an unworthy husband.

He raised her face. He kissed the waves of her hair, her brow, her cheeks, her lips. It was as if she were dead, and he was kissing her for the first and last time before the coffin lid closed over her cold face.

She shook as if with a sudden ague. She knew so well what those kisses meant which she received passively. She knew so well what the future meant for her!

As she clung to him, she felt as if life itself were leaving her!

It would have been a merciful thing.

"Good bye!" he said, abruptly.

"For all time!" she answered.

Then he went away.

As the door closed after him, she sank on the floor, lying prostrate, with her face turned down on her outstretched arms.

"Have mercy upon me! Have mercy upon me!" she moaned.

Was she praying to her lover, or to her Maker?

God knows!

* * * * * * *

The little burg of Crossley was startled and thrown into a hubbub of speculation, when it was rumored that Manly Cresswell, its most popular bachelor and most popular merchant, was going to South America.

"But what for, Cress?"

It had been his boyhood home, and everyone was familiar with him.

"Because I want to go," he answered all enquiries.

And no one in all the town knew why he went except one broken-hearted woman—and she dared not tell.

"It is because he loves me!" she told herself, as she lay upon her bed, feeling ill unto death. She had not seen him since that awful day.

That was his last good-bye.

The next news was that Valeria Crabbe was attacked with a low nervous fever that seemed to take all her vitality, for when she rose from her illness, she was no longer the pretty, plump and rosy matron of yore, at the head of all social pleasures, and an angel of mercy among the poor.

Grief made her selfish. She could not bear to mingle with those who spoke Manly's name carelessly. It seemed like sacrilege to her. She could not bear to go to the places where she had met him most frequently, for it seemed as if she would shriek her secret aloud to a scandalized world.

She lived in the memory of her past friendship for him. So often she needed his sympathy and aid, and then the knowledge would come to her like a keen stiletto thrust, that he had gone out of her life forever!

Her only form of prayer now was:

"O God! Let me see him! Let me see him!"

But she knew her prayer would never be answered.

She knew that Manly Cresswell loved honor more than he loved her!

He would never come back to her! He must love another than her! He must have his own home, his own wife, his own circle of friends, which she would never enter!

"O God! God! How can I bear this sorrow all my life!" she would moan.

She seemed to be going mad! Her restless, sleepless nights were robbing her of all bloom of youth!

She did not care! What was the admiration of men to her? What were Fashion's decrees or follies?

Hope was dead, joy slain, youth lost!

Duty? What was duty to her?

Ambition? What was ambition?

Religion? God help her, but her soul was so steeped in its awful despair, she had almost forgotten the story of Christ!

Sometimes she seemed to be near her beloved. His spirit seemed to commune with hers, and she could feel the touch of his hands and lips, see the light of his dear eyes, and hear the tender accents of his voice!

But in her dreams, he seemed ever to avoid her—always there was a barrier between them!

And he?

God alone knew what he suffered.

Here in South America he was making a fortune by his shrewdness and good management, but the grave, silent man was not like the genial, sunny natured man that Crossley had known.

He was not popular with the ladies, for he did not smile and jest, and shower attentions on them as they hoped for. He treated them with grave politeness, but it was soon known that he was not a marrying man.

At the end of two years he received this letter:

"They tell me I shall never get well. I want you. But if you feel you cannot bear the parting—if you feel that it is best not to see me—do not come!"

He did not go.

"How can I see her die!"

Human hearts are curious things.

* * * * * * *

Eight more years passed.

A great yearning to see his old home took possession of Manly Cresswell.

"Perhaps I may see her grave. O Valeria, would to God I had died instead of thee!"

He was welcomed home cordially, but no one recognized in the bearded, silent man, the once good comrade, Manly Cresswell.

"And where is your wife, Cresswell?"

"I have none."

"What! Are you a bachelor yet?"

"As I have said."

"Not even a widower? Without a sweetheart?"

"No widower, and no sweetheart. Tell me of all my friends."

"They are all here."

"None dead? None married? None gone?"

"Let me see—yes, Ross Tate married soon after you went away. I believe you loved her once?"

"No. The only woman I ever loved died years ago."

"Now who could that be?"

"I'll never tell, and you could never guess. Any more news?"

"Well—yes, perhaps you remember that drunken fellow, Crabbe—yes, well he went to Waco, Texas, about eight years ago. The doctor thought a change might help his wits, but I heard she died soon after they got there. He drank himself to death about a year ago, but they say he left considerable property in spite of his dissipation."

"And he, too, is buried in Waco?"

"Yes."

"Well, good-bye. I am off on the next train."

"What for?"

"Important business in another city."

Day and night he traveled till he reached Waco.

What business had he there?

Only to find a grave!

"O Christ! forgive me! I alone am responsible for her death! Valeria, if I had remained near thee, thou wouldst not, thou shouldst not have died! Would God I could die and be with thee!"

A quiet, but travel-worn gentleman got off the train and accosted the first hackman he saw.

"My friend, I wish to go to the cemetery."

"All right, sir," said the surprised cabby.

"Did you ever hear the name Crabbe? Being a hackman perhaps you know."

"Yes, sir, I do remember the name. He was quite rich, but died a year ago."

"Perhaps you could show me his grave?"

"I can show you his monument, the finest I ever saw, and just put up."

"Is his wife buried near him?"

A queer smile played around cabby's lips.

"I don't think she is."

Manly decided lest his love for the dead woman should become known, so briefly commanding, "Go ahead!" he sprang into the vehicle.

The cemetery was soon reached, and the man pointed out the gleaming monument.

Manly sought it, anxiously scanning all the names of the dead as he passed.

He came up to the monument.

But what was this?

A slender, black-robed figure sat opposite, regarding him.

With one stride he was by the woman.

"Who are you?"

She raised her eyes.

"I am Valeria Crabbe!"

"Valeria? Oh, it cannot be possible! I have mourned you as dead so many years!"

"Manly!"

"Yes, it is I! Come to me now, my love. Nothing stands between us!"

She rose. But was this his Valeria? This hollow-eyed, hollow-cheeked, wan woman with the gray waves of hair?

"Manly, look at me. I am no longer young. At thirty-eight I am as aged as if I were fifty-eight. Can it be that you mean that you love me?"

"I do! I do!" he cried, "and see!" he lifted his hat.

His hair was snow white.

"I, too, bear the signs of age and awful suffering. At forty two I look like an old man, but in my heart there has never dwelt but one woman—you only."

She sighed wearily as his strong arms closed about her—his lips sought hers.

"Oh, is it true? Am I to be your wife? Am I to live with you till I die?"

"God willing!"

"It must be a dream! I have dreamed so often of being thus—in your arms, hearing your voice, seeing the love light in your eyes!"

"But this is no dream. Come, let us go away from here. Where do you live?"

"I have boarded at a hotel ever since he died. My son is at school in Nashville. He is almost a man now—eighteen. I have kept him in school at Nashville for five years. I have not wished that he should know—just how—his father lived—and died!" She seemed to have great difficulty in uttering the words.

"Valeria, to-morrow sees you my wife."

"So soon!" she murmured.

"Is it too soon, love? Remember the past ten years."

"I will do as you say," she answered, dutifully.

They reached her hotel.

"I have a private sitting room," she informed him.

"Very well, I will go there."

She ordered dinner for two sent to them.

While dining, he said:

"You must go to-day and select a suitable dress. You shall not come to me in mourning."

She smiled slowly. It was so sweet to know that he would soon be her legal lord and master, as he had long been in spirit.

He accompanied her to purchase the suit. At first she demurred.

"People may talk!"

"Valeria, what are people to us? We are all the world!"

So she submitted.

Two suits, a grey and a warm brown were laid out for her inspection.

She preferred the grey.

"No," objected he, "it's too old! Take the brown with the garnet collar and cuffs!"

She laughed outright.

"But I am old."

He looked at her.

"I will take the brown suit—bonnet and all," she told the clerk, meekly.

Then she paid the bill, left her number, and they went out into the glorified sunlight once more.

"Now, let us settle about our home. I shall not return to South America. I have sufficient fortune for you and me, and I suffered too deeply there, ever to care to return. Where would you go? Will you wish to stay here in Waco, or return to Crossley?"

She clung more tightly to his arm.

"Neither. Let us make a new home—you and I."

"Where?"

I have always loved Louisville."

"Louisville it shall be, then," and he looked at her so fervently, she began to be afraid that he would kiss her there in the street.

Her landlord regretted to lose so quiet, and such a promptly paying boarder as Mrs. Crabbe, but he cheerfully furnished all the information and help the "South American" desired, and prepared an elegant wedding breakfast for the pair, who were married in Mrs. Crabbe's own private sitting-room at 10 a. m. the next morning.

As the train rolled away from the depot, Valeria leaned closer to her husband.

"Dear, I have known such sorrow, such despair—such suffering—tell me it it is all passed—tell me that you will never regret making me your wife."

"Love, is there any need for words between us?"

* * * * *

A year later.

Who is this pretty, pink-cheeked, bright-eyed, plump woman, with the gray waves of hair, who trips so lightly up Market street in Louisville?

Presently two gentlemen meet her.

One is white-haired, but genial-looking, the other is a blue-eyed youth of nineteen.

"Mother, you are in good time."

"Valeria, you are prompt."

Yes, Valeria Cresswell has found the fountain of youth in this good man's love!

THE MAID OF THE MILL.

"Do I look nice, Betty? Would you ever know me for your little mill-girl?"

The old woman turned from setting the tea-kettle on the kitchen hearth to look at the figure which the gay flames from that hearth were lighting up.

It was still Christmas-tide, and the little figure looked most like a bunch of Christmas holly.

Her shining green-silk skirts were cut and pointed like overlapping holly leaves; holly berries and leaves peeped forth here and there amid them; sprays of berries fastened the eider-down snow-mantle trailing from the shoulder, and the snowy powdered hair that fell down over it in one long half-curled coil.

But there was nothing wintry about the little April face, half smiles, half tears, that looked up at old Betty.

The old woman took off her glasses and wiped them, and put them on again to look at her darling.

"Eh, Miss Margery——"

"No, no, Betty! You'll never miss me, as I've often told you. I can never forget the fourteen years I thought I was your grand-child—the fourteen years you cherished me as seldom was grand-child cherished. And this evening, granny, I am thinking of them—more than ever."

"One of them, dearie?"

"The year before we left the old mill, granny. The year—Philip Brand was there."

The old white-capped head shook drearily.

"You might be thinking o' something better child. Surely 'tisn't because he was an artist that you've got yourself up in this dress, like you were to be what he used to call 'a model' for him to paint? Worse luck to him and his models! I was an old fool ever to let you 'sit' to him, as he called it—though it was mostly standing, by what I could make out. And why I ever let him come and board that summer at the mill—for it was before my poor John died, and the mill had as much as ever it could grind, and we didn't want for anything, let alone boarders——"

Margery took the hard old hand in both her soft white young ones.

"Dear granny, who can tell? The days of plenty may be coming back. At any rate, to-night we will be merry. For this is the last night of Christmas-tide—Twelfth-Night, you know—and I am going to a feast."

"To a feast!"

Betty's eyes grew round with wonder. A feast; and the little village dressmaker knew nobody likely to give one in the place, where they had only been established for the last few days.

"There's to be a grand masqued ball up at The Hollies, granny."

"But, dearie, surely you know nobody to ask you there?"

She smiled softly.

"Yes, I have been asked—asked to stay, granny, I refused then; but I don't know now. I'm going to see."

The old woman looked at her, puzzled.

"Granny, will you get my poor mother's letter?—the one she gave you on her death-bed for me to read upon my eighteenth birthday. It waited for me seventeen long years, you know; while you at the mill took care of the little friendless, nameless orphan, and gave her your name and her love, as if she had been of your own flesh and blood."

"And why shouldn't we, dearie? Your mother was so young, and fair, and sweet, and she died in my arms, before you were even old enough to miss her; and John and me, we'd no little ones of our own——"

"And so you took in one of whom you knew nothing at all, not even who she was," said the girl with a grave tenderness in face and voice.

"I made sure as your mother 'ud tell you, dear, in this letter kept for you till this very Christmas Day that's gone."

Betty was taking it out of a little old-fashioned desk now—a letter sealed up in a new blank envelope, as Margery had given it back to her.

"And when I read it," said Margery, taking it from her again and tucking it away deftly among the holly-spriggs of her corsage—"did you ever ask me what was in it, and why, on reading it, I begged you to come away with me from the dear old neighborhood? We had to leave the mill anyhow, you know, or it would have been a hard thing to beg of you. Or did you just come here to this unknown place with me, trusting me for all, like the dear old granny that you are?"

Old Betty looked bewildered.

"Why, who have I got to trust besides you dearie?—and I've always trusted you."

"Exactly. And so now you are going to take the little dark-lantern, granny, and walk with me as far as the Hall-gate, and leave me there."

"Miss Margery! And how ever you're to get back——"

Margery turned round on her chair and laughed—just a little tremulously. Her fingers, too, were a trifle unsteady, as they tied on her mask over her fair face, in which the color came and went fitfully.

"I'm going like Cinderella to the ball, granny. I shall either flee back to you, ragged and friendless, or else the prince shall bring me back in splendor."

Old Betty left her obediently at the gates of The Hollies, which were just upon the outskirts of the village, and Margery stole up the carriage sweep.

She avoided the hall-door, and slipped round to a lighted bow-window, which opened down upon the terrace.

She peered cautiously in, and saw the room was empty. She tried the sash, and it yielded to her hand.

When she stood in the room, the window closed behind her, and she glanced round her. This was the library, and no doubt the special room for the young master of the Hall.

She crossed to the writing table beside the great arm-chair on the hearth. There were magazines and papers lying about, and a letter addressed to "Philip B. Wodrington, Esq., The Hollies."

She hesitated an instant, half drawing her own letter from its hiding-place. Then with a hurried "No, not yet—not yet, if ever!" turned and lifted the heavy portiere and glided out into the hall.

The mask was tied over her face, else, as she stood upon the hearth-rug beside Philip's chair, she might have been startled by a double reflection in the mirror over the mantlepiece.

There was her own figure, and there was one of the old Wodrington family portraits of a powdered and brocaded damsel seated at her harp, whose face might have been Margery's own for its strong likeness to her.

But Margery never so much as glanced at the pictures; she was watching the dancers in the hall. She was evidently looking for someone she might recognize.

Shepherdess and cavalier of the old time were dancing the quadrille together; Persian slave and Chinese mandarin; flowery Spring and Santa Claus in all his snowy furs. The latter was making his way up to Margery, as was certainly more appropriate, in a pause of the dance, when some one spoke behind her.

"Surely, as master of The Hollies, I may be allowed some claim—at least to a dance?"

It was all that Margery could do to repress a start. She knew that voice so well!

She dared not trust her own, as she turned round and through her mask saw Philip, unmasked, close to her.

He wore a court dress of the last century, but as some two or three of his guests had, through mistake, arrived without masks, he had laid aside his own with a quick sense of relief.

This playing at merrymaking irked him, as his grave eyes showed.

A Twelfth Night ball was always expected at The Hollies, so its new master gave it, if in secret unwillingly enough.

The evening had gone wearily to him until this little moving holly-bush arrived to pique his curiosity.

The "Dryad of the Holly" people were soon calling her in the ball-room, and no one wondered that the master of The Hollies almost took possession of her—no one, that is, except the master himself.

But he was presently asking himself the meaning of it all.

"I am not a fool to let myself be haunted so by the thought of Margery," he was saying to himself. "Margery, who refused me quite coolly and easily last year—Margery, the little maid of the mill, who can have nothing in common with this guest of mine. And yet a trick of gesture, a tone of voice, disguised as it is, sets me to dreaming of Margery—Margery!"

He murmured the name half-aloud, finding himself for a moment alone in the library—or thinking he was alone, for he missed the slight waving of the curtain over one of the book-lined alcoves.

A moment ago, Margery, standing just where he was now, had drawn her undirected letter from her corsage, had directed it in a trembling hand to "Philip Brand Wodrington," and had laid it, sealed as it was, uppermost among his little pile of letters, and then hearing some approaching sound, she had fled away to the nearest portiere, hoping to escape, only to find herself curtained into a shallow alcove and Philip entering the room.

For an instant she could not resist the temptation to glance through the gap of the curtain.

Philip was leaning back in his chair, opening his letters one by one.

He had left Margery's to the last, probably because the disguised backhand was unknown to him.

But he had broken the seal now. A smothered exclamation broke from him.

Margery could follow him down the page as well as if she were looking over his shoulder.

"My child," the letter said—"my little daughter who will never know me—when you read this you will be eighteen, and you will have grown up a true child of the kind people who have promised me to take care of you—a girl who can work, and not fail or die, as I have failed and am dying, when there is nothing but work left for my helpless unaccustomed hands. Now that you are old enough not be harmed by the knowledge, you ought to know that, as the phrase goes, you are well born upon your mother's side—a Wodrington, the rightful heiress of The Hollies, a country-seat close to the little village of —— near Guilford. But my father cast me off because I married the man I loved, who was not well born, in the Wodrington fashion, but the truest gentleman and the bravest heart that ever woman leaned upon. If Ralph Lane had lived, he would have won for himself such a name that my father must have repented his harshness. But he is dead, and my father in my stead has adopted my cousin, Gilbert Brand, whose son is to bear the name of Wodrington on coming of age."

There were a few words more of loving counsel from the dying mother to the child; but Philip did not stop to read them. He had laid down the letter with that [illegible] of himself. He was walking up and down the room restlessly. Twice or thrice he muttered a broken sentence or two:

"At once—the child must be found! Hideous usurpation!"

He flung himself into his chair again, and began writing hastily a letter to his lawyer, telling him of this strange bit of information of Alice Wodrington's child, of whom he heard to-night for the first time, and who must be traced and given her rights.

It was but a half page, and he signed his name to it—"Philip Brand Wodrington."

Suddenly he dashed the pen through that last name and pushed the paper from him and looked up straight into Margery's eyes. For she had flung her mask aside, and stood there smiling at him, stretching out her hands to him.

He caught them, he caught her in his arms, and seeing nothing in her eyes to forbid him, he kissed the red, sweet, quivering lips.

Then suddenly he put her a little from him.

"Has the holly pricked you?" she asked, laughing up at him tremulously.

"No, but my conscience has. Margery, it all seems some strange, bewildering dream, but I suppose I ought to tell you about myself. However you got here—"

"The maid of the mill? I suppose I ought to have come in character, or not at all?" she said demurely.

"Nonsense! But as you did get here, you must have been told that The Hollies belonged to me."

"That is why I wore them," she said, blushing and looking down to pluck at the berries on her dress.

He would have liked to assert his ownership as he did before; but this time he restrained himself, and said:

"But The Hollies. I have just learned that The Hollies belong to——"

"Me?"

He stared at her as if he had not understood.

"You? Margery, my darling, my only love—"

"Yes—Margery Wodrington Lane—or, Philip, since it is 'Twelfth Night,' what you will."

"What I will!" He had her in his arms again, the hollies and all. "What I will! Then it shall be Margery Lane Wodrington, my wife!"

Y. M. C. A. CONVENTION.

The Annual Conference of paid employees of the Young Men's Christian Association of the U. S. and British Provinces, was opened at 7.30 P. M. on Tuesday, June 1st, in the Hall of the House of Representatives at Harrisburg, Pa. The first session was given entirely to informal introductions and the discussion of new methods of work. Three sessions a day were held, in the morning from 9.30 to 12 o'clock, in the afternoon from 2.30 to 5 o'clock, and in the evening from 7.30 to 10 o'clock. The opening devotional exercise of each morning session was in the form of a Bible Class, the subjects and readers as follows:

"Christ's preparation for His life work," Luke, 11:40—52, Jas. McCanaughy. John XXI:1—13, James McCormick. "David" R. A. Orr. "The Rich Young Ruler," J. H. Elliott. "Men Blinded," 2 Cor 14:4, R. R. McBurney.

Nineteen important and interesting topics were taken up, opened by the older secretaries and thoroughly discussed. Over two hundred and twenty-five secretaries, assistants, and gymnasium instructors and thirty young men who were looking into the work, were present at the conference. On Sunday the pulpits of the various churches were filled by the visitors. On Sunday afternoon a mass meeting for men only was held in the Opera House and thirty young men started on the christian way at the close of the meeting. In the evening a memorial service was held in Association Hall at 7.45 o'clock, Geo. A. Hall of New York presiding; three members of the Conference, J. B. Wells, H. A. Bruton and Chas. Kimmel passed away during the year, and many touching remarks were made by their co-laborers. At 9.30 o'clock the farewell service was held. This was the most solemn and impressive service of the week, and as a large number of the secretaries stood, and in one sentence gave their impressions of the Conference and then all joining hands sang, "Blest be the tie that binds." Many eyes were filled with tears, for the fellows who had met together, are banded together as few if any other organizations are, and all realized that never again in this world would all meet together in one band. On Friday evening Mr. Jas. McCormick tendered a reception from 5 to 7 p. m., and on Saturday evening at 9 p. m., Gov. Pattison and wife gave a very pleasant reception at the Executive mansion. In a neat and pleasant speech Gov. Pattison said:

"I commend you for your efforts to give your efforts to give your fellow-men, through the association, what God has given you, and in seeking to elevate and save them. I know that you go armed and equipped for the battle, but remember that the future of the work will be judged just as you make the power grow with you. I congratulate you upon the future that awaits you, but hardly feel like congratulating you upon the responsibility involved. There is no work like yours and there is no reward like the reward that awaits you. I am glad to have you with us to-night, and trust you will return to your homes in safety, and the years that await you will be years of greater success in the accomplishment of your object than ever before in the history of your organization."

College Secretary Hisbard responded in behalf of the Association, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow," was sung, and the fellows went away from the Executive Mansion wishing there were many Governors like the present Governor of Pennsylvania.

W. L. FORCE & A. L. FORCE,
EDITORS AND PROPRIETORS.

ERIN.

The English House of Commons, by a small majority, defeated the just and proper measure prepared and introduced by Mr. Gladstone for the bestowal upon Ireland of her natural prerogative of Home Rule.

Defeat is sometimes equivalent to future victory, and in this instance it will, we think, so prove.

The question of Ireland's political rights is now before the people of England in a positive shape, and it will continue to be a living issue.

Mercenary efforts may for a time delay the full triumph of right, but any reform, founded upon truth and justice, if resolutely battled for, must eventually achieve success.

Home Rule for Ireland is the mandate of justice, and if advocated with prudent zeal and patriotic intent, will culminate in blotting out the age wrought stigma of British wrong.

Irishmen, bravely stand by your colors.

Your cause is just.

PROHIBITIONISTS.

Antagonise as earnestly as you please the avowed principles of the party of Prohibition, all sensible men must admit that it is, as a political combination, rapidly increasing in numbers and influence.

In some sections the Prohibitionists already hold the balance of power, and what the future may develop is a political problem worth pondering.

It is folly to treat with contempt any opposing force. Wisdom demands that facts be looked squarely in the face.

The new party is an evident fact.

However widely we may differ with the doctrines of the Prohibitionists, they certainly display a constancy of purpose and determined energy of action deserving of admiration.

There is no double dealing about them. They openly proclaim what they believe to be the right, and with bold independence move straight onward for the attainment of specific objects, and that regardless of fear or favor.

To the Republican party they say stand aside, and to the Democratic go your way, while from both they are drawing recruits.

The truth cannot be denied, that with a clearly defined progressive spirit popular strength abides.

It is political history.

GUBERNATORIAL.

The Democratic party has within its fold ample material from which to select the next Governor of New Jersey.

John P. Stockton, of Mercer; Robert S. Green, of Union; Andrew Albright, of Essex; John T. Bird, of Hunterdon; Judge Walling, of Monmouth, and various other gentlemen whom we might name, are each eminently fitted to discharge the trust of Chief Magistrate to their own personal credit and for the welfare of the State.

New Jersey can point with pride to her illustrious line of Democratic Governors, and it becomes us to say, that among them all, none made a nobler record or won a brighter fame than has Leon Abbett.

When a candidate, we predicted that he would make one of the best Governors that ever presided over the destinies of New Jersey, and fully has that prediction been verified.

Dignified, talented, courteous, and constant in the faithful performance of public duty, Governor Abbett has served the people well, and retiring from office will bear with him their universal respect and approval, which is unsullied honor.

His successor will be a Democrat of unquestioned ability and worth.

For Governor,
NOMINEE OF THE DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION.

SNAGS.

A Republican paper of New Jersey, yielding to the intensity of partisan bitterness, recently revived the absurd story that Democratic money had been contributed for the support of the Third or Prohibition party, and ventured to refer for the truth of its assertion to S. B. Ransom, of Jersey City, a gentleman of high character and pronounced Temperance views.

Mr. Ransom publicly declares the statement to be without any foundation in fact and an attempt to injure the Prohibition party.

Then Henry B. Howell, of Trenton, another citizen of unsullied repute, and the Prohibition Treasurer, was suggested as being the recipient of such Democratic subsidy.

That, Mr. Howell, by affidavit, proclaims a falsehood cut out of the whole cloth.

And finally, against Mr. Klotz, of Newark, Treasurer of the Democratic Central Committee, issued the insinuation that he paid over the money.

Which, Mr. Klotz also brands as an absolute untruth.

No, no, gentlemen of the G. O. P., that story won't pass muster; you must invent some thicker lined Roorbach.

The Democratic party is not overburdened with cash even for its own legitimate expenses, let alone for keeping afloat another political organization.

Democracy paddles its own canoe, and if other parties capsize their leaky yawls, the fault is theirs, not ours.

At a meeting of the Board of Trade of Elizabeth held last Monday evening, the irrepressible Hon. Wm. McKinlay expatiated at length on alleged extravagancies of the Union County Board of Freeholders, and attacked personally Director Martine. For years past it has been a source of pride to the taxpayers to know that the affairs of the county have been judiciously managed by the Board of Freeholders. Probably the ex-Hon. has a personal feeling in the matter. The County Collector's report will appear in our next issue. Everyone should read it.

From present appearances it seems as though Attorney-General Stockton will be the coming Democratic candidate for Governor. The party managers declare that Hon. R. S. Green is too useful and valuable a member of Congress to lose, and therefore desire his return. We are sure that the Jeffersonian Democracy of New Jersey would heartily endorse the name of Mr. Stockton for Governor, while those of the Third District would feel honored at the re-election of Hon. R. S. Green to Congress. Both the State and District would thus be honestly and efficiently represented.

A Plea for Pure Butter.

The following notice has been issued by the American Agricultural and Dairy Association:

NATIONAL HOTEL,
WASHINGTON, D. C., June 10, 1886

To the Farmers of New Jersey.

As you are aware, we are engaged in an earnest far-reaching effort to regulate the manufacture and sale of imitations of butter. We have succeeded in passing our bill through the House of Representatives after a most desperate fight against us by the bogus butter people. The question affects every owner of a cow in the country. The result of our effort means the salvation or the destruction of the dairy industry. It therefore concerns every farmer in the land. Our bill has been reported to the Senate, where we won a victory in its behalf yesterday on the question of reference to the Committee on Agriculture. Senator McPherson of your State opposed us with all his power and influence. He does not seem to understand that the farmers of New Jersey want this measure. I therefore urge that every farmer in the State write Senator McPherson, requesting him not to oppose the bill, but to support and vote for it, and do this at once, please. We already have the names of thousands of farmers in New Jersey to petitions praying for the passage of this bill. Senator Sewell is with us. I am particularly anxious that New Jersey should be right on this question, as it is my native State and my residence now.

Very respectfully yours,
JOSEPH H. REALL,
Pres American Agric'l and Dairy Ass'n.

WESTFIELD WISPS.

To whom does the drum belong? Miller says Jones said Theodore told him Brown gave it to the club.

Dr. F. A. Kinch, Mrs. Kinch and Dr. F. A. Kinch, jr., started yesterday on a four months Summer tour. They intend visiting the Pacific slope before returning.

Mr. James L. Miller has purchased 50 yards of stone from the Scotch Plains crusher, which he is putting on the road bed of Elm street at his own expense.

Lewis C. Theiss is very busy selling the warrior mower and other agricultural implements. Louis is a go-a-head fellow and is meeting with great success in his sales.

The new house for Mr. Aaron Hetfield, on Orchard street, is rapidly approaching completion, as also are the two new cottage houses of Mr. Henry Hosford on Kimball avenue.

Mr. Pierson, overseer of road district No. 8, has commenced to make repairs to the sidewalk in front of the Whittke building. The walk has been in a very bad condition for some time.

On Thursday evening a dog which has been a great annoyance to the pedestrians on Elm street, was killed. It having been sick for a day or two with distemper, it was killed at the request of the owner, Mrs. Bragg.

The repairing, cleaning and renovating of the Presbyterian church is rapidly progressing. It is also intended to build an alcove in the rear of the pulpit, in which is to be located the large organ now in the gallery of the church.

On Tuesday afternoon Mr. John N. Wilcox moved the large safe belonging to our township, from the present town rooms to the new building on Elm street, in which the upper floor is to be occupied as rooms for township purposes.

On July 14th the M. E. Sunday school, together with the Congregational Sunday school and the schools of the M. E. churches of Fanwood and Cranford go on their annual excursion to Ocean Grove. They expect to make it the excursion of the season.

The new road recently laid out, known as Ackerman avenue, running from the foot of the mountain and connecting with one of the main roads on the top of the mountain, has been graded in good shape, making a much better and easier way of getting to the top of the mountain, than the old road usually traveled. All the road needs now is the erecting of a bridge over the ravine near the top of the mountain, which no doubt will be done as soon as the contract can be given out. The committee appointed by the Board of Freeholders visited the location on Wednesday afternoon last, and have decided upon its erection.

The new stone crusher for Mr. Hoffman arrived this week, and is being erected on the mountain. The boiler and engine to run the crusher with has been purchased and shipped on the D. L. & W. railroad, from there to be taken to its destination. It will now no doubt be only a short time when all of our road overseers, and also our residents, will be able to get any quantity and of all sizes of crushed stone they may need.

On Sunday, after church was out, Mr. Jacob D. French was driving his horse and rockaway along Broad street. When nearing the railroad, a young man came over the track on a bicycle. The horse became frightened and made a short turn, upsetting the wagon and throwing out the occupants, which consisted of Mr. French and two ladies, who fortunately were but slightly injured, and very little damage was done to the wagon, which was soon righted and driven home.

Children's day was celebrated by the scholars of the M. E. Sunday school last Sunday. The church was handsomely decorated with flowers and ferns and a very interesting programme was carried out, consisting of singing and recitations by the children of the school. Three children received the ordinance of baptism; a very able address on Education was delivered by the Rev. J. L. Hurlbut, D. D., of Plainfield. At both morning and afternoon sessions the church was crowded with the children, their parents and friends.

The residents of our entire community deeply sympathize with Mr. and Mrs. John W. Beebe in the death of their young son, John W. Beebe, jr., aged two years and four months. Mrs. Beebe and the child were in the parlor of their dwelling on Cumberland street, Saturday afternoon last, when a neighbor called. The child left the room, as Mrs. Beebe supposed, to go into the kitchen where the servant was, but went up stairs into the bath room and turned on the hot water faucet and allowed the tub to fill about half full. Climbing over and dropping himself into the scalding water his screams brought his mother to his rescue and when taken out of the tub it was found that the lower part of his body was scalded. Drs. Gale and Cooper did all in their power to alleviate the child's sufferings but it was of no avail, as he died two hours after. The funeral services were held at the residence of the child's parents on Monday last at 4 30 p. m. Burial on Tuesday morning in Fairview cemetery.

The New York Sun of Tuesday contained an article full of instruction to the Democracy of New Jersey as to the great importance of the approaching State election. No one knows that fact better than the Democrats themselves, and as the Elizabeth Herald says:

"We appreciate the Sun's great interest in our affairs, but it's cautions are wholly unnecessary. New Jersey was never lost by us except when we went after strange political gods in the Greeley fiasco. Fortune, too, invariably favors the brave. The Republicans have been monkeying with Prohibition and are now between the devil and the fathomless sea. Turn as they will, wiggle as they may, they are doomed to disaster. If they unite on Fisk and pronounce for sumptuary legislation they will lose thousands of their voters; if they refuse to conglomerate and stick to simon pure Republicanism, the temperance element in their party is bound to secede, and not all the money of all the railroads, Democratic mistakes, or corporate powers can save them from inglorious disaster."

AYER'S Hair Vigor cures baldness. Hair Vigor restores youthful freshness and color to faded and gray hair. It attains these results by the stimulation of the hair roots and color glands. It rejuvenates the HAIR and cleanses it. It restores to the HAIR that, either by reason of age or disease of the scalp, has become dry, harsh and brittle, a pliancy and glossy silken softness of extreme beauty. There is no dye in Ayer's Hair VIGOR and the good it does is by the VIGOR it imparts to the follicles, and the cleanliness and healthfulness of the condition in which it maintains the scalp.
AYER'S Hair Vigor renews the hair. Hair Vigor is the best cure known for Brashy Hair, Scald Head, Itching Humors, Tetter Sores, Torpid Follicles, and all other diseases of the scalp that cause the falling of the HAIR and its fading. Nothing cleanses the HAIR of the nuisance of dandruff so perfectly, and so effectually prevents its return, as AYER'S HAIR VIGOR. In addition to the curative and restorative virtues peculiar to Ayer's Hair VIGOR it is a toilet luxury. The Hair VIGOR is by far the cleanliest hair-dressing made. It causes the hair to grow thick and long, and keeps it always soft and glossy.
Ayer's Hair Vigor
Contains no deleterious ingredients. Its use prevents all scalp disease, secures against the hair growing thin or gray, and surely cures all baldness that is not organic.

FROM Elizabeth comes the old "chestnut" that appears each Summer in the local columns of its papers: "The mosquitoes seem to be as lively as ever this season."

FIRE crackers, torpedoes, and fire works in general, are making their appearance in the store windows, and the small boy is correspondingly and expectantly happy.

THE Borough of Dunellen has passed an ordinance requiring the trimming of the trees, and the authorities with more "sand" than our authorities seem possessed of, have sent notices to residents and property owners requesting them to conform with the law at once.

THE contracts for the addition to the County Jail are all given out. The male quarters will be extended so as to give forty-four new cells, and the addition will make the jail twice its present size. The changes in the female part of the prison will be chiefly of a sanitary character.

AT the churches, last Sunday, "Children's Day" was observed by appropriate and beautiful services. Elegant floral decorations, singing by the little ones and special exercises by the scholars, and sermons and lessons by pastors and teachers, filled the general programme everywhere.

A PERIPATETIC cornet player made the residents in his vicinity howl, Monday evening, and so frightened a little child in the upper window of a North avenue flat, that it almost fell through the sash and knocked out a big piece of glass that just missed decapitating Mr. Van Sickle who stood below.

THE 11th N. J. Vols., had a meeting at Brunswick, Wednesday, at which assembled about eighty-five old comrades, including Messrs. T. O. Doane, Wm. Bloodgood, Wm. Hand, John Goodwin, Henry Molleson and Wm. Paine of this city. It was decided to hold the reunion of next year in Plainfield, on June 16th.

THEO. HENNOGER, residing with Mr. Streuli, corner Prospect and Hillside avenues, was arrested on Friday last for committing a provoked assault upon a young son of Mr. Wm. S. Darling. He was brought before Justice Nash and gave bonds to answer before the Grand Jury in October next. Mr. Streuli gave the necessary bonds.

SMALL fruits of all kinds promise a greater crop than ever before in New Jersey. Currants and raspberries never blossomed more freely, and cherries, that are now beginning to ripen, are in such abundance that large branches are breaking with the burden of the fruit. They seem free from insect stings. The wild huckleberry and blackberry are now in blossom, the bushes being masses of flowers.

ABOUT eight-thirty o'clock of Monday morning last, one of the district messenger wires dropped across the fire alarm circuit that runs into Warren's house, and when some innocent subscriber rang up a messenger the signal was rung. The horses were hooked up, but before starting out the telephone was consulted as to the whereabouts of the fire and the cause was thus discovered.

FOR the past few years, Mr. S. C. Roney, of Ninth street, has been the travelling salesman in the South of one of the largest manufacturing companies in the country. The result of his faithful service in this capacity is the building up of so extensive a trade that a Southern branch is necessary, with headquarters at Knoxville, Tenn., and Mr. Roney will be placed at its head. He will remove thereto with his family, in a few weeks.

A RIDE through the country will show how generally the hammock has come into use as an adjunct of outdoor comfort. There is scarcely a dooryard or piazza of any pretensions without one or more of these swinging couches. Rightly placed and hung, the hammock affords the very luxury of repose, and our people have done well to borrow it from their Southern neighbors, whose climate and temperament are so conducive to the cultivation of a "genius for repose." For an enjoyable and healthful siesta, or for Summer reading and day-dreaming, this "couch in the air" is preferable to all others. Its utilitarian ends are many, whilst it is essentially a thing of beauty and of luxury.

NEXT week will witness the closing exercises for the year of a number of schools, seminaries and colleges of the country. The long-looked-for vacation will begin, and the great army of young school-going people will enter upon the realization of the happy dreams and cherished projects they have entertained in regard to this leisure period. The members of the graduating classes, however, who sever their connection forever with school life at the close of this term, and who feel that the responsibilities of existence now lie close before them, will view commencement and vacation with more sober feelings. The value and sufficiency of the preparation they have made for the work of life will soon be fully tested.

OH, trim the tre-s!

WE had not intended to say anything about the circus that recently visited us, but so many have asked us how we liked it that we really feel called upon to state that it was positively the worst we ever saw, and neither worthy nor decent.

ON June first all the important Southern railroads changed their tracks from five feet to the standard gauge of four feet eight and one-half inches. This is a notable step toward facilitating intercourse between North and South. It makes the entire country one business community and sweeps away the last commercial barrier between two long estranged sections.

THE board of councilmen of Rahway had a more than usually lively time at their session Tuesday night. The awarding of the contract for furnishing the city with light was the cause. Progress was the order of the evening, and by a vote of eight to four a contract was made with Tesla Electric Light Company for two years, at $75 per year per light, thirty-five lights to be furnished.

THE New York Portrait Company, whose main office is 37 Dey street, New York, and who have a branch store in Force's Hotel building, North avenue, have met with great success since opening in this city. The agent, Mr. A. H. Heisser, has received orders from many of our leading citizens for crayon portraits, which have given general satisfaction for their true likeness, workmanship and price. The agent will remain in this city but a short time longer, therefore those who desire to secure a good crayon picture should avail themselves of the present opportunity.

The Exempt Firemen Association of Brooklyn, E. D., have perfected arrangements, for a grand tournament, to be held at Ridgewood Park, Long Island, on September 14th and 15th, 1886. The prizes to be offered for competition will be of a suitable nature commemorative of the event. Distance trials of Hose, Hook & Ladder Companies, etc. Due notice of which, together with the programme of the tournament, will be published in the New York Firemen's Herald.

THE Martin's Quartette had an entertainment in the old Council rooms, Tuesday evening, upon which occasion there was a walk by the colored ladies and gentlemen present for a silver cup and silver headed cane. The contest was quite close and the judges had some difficulty in deciding. At last, after selecting five couples from the lot and walking them alone, Miss Agnes Vail was selected as the most stylish, graceful and easy walker, and to her was awarded the prize; while her escort, Mr. Potter, secured the cane for the second time this season. Had there been two cups, Miss Dolly Fitzgerald would surely have received one.

THERE will be given this (Thursday) evening, at the club house of Union Club, the first entertainment and reception of the Young Women's Christian Temperance Union. The association's numbers were limited to one hundred, but already that quota has been exceeded. It was first intended that only maiden ladies would be admitted but as married ones have crept in, such rule must necessarily be abolished unless a divorce is procured by the Union. The members propose to labor among the young men of the city, and secure their signatures to a pledge of abstinence from intoxicating beverages. The entertainment, however, will be of a musical, literary and social nature.

ANOTHER improvement in the inner details of the Hotel Netherwood, is the re-arrangement and better management below in the store rooms and culinary departments. The new Steward is Mr. William S. Bosworth, a gentleman of ability and experience. In his hands the interests of the hotel are well entrusted, and the satisfaction of the guests with the table is complete. An inspection of the store rooms and ice boxes shows how clean and sweet everything is kept, and the vegetables and berries that are received fresh for each day's consumption are handled with that care that is so requisite. Mr. H. Diebold and Mrs Diebold are the competent chefs that make the Netherwood menus models of variety, and have already gained for the hotel's dinners a great reputation.

THE Birdsall property at No. 36 Duer street, North Plainfield, has just been purchased by ex-Collector Wm. H. Shotwell.

THE same quartette choir that favored the attendance at the Netherwood chapel, last Sunday morning, will sing again in the same place next Sunday.

MISS KENYON, Mr. and Mrs. J. Ward Stinson and Mrs. Arnold of the Seminary, returned Wednesday afternoon from a carriage trip to Lake Mohunk.

A NEW prize has been added this year to those for competition by the public school scholars. Mr. Ernest R. Ackerman, a post-graduate, offers a prize for excellence in the study of languages.

THE motto of the graduating class of the High School this year, is in plain, everyday English, and it seems therefore to be more sincere, emphatic and promising. It is: "Effort, if not success."

THE dog ordinance, about which so much has been said, goes into force next Monday. A proclamation will then be issued, that, among other things, will define just what constitutes a "muzzle" under the law.

JUST as the 11:44 express for Philadelphia slowed up at the Plainfield station, Thursday morning, the connecting rod on one side of the engine, broke. This caused a delay of a half-hour here, and the locomotive had to run to Bound Brook slowly, with only one cylinder doing the work.

DR. DUPREE is now at the City Hotel and busy of course. No wonder, for his cures of painful feet troubles are known to everybody. If anyone misses this last chance of seeing him it will be because they don't read the papers. He remains all this week, closing Saturday evening. See "Want" column in this issue.

THE Maryland Military and Naval Academy, at Oxford, offer a cadetship at reduced rates with free board, to Mayor Rockfellow. Those desiring such an appointment should call on His Honor and get further particulars. He has a list of the cadets and can furnish all other information in relation, that may be desired.

THE encore fiend was present in great numbers, last Tuesday evening, at Assembly Hall. These little boys applaud loud and long without reason or provocation, and their freshness in this particular upon the presentation of a bouquet by one of the ushers, misled the High School Choir into the supposition that it was being complimented, so it sang again.

THE High School has been presented with a valuable collection of minerals, properly labeled and conveniently arranged in a handsome cabinet. The collection was formed by the donor, Mr. Edward Milliken, a post-graduate of the school, while a student at Columbia College School of Mines. It is estimated to be worth intrinsically about $300, but many of the specimens are very rare and would hardly be replaced at the price.

THE horse and wagon of Mr. Jacob Krisby was left standing in front of Messrs. Spicer & Hubbard's mill, Thursday morning. A passing train over the Madison avenue bridge frightened the animal, and it started at a great rate of speed towards the Eastern horizon. At the corner of Sixth street the horse made a leap over the fence into the vacant lot back of the residence of ex-Councilman Wadsworth, and dragged the wagon after it. In the vehicle had been the ten-year-old son of Mr. Emmons, the builder, and although the lad was violently thrown out at the corner, he miraculously escaped death or injury.

Tyler, of the Board of Education, has consented to deliver an address, and the Seventh Regiment Band of New York will discourse choice music. Rev. and Mrs. A. V. V. Raymond are rejoicing over the advent of a son.

Mr. Eugene Marcile, a resident of Port Orange, Volusia county, Florida, is visiting at the residence of his brother-in-law, Chief A. Saltzman, of this city. Mr. Marcile is largely interested in orange culture in Florida.

Mr. L. B Mulford and wife entertained a number of their many friends at their residence on Second street, on Tuesday evening last, it being the fifth anniversary of their marriage. The gifts were many and handsome.

Mr. Geo. R. Nicholl, of Scotch Plains, visited our sanctum on Saturday last, and was a welcome sight. Although a resident of our sister village, but a couple of miles away, Mr. Nicholl has not visited Plainfield but twice in nearly three years, his duties in New York requiring his close attention. We hope "George" will visit us often.

We See the Sham.

Talmage hit it right, in his sermon on newspapers, when he said the profession saw more of the sham of the world than any other. "Through every newspaper office, day by day, go the weaknesses of the world, the vanities that want to be puffed, the revenges that want to be wreaked, all of the mistakes that want to be corrected, all the dull speakers who want to be thought eloquent, all the meanness that wants to get its wares noticed gratis in the editorial columns in order to save the tax of advertising columns, all men who want to be set right who never were right."

Union County Press Club.

Through the courtesy of Mr. Staats, the parlors of the Sheridan House, Elizabeth, Tuesday evening were made use of for a gathering of representatives of the press in this county, and a temporary organization of the Union County Press Club was formed, by the selection of the following officers: President, Joseph D. Lowden, of the Journal; Secretary, Edgar P. Watson, Jr., of the Mechanical Engineer; Treasurer, Herbert A. Pierson, of the New York Herald. The Club adjourned to meet on Saturday evening, June 26, and the Secretary was authorized to invite all newspaper publishers, editors, reporters and regular correspondents of the press to be present and participate in the permanent organization. The list comprises about forty persons.

Brother Coffin Draws the Line.

We don't mind answering reasonable requests from persons at a distance, but when a man writes us to ascertain for him the cost of board for his wife, three children, nurse and a dog all the season, and himself and son from Saturdays to Mondays, three rooms fronting the ocean, in a first class hotel where there is no "style," and where the charges are the same as at a farm-house ten miles inland, and to get prices from six or eight such houses and "answer immediately," then language makes an assignment and we lay the letter gently away in the waste basket by the side of the one that asks for "a list of all your hotels and cottages and their lowest prices for board." About seven times per week some one asks the editor to go out board hunting for an utter stranger and encloses a two-cent postage stamp for remuneration.—Asbury Park Journal.

Saturday Half-Holidays.

We had hoped to see more of the business men of the city join us last Saturday in giving their employees a half-holiday But possibly to-morrow they intend to begin the custom for the Summer. We trust the public will be sure and do all its shopping before noon of each Saturday, and thus help the cause by destroying the necessity of keeping the stores open. The Elizabeth Herald said last week:

"The proprietors of the Plainfield CONSTITUTIONALIST know how to treat their employees, and deserve and will receive the thanks of workingmen generally for the generosity displayed in the following proposition, which they make in their truly Democratic Journal. Read: 'Who'll join THE CONSTITUTIONALIST in giving their employees a half-holiday on Saturdays during the Summer months? All speak at once, and let every employer agree to close at noon on Saturdays. There'll be no loss of trade in the end, and your employees will gain rest and strength that will fit them to work the harder and the more willingly.'"

On You Depends the City's Advancement.

We can safely say to our readers that the Plainfield Electric Light Company has concluded to furnish private houses and stores with the incandescent light. The exact terms will be published within a short time. In the meanwhile the securing of the right to set poles and run wires is being obtained from property owners within the gas territory, and it is to the interest of the City at large as well as property owners, that this privilege be accorded the Company so as to enable them to put the plant in operation within the specified time allotted by the Council. The Common Council has demanded of the Company the written consent of every property owner to place a pole on his or their property, and to file the same with the City Clerk, and any hesitation or refusal will greatly impede progress. The City's general benefit depends upon your own magnanimity. Don't delay the coming of one of the greatest of modern improvements, and a luxury that so many other cities will envy us, by withholding your permission.

Miss Bovee's Class.

Neat little cards of invitation brought together a large attendance in Assembly Hall, Tuesday evening, upon the occasion of the first public reception, of any extent, of the High School class in elocution. For some months past under the tuition of Miss Bovee, a graduate of the Boston School of Oratory, a number of young ladies have been perfecting themselves in ease of gesture, clearness of enunciation and fitness of emphasis, with such satisfactory results that the evidence presented Tuesday evening was unexpected and marvellous. The entertainment began with chorus readings by the entire class, followed by a piano solo that was greatly to the credit of Miss Dowey. This lady again favored the audience during the evening, besides accompanying the sweet singing of the High School choir in enjoyable part songs. Mr. Tom Brown, Jr., was so successful with his solo rendition of "Polly," that its repetition was demanded. Members of the elocution class throughout the programme gave individual exhibition of their respective abilities, and each showed a certain finish and method peculiarly the outcome of the teacher's system and her power to instruct and train. Those who read were Miss Mollie Janes, Miss Annie Bingener, Miss Ella Woltman, Miss West, Miss Westervelt, Miss Wheeler and Miss Erickson. Miss Hattie Leah took part with the above in the class readings. Miss Bovee also gave an exhibition of her wonderful talent, that was the most pleasing part of the whole.

Washington Valley.

It is surprising how little is known by the residents of Plainfield of the section of country lying to the West of them, known as the "Mountains." A more charming stretch of country would be difficult to find anywhere than that through the "Notch" and along the "Washington Valley" road to Washington Rock or to Warrenville. A stranger visiting this section for the first time naturally asks why has not this country with its charming rural scenery, its mountain springs and glens, and with its pure, bracing mountain air and unquestioned healthfulness, been chosen in preference by the large class of wealthy people who have settled on the flat-land below. There seems to be no satisfactory answer to the question, save that the primitive and bad condition of the roadways has been such as to alarm the timid and render impossible anything like rapid traveling over them. This serious objection is at last likely to be overcome. Within the past few years a number of families of enterprising New Yorkers have located in this vicinity and have been making extensive improvements. Realizing the importance of having good roads, they have recently united with the native element and taken up subscriptions for road improvements—the trifling amount allowed by the township being wholly inadequate to put and keep the roads in good condition. It is hoped that a sufficient amount will be subscribed to cover the Washington Valley road with crushed stone; and eventually to cover the road leading around by way of Dunellen with the same material, thus securing for the citizens of Plainfield and others one of the most delightful drives to be found in New Jersey.

A Warmer May Than Last.

Any one asked if this last month of May was cooler than the May of last year would be likely to answer, quite promptly, yes, considerably cooler, but the fact is that, while the average temperature of the month just passed was 60 9—say 61—that of May, 1885, was 59 6, or nearly a degree and one-third lower There has not been what can be called a warm May month for six years, as we have to go back to 1880 to get an average of 68.3, as far as 1881 to get an average of 63 8, and with one exception (1882) it was the wettest May for thirteen years The total rainfall was 4 50 inches—nearly 5 inches—against 2 76 in 1885; 3.20 in 1884; 1 91 in 1883, and 5.06 in 1882. After that there is no equal rainfall to be found in May until we reach 1873, when it was 5.82.—Belvidere Apollo.

The New Law About Notes.

Certified copies of the new act concerning commercial paper have been sent to all the banks by Secretary of State Kelsey. The act makes New Years' Washington's Birthday, Decoration Day, Independence Day, Thanksgiving, Christmas, general election days, and any day set apart by the Governor or by the President, legal holidays. It any falls on Sunday, the Monday next will be observed, and all notes or bills of exchange being due and payable on such Sunday or Monday shall be due and payable on the Tuesday following. It makes notes falling due Sunday payable on the first business day following. Section 5 provides that in case of dishonor of any note, etc., being due and payable on any of the days referred to, twenty four hours shall be allowed in addition to the time at which such note or bill of exchange or draft is due and payable under the act, in which to give notice of such dishonor, and every such notice so given shall be valid to all intents and purposes, and that all checks payable on any of above-named holidays, or on a Sunday as above named, shall fall due the same day as other drafts and notes. The act makes a different system of protests from that prevailing in any other part of the country.

The Battles of Vicksburg.

The Cyclorama at the building, corner of Seventh avenue and Fifty-fifth street, New York, is the joint production of Messieurs Joseph Bertrand and Lucien Sergent of Paris, France, who painted panoramas that are now on exhibition in many European capitals, and who distinguished themselves in the United States by producing "The Battle of Gettysburg," now on exhibition in Chicago, and "The Battle of Waterloo," on exhibition in San Francisco, two pictures that have already been visited by over 2,500,000 people. Some four years ago, Gen. Grant suggested the Battles of Vicksburg as a subject for a painting, and acting on the suggestion, M. Bertrand spent several months in Vicksburg studying and sketching the scene of the battle. After consulting the official maps in the War Department and personally interviewing distinguished officers who were in the fight, he returned to Paris, and with Monsieur Sergent spent nearly eighteen months working on the picture. The details of the picture are innumerable and must be seen to be appreciated. Unlike most panoramas, this one portrays a land and a naval battle at the same time—the Federal troops assaulting and the Confederates defending the city, and Porter's fleet on the river sending shot and shell into the streets, setting fire to buildings and dealing death and destruction wherever they exploded. Here can be seen hand-to-hand conflicts—dead and mutilated men and horses, artillery soldiers dragging cannon which the horses could not haul over the broken ground, the smoke from the guns, so real that the spectator can almost hear the roar of artillery and the roll of musketry, and it is difficult for him to divest himself of the feeling that he is not in the midst of the battle.

Democratic Press Association.

Pursuant to a call made and endorsed by a number of Democratic journals of the State to meet at Asbury Park, Tuesday, June 15th, for the purpose of organizing a Democratic Press Association, a number of the editors met at the above mentioned place at the time designated, and laid the foundation planks for such an organization as the head of this notice indicates. The meeting was held in the Board of Trade rooms at Asbury Park. There were present, Col. Page, of the Bayonne Herald, Major James A. Yard, of the Monmouth Democrat, Henry Cook, Elizabeth Herald, E. LeClere Voght, Morristown Banner, J. S. Jones, Democrat-Advertiser, Flemington, St. George Kempsen, Perth Amboy Democrat, J. B Elfreth, Millville Transcript, J. G. Oliver, May's Landing Journal, N. W. Penfield, Shore Press, W. L. Force, THE CONSTITUTIONALIST. Letters and telegrams were received from J. J. Hall, of the Atlantic Times, John Carpenter, Clinton Democrat, Wm. Hutchinson, Newark Journal, Keyport Enterprise, and other Democratic journals of the State, regretting their inability to be present, and heartily concurring in the movement.

Major Yard was made temporary Chairman and J. B. Elfreth Secretary of the Convention.

After an explanatory address of the object of the Convention by Mr. Penfield, and in consideration of the fact that Col. Page, the mover in the matter of forming a Democratic Press Association, was not present, but was expected later, an adjournment was made until 4 p. m. At that time Col. Page was made permanent Chairman and Mr. Elfreth Secretary. In an eloquent and able manner Col. Page stated the object of the gathering, which was to form an organization among the Democratic editors of the State for their mutual protection and benefit in business affairs, and to bring each member of the craft together so that socially they might become better acquainted with each other.

He was followed by Major Yard of the Monmouth Democrat Henry S. Cook, of the Elizabeth Herald, and others. After a free intercourse of opinion on the objects and success of the proposed Association, a committee composed of the following named were appointed to draft a constitution and by-laws and report at a future meeting—Messrs. Cook, Force, Yard, Oliver, Voght, with the Chairman, Col. Page added. On motion a committee of one from each Congressional District was appointed to ascertain the views of absent Democratic editors in their districts, as to their views on the organization of the Association, as follows: 1st District—J. B. Elfreth; 2d District—J. G. Oliver; 3d District—W. L. Force; 4th District—John L. Jones; 5th District—E. LeClere Voght; 6th District—William Hutchinson; 7th District—Col. H. Page.

A vote of thanks was extended to Mr. N. W. Penfield, of the Shore Press for the courteous attention paid and extended to the visitors, after which the meeting adjourned subject to the call of the Chair.

During their sojourn at Asbury Park, the members of the fraternity were entertained in a fine and generous manner by Mr. Penfield, of the Shore Press, whose office is a model of neatness, utility and business. Those who were so fortunate as to dine at the Commercial Hotel, Jas. H. Romain, proprietor, were right royally served. Mr. R. is one who knows how to cater to the wants of the public. All were loud in their praises of the beauty and cleanliness of Asbury Park. It is a place where one can take his family and enjoy a quiet day with good accommodation and grand ocean scenery and bathing.

THE DEMON, PRIDE.

BY HANNAH BLOSGREN.

It was a very pretty picture. A room tastily furnished with light blue, and white lace covers; by a window through which the afternoon sun shone, sat a young girl, bending over some embroidery.

She was light-haired and fair; a gentle, timid little thing, with sensitiveness written in the sweet, rosy mouth, and in the lovely gray eyes.

She was humming softly as she worked, but it was a sad and plaintive air, and accorded well with the tear drops that fell now and then upon her dainty, delicate hands.

Presently the door behind her was opened, and a tall, fine looking man entered, and came and stood near her.

She looked up as the shadow fell across her work, and seeing him, she started to her feet with a fluttering sigh and extended hands and a face that told both of joy and of sorrow.

"Glad to see me Anna?" he asked, tenderly, as he took her hands in his.

"Oh, yes, you know I am," she replied, joyously, though the tears were gathering thick and fast, in her eyes. "But yet—"

"What now?" he asked, almost impatiently.

"Oh; Allan," she faltered, "why don't you try to forget me? I am happy, so very happy," as she looked gladly up at him, "and yet I am so very miserable" and her head drooped again.

"You contradict yourself, my sweet one," he returned, gently, as he drew her toward him. "You could be happy, Anna, if you would only allow yourself to be so; but you torture yourself with foolish fancies—"

"They are not foolish," she interrupted. "Think—a poor dependent on your mother's bounty, to have dared to love you! It is preposterous, as your mother this morning told me. She spoke very coldly and sternly to me, Allan," and she looked up with her eyes all wet with tears, and her lips quivering.

"She will not do it again," he said, firmly. "I will speak to her to-day, tell her of my love for you and that you must be my wife. She loves me, and will not see me unhappy; though, if she should oppose me, I must show her that wife is dearer to me than mother."

"Oh, Allan, Allan," cried Anna, in a terrified voice, "do not speak to her! Go away, and forget me! I could not disobey her now, after all her kindness to me."

"Anna, decide between us now. Have you more consideration for my mother than you have for me? Could you give me up, little darling?"

"No; oh, no," she cried, as she clung to him and sobbed piteously.

"That is right, Anna; cling to me. If you love me as I think you do, you will brave even more than my mother's displeasure. I will seek her now; and while I am gone chase away your idle fears, for you shall be mine though all the world should try to prevent it."

He turned to leave her, and came face to face with his mother, who was standing in the doorway.

He started slightly as he saw the stern, forbidding look upon her face, and heard her say, coldly:

"Anna, you may leave the room for a while."

Anna started violently as she heard that voice; she cast one hasty glance at mother and son, both standing like types of pride and will, and with the tears flowing fast and free, she hurried from the room.

Mrs. Bruce was a tall and stately woman, with her most prominent traits, pride and firmness, written plainly upon her face.

She turned to her son, saying in a tone of intense disdain:

"Amusing yourself by breaking that tender girl's heart. I did not think you capable of such an act, Allan."

The angry blood mounted to his fine face as he returned:

"You do not know your son if you can talk so to him, madam. I love Anna, and intend that she shall by my wife. I ask you now for your consent."

"And if I refuse to give it?" she asked quietly.

"Then, mother, for the first time in my life, I must act contrary to your wishes. But you will consent; you would not see me unhappy. Anna is all that I could desire; she is poor and dependent, to be sure, but—"

His mother interrupted him by turning aside abruptly, and going to the window, where she stood for several moments, as if in deep meditation.

Her face was colder and sterner than ever, but when she faced her son again, that expression had changed to one of mildness.

She came to Allan, saying gently:

"I do not wish to see you unhappy, my son, and I will give my consent to your marriage with one, who is little better than a menial, upon conditions."

"And they—what are they?" he asked eagerly.

"That you go away for a number of months, during which period you must neither write to Anna nor hear from her. If at the end of that time your love for her is as deep as now, I will oppose your marriage no longer."

"Oh, mother, that is hard," he began.

"No, Allan, it is not; did you love her truly you would endure even more than that for her sake."

He stood thoughtful for a moment, then in a determined tone, said:

"I will go. I would not like to win Anna and displease you, for it would prevent my joy from being complete. If six months' denial will insure me that, then I can endure it gladly."

A triumphant gleam shot from Mrs. Bruce's eyes; in another instant she was her calm, cold self again, as she asked:

"When will you go, Allan?"

"At once, mother. Send for Anna, please; I would say a last word to her."

"No, my son. Indulge me in this desire; I would not have you say a word to her. If she loves you, and is worthy of you, she will be faithful through time and absence. Go, and in six months all will be well, I trust."

In less than an hour after Allan's departure, Mrs. Bruce sent for Anna to come to her. Timidly Anna entered the room, and stood before the woman who had reared her from childhood.

"Anna," she said, sternly, "you have driven my son from his home."

The ready tears came, as Anna cried:

"Allan—has he gone? Where?"

"That matters nothing to you," was the cold reply.

"Had it not been for you he would not have had to leave me."

"Then let me go, and he can return," Anna cried, clasping her hands together pleadingly.

"No; it is better that he should remain away, till he has forgotten his foolish fancy for you. Anna, have I not always been kind to you?"

"Yes, ma'am; indeed, indeed, you have."

"Then believe that what I do now is out of kindness for you. I expect that you will obey me in what I request of you, and will not prove yourself ungrateful. Anna, Harry Bolton has been here to-day to ask for your hand in marriage. It is my desire that you become his wife. Do you hear, Anna?"

She might well ask if she had heard, for she stood like a statue, white and dumb.

"Do you hear, Anna?" she repeated.

"Yes," came faintly from her livid lips.

"What is your reply, then?"

A shudder shook the girl's entire frame, and her stupor was dispelled. She sank upon her knees, and raising her hands appealingly, she cried:

"Oh, madam, spare me! Let me go away, but do not force me to marry. I cannot, oh, I cannot."

"You are ungrateful, Anna," said Mrs. Bruce, sternly, as she arose. "I will not stay to listen to you. Think over the matter, and decide over the course you will pursue. If you expect to retain my favor, you must marry Harry Bolton."

She left the room, and Anna crouched down to the floor and wailed aloud.

She remained there battling with herself for hours; and the end of the struggle was that she decided to obey Mrs. Bruce.

Had she been less anxious to prove her gratitude, or had Allan said one word to her before his departure, she would have come to another decision; as it was, she decided to obey.

Then she arose, looking like one who had lost all interest in life, and went to Mrs. Bruce and told her. Mrs. Bruce saw her sad, pale face, the weariness in her eyes, and yet she triumphed over her success.

Preparations for the marriage were commenced at once. Anna saw it all, and suffered keenly, though she made no sign. In the same apathetic way she met the man who was to be her husband. Daily she grew paler and thinner, till when the wedding day was at hand, she looked more fit for a shroud than for bridal vestments.

She had hoped against hope that something would happen to save her from the misery before her; but when she stood beside the man whom she had just promised to "love, honor and obey," she knew that now she could hope no more.

Scarcely half alive she was arrayed in her traveling robe, and carried to the carriage that took her from her old home, the home of the man she loved. Her new home was to be in Buffalo, and there her husband took her, and tried in every way in his power to win her love, but in vain.

"How will it end?" was the only cry of her heart. "How can I live to endure it?"

Harry Bolton soon realized that something must be done to arouse her from her apathy. He could think of nothing but travel, and he determined to try that; it was Winter, and bitter, stormy weather, but he felt that it would not do to delay even on that account.

So, one evening, they left Buffalo for the West. They started, but they never reached their destination. All know of the Ashtabula horror, and Harry and Anna were in that ill-fated train.

Harry was wondering if ever he could succeed in winning Anna's love; and Anna was wailing as usual:

"How will it end? How will it end?"

Both were aroused by a terrible crash, followed by a horrible sensation of going down—down till they knew no more.

Anna's next realization was seeing the face of Allan Bruce before her. She started up wildly and looked around, and her eyes fell upon Mrs. Bruce. Then she sank back exhausted, and tried to go back over past events, and to remember what had happened.

She soon learned; as soon as she was able to hear it they told her.

Allan had been on that train that night, and he had saved himself by a timely leap, and then had hastened to render what assistance he could.

The first form he had found had been that of Anna; he could not stop to wonder then how she had come to be there, but took her to a hotel, and telegraphed for his mother.

She came at once, saw the consequence of her pride, and remorseful, and well nigh broken-hearted, she explained all.

She suffered keenly while watching by Anna's sick bed; but when Harry Bolton's body was found and recognized, her suffering was deepened to abject misery, and pride departed from her forever.

Anna heard of her husband's death; she felt sad, of course, but she could not grieve at her widowhood.

At the end of the six months, Anna's health being fully restored, she became Allan's wife with the full and hearty consent of his mother.

The sun of happiness soon dispelled the cloud that had enveloped the lives of Allan and Anna; but the mother ever remained a sad and sorrowing woman, for she could not forget the consequences that had come when she had yielded to the promptings of the Demon, Pride.

FOUR DON'TS.

A little girl when recently asked her name said it was "Minnie Don't." Her mother so frequently said "Don't" to her that she thought it was her name. Still, it's a good word in its way, and we want to call your attention to four things which please don't do.

FIRST--
Don't imagine, when you want to purchase Clothing, that it makes little difference where you buy. It makes a big difference, unless you are overrun with money. Prices are not the same everywhere. Almost any store has its $10, $12 or $15 Suit; but, the quality for the money —there is where the difference comes in. Why, we owe one-half of our success to comparisons made between our goods and others. It pays to shop. But, if you dislike shopping, why buy of us once, and we will have your custom as long as you need clothes.

SECOND--
Don't suppose that all that looks like wool is so. They have got the thing down so fine now that an expert can hardly tell the difference. Wool has got to grow on a sheep's back; and that's where the wool comes from of which our all-wool Suits are made. You may not be able to see the difference between ours and some others at the same price; but you'll find it out in the wear—and don't you forget it.

THIRD--
Don't believe, or buy any goods of, anybody who professes to sell at half cost. It can't be done. A merchant can no more sell you a Suit at less than cost—unless it's an old-style, shop-worn thing he would be almost glad to give away—than you can afford to work for half a day's pay. We make no such foolish professions; but promise to give you the best value for your money that can be offered by any one who pays a fair price for the labor of manufacture and seeks only a fair profit.

FOURTH--
Don't take it for granted that all clothes fit alike. They don't. A famous London tailor said "he could take a meal sack and make a Suit worthy of a gentleman's wear." He meant that it would fit so well that the quality of the material would escape notice. And there is a good deal in the way a Suit fits, not only in appearance, but also in the wear. If we were to extol our garments half as highly as many of them do, you buyers would think we were blowing. Call and inspect them once, and you'll think they are up to the average of custom work.

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC RAILWAY
By reason of its central position and close relation to all principal lines East and West, at initial and terminal points, constitutes the most important mid-continental link in that system of through transportation which invites and facilitates travel and traffic between cities of the Atlantic and Pacific Coasts. It is also the favorite and best route to and from points East, Northeast and Southeast, and corresponding points West, Northwest and Southwest.
The Rock Island system includes in its main line and branches, Chicago, Joliet, Ottawa, La Salle, Peoria, Geneseo, Moline and Rock Island, in Illinois; Davenport, Muscatine, Washington, Fairfield, Ottumwa, Oskaloosa, West Liberty, Iowa City, Des Moines, Indianola, Winterset, Atlantic, Knoxville, Audubon, Harlan, Guthrie Centre and Council Bluffs, in Iowa; Gallatin, Trenton, Cameron and Kansas City, in Missouri; Leavenworth and Atchison, in Kansas; Albert Lea, Minneapolis and St. Paul, in Minnesota; Watertown in Dakota, and hundreds of intermediate cities, towns, villages and stations.
THE GREAT ROCK ISLAND ROUTE
Guarantees its patrons that sense of personal security afforded by a solid, thoroughly ballasted road-bed; smooth tracks of continuous steel rail; substantially built culverts and bridges; rolling stock as near perfection as human skill can make it; the safety appliances of patent buffers, platforms and air-brakes; and that exacting discipline which governs the practical operation of all its trains. Other specialties of this route are Transfers at all connecting points in Union Depots, and the unsurpassed comforts and luxuries of its Passenger Equipment.
The Fast Express Trains between Chicago and the Missouri River are composed of well ventilated, finely upholstered Day Coaches, Magnificent Pullman Palace Sleepers of the latest design, and sumptuous Dining Cars, in which elaborately cooked meals are leisurely eaten, "good Digestion waiting on Appetite, and Health on both." Between Chicago and Kansas City and Atchison, are also run the Celebrated Reclining Chair Cars.
THE FAMOUS ALBERT LEA ROUTE
Is the direct and favorite line between Chicago and Minneapolis and St. Paul, where connections are made in Union Depots for all points in the Territories and British Provinces. Over this route, Fast Express Trains are run to the watering places, summer resorts, picturesque localities, and hunting and fishing grounds of Iowa and Minnesota. It is also the most desirable route to the rich wheat fields and pastoral lands of interior Dakota.
Still another DIRECT LINE, via Seneca and Kankakee, has been opened between Newport News, Richmond, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, and Lafayette and Council Bluffs, Kansas City, Minneapolis and St. Paul and intermediate points.

An Efficient Remedy
In all cases of Bronchial and Pulmonary Affections is AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL. As such it is recognized and prescribed by the medical profession, and in many thousands of families, for the past forty years, it has been regarded as an invaluable household remedy. It is a preparation that only requires to be taken in very small quantities, and a few doses of it administered in the early stages of a cold or cough will effect a speedy cure, and may, very possibly, save life. There is no doubt whatever that
Ayer's Cherry Pectoral
Has preserved the lives of great numbers of persons, by arresting the development of Laryngitis, Bronchitis, Pneumonia, and Pulmonary Consumption, and by the cure of those dangerous maladies. It should be kept ready for use in every family where there are children, as it is a medicine far superior to all others in the treatment of Croup, the alleviation of Whooping Cough, and the cure of Colds and Influenza, ailments peculiarly incidental to childhood and youth. Promptitude in dealing with all diseases of this class is of the utmost importance. The loss of a single day may, in many cases, entail fatal consequences. Do not waste precious time in experimenting with medicines of doubtful efficacy, while the malady is constantly gaining a deeper hold, but take at once the speediest and most certain to cure,

EDITORS AND PROPRIETORS.

COMMERCE.

From the earliest days of civilization Commerce has been a wealth producing agent. When the flag of American commercial prosperity floated over the seas, the whole people of these United States and every industrial pursuit derived activity and profit therefrom.

Then, within all harbors of the globe, our star spangled emblem could be seen proudly waving from the mast heads of the finest merchant vessels the billows of ocean ever kissed, and then, Commerce made nationality highly honorable and rewarded enterprise and labor with abundant gain.

Now, how changed?

What a humiliating fact presents itself?

Our country almost deprived of a mercantile marine.

A country teeming with the material for commercial greatness and export products virtually driven from the highway of nations. Degraded from a leader to that of a subjugated vassal.

It is enough to make the blood of a true-hearted American boil with indignation.

Look at this picture officially drawn during the present month by the Consul of the United States at Cairo, Egypt.

Records kept at the mouth of the Suez Canal show that only three American vessels entered Port Said during the past year, and that only two other nations were as low in the scale, viz: Denmark, three, and Japan, two.

England heads the list with 2,730 vessels.

Then follows—	VESSELS.
France	293
Germany	175
Holland	130
Italy	109
Austria	71
Russia	31
Spain	26
Norway	25
Egypt	13
Turkey	10
Portugal	5
Sweden	4

Then again—

England sent through the Suez Canal 4,941,792 tons of freight, while the United States, once her grand commercial rival, the beggarly pittance of only 2,149 tons.

Who is responsible for such a disgraceful and impoverishing American record as that?

The fault exists somewhere.

Is it not time for the people to find out and apply a sovereign remedy?

MAKE HONESTY HONORABLE.

There is a factor in American politics which has evidently come to stay and staying to increase in might. It exists and will continue to wield a silent influence over the result of elections, often to the consternation of the shrewdest political calculators.

It is the Independent vote. The ballots of intelligent citizens who are determined to truthfully investigate the real character of each and every candidate for office, and to bestow suffrage only upon the best man, be his partisan name what it may.

Machine bosses and corrupt spoilsmen do not like that kind of voting.

Of course not.

It interferes with their peculiar trade and purposes.

Friends of honest government thoroughly believe in it, because, faithfully maintained, the sure result will be more pure and upright men in official and legislative positions, and fewer boodle jobbers.

It is a healthy reform.

It seeks to root out and destroy a deep-seated and wide-spread evil—political corruption.

The day was when caucus reigned supreme, and loyalty to "regular nominations" commanded undivided party support, even though the candidate was totally unworthy both as regards personal integrity and ability.

That day is happily drawing to a close.

The Independents, disgusted with political venality, are working a revolution in public sentiment.

A notable instance has just occurred. The State of Oregon has steadily recorded a Republican majority.

The Republicans put up a candidate for Governor of doubtful reputation, confidently relying upon party to elect him.

The Democrats nominated a much better man.

The Independents voted for the Democrat and his majority registered over 2,000.

Let the good work of reform go bravely on for the purification of the political atmosphere everywhere, and among all parties.

Make honesty honorable.

The Washington Post thinks the best thing Congress can do is to hurry through the appropriation bills and go home. We second that motion.

A gentleman in Alabama has a biscuit that was baked during the war. Whoever tries to eat it will doubtless be found asking where the nearest dentist resides.

* * *

A Mugwump is truthfully described to be—"A man who in politics does not subscribe to the doctrine that a man who belongs to a political party should always vote the 'regular' ticket. He is one who maintains his own sovereignty as above that of the caucus, so that when his party, for any reason, nominates an unfit candidate for office, he feels it to be not only his privilege but his duty to vote against him."

* * *

Bob Ingersoll struck a snag the other day. He was conversing with an old colored woman in Washington about religion, when the following dialogue ensued:

Ingersoll—"Do you really believe, Aunty, that people are made out of dust?"

Aunty—"Yes sah, the Bible says dey is, an' so I b'lieve it."

Ingersoll—"But what is done in wet weather, when there is nothing but mud?"

Aunty—"Den I s'pects dey make infidels an' sich truck."

Lord Randolph Churchill, one of the Tory leaders in England, in a bitter manifesto against the just and proper Irish Home Rule measure of Mr. Gladstone, recently used the following nonsensical language—"It is insanity, trafficking in treason, condoning crime, exalting disloyalty, abasing loyalty, and a monstrous mixture of imbecility, extravagance, and political hysterics." How Mr. Gladstone and Mr. Parnell must have laughed when they read that silly tirade. Lord Randolph ought to be sent forthwith to the mad dog cure of Doctor Pasteur in Paris, as his case is certainly alarming. He may bite himself.

1,400 Miles Away from Home.

LAKE GOGEBIC, Mich., June 19, '86.

MESSRS. EDITORS:—Thinking you had probably heard that three of the Fire Commissioners had absconded, I thought I would drop you a line and inform you of our whereabouts. We left New York Sunday, June 13th, on the Chicago express and arrived in that city the next evening, remained in Chicago until Tuesday evening when we took the Milwaukee, Lake Shore and Western Railroad and arrived at Lake Gogebic, Wednesday afternoon, June 16th; the last five miles of our journey was through a dense forest and over a corduroy road. The stage contained fourteen able-bodied men inside and often times acted as though it was tired and wanted to lie on its sides—it didn't seem to care which side—sometimes it would go nearly over on one side, then it would rally and go the other way, but as everything has an end so did our stage ride, and we weren't sorry. The genial manager, Col. May, received us with open arms and soon had us stowed away in cottage number four. After taking a view of the beautiful sixteen-mile lake and enjoying a good dinner we retired to our little beds for rest and sleep—which we enjoyed very much. By the advice of Senator L., we brought our winter flannels and thick winter clothes with us and we find them very comfortable, in fact, indispensable, up here 2,000 feet above sea level. I shall dread going back to the hot city, and then to think I can't have fresh trout every meal; we don't eat bass here, they're too common. Another thing I will mention and that is the water; Com'r. K., says the mineral water here is far superior for kidney trouble than the celebrated Bethesda of Waukesha, Wis. I will now close with a few remarks about fishing and results here: I consider that any man who has never caught a good-sized trout or black bass missed one of the greatest pleasures and one of the most healthful. No matter how dull and weary a man may feel, let him take a rod and fishing tackle and start for some lake—here if you like—get a guide and boat, go on the lake and put out about 100 feet of line, hook a three pound bass and then the fun commences; his blood begins to course rapidly through every vein and every nerve is awake as soon as he feels the strain on his rod and sees the fish make its first jump out of the water, then dive for the bottom, struggling and fighting every inch until you land him in the boat. What joy one has as he looks at the beauty and says to himself "he fought nobly and deserved a better fate." Frequent doses of the above will cure, in every instance, or no charge, any complaint. I took nineteen bass and trout yesterday and feel like a daisy to-day. I do not fish all day; I go out about eight o'clock and stay until noon, then rest until 3 p. m. and fish the rest of the day. The fishing here is what I consider good. The bass will average about two pounds. I caught one yesterday that weighed three pounds; there was one taken that went four pounds and two ounces. I saw one trout caught that weighed over two pounds. F. K., took three that weighed over three pounds. I should say there was enough fish caught here yesterday to supply the whole city of Plainfield; probably not less than five hundred pounds of bass and trout caught here yesterday. There is an abundance of game here—deer, bear, catamount, rabbits, hedgehogs by the millions, and some birds. We expect to stay here about a week longer and then return home.

Yours truly,
W. H. B.

The Muhlenberg Hospital's Prosperity.

At the annual meeting of the Board of Governors of Muhlenberg Hospital held May 31, 1886, at which officers for the ensuing year were elected as heretofore announced, reports of the treasurer, the medical staff, and the managing committee of the Board were presented, from which the following facts of general public interest appear.

At the close of the last Hospital year, in May, 1885, the Hospital was in debt to the amount of $681.32, and it is extremely gratifying to state that during the year just closed this debt has been extinguished, and after paying all current expenses, the Hospital begins its new year with a balance in bank of $327.58.

RECEIPTS.

The receipts during the year ending May 31, 1886, were as follows:

June 1, 1885
Cash on hand		$ 19 13
" From bills receivable		13 00
" From patients during the year	$1,501 47
Less bills receivable not collected	24 57	1,477 90
" From the Ladies Auxiliary Board the following sums:
For free bed for year ending February, 1886	142 00
From Madame Albert's entertainment	20 00
For free bed for year beginning May 1, 1886	40 00
From Girl's Fund of Board	10 00
From moneys realized from Fair	1,000 05
From annual subscriptions	27 00	[illegible]
" From Ladies' Society of Trinity Church for support of "Trinity Church Free Bed," two quarters		100 00
" From Hospital Sunday collections, as follows:
Grace (Episcopal) Church	71 70
Crescent-ave. Pres. Church	100 05
Park-ave. Baptist Church	13 50
Seventh Day Bap. Church	37 70
Congregational Church	22 85
First Baptist Church	20 00	265 55
From individual donations		38 45
Total receipts		$4,021 04

PAYMENTS.

The payments during the year were:

Debt—unpaid bills of previous year	$ 681 32
Loans repaid	25 00
For repairs	33 75
" Fuel	202 75
" Furniture	91 00
" Insurance	23 10
" Medicines	347 20
" Provisions	1,014 75
" Salaries and wages	959 30
" For Surgical Instruments	23 85
" Miscellaneous expenses	22 91	3,606 50
Leaving a balance of cash in bank		$427 54
The hospital also holds bills receivable to the amount of		23 57
		$451 10

Besides the expenditures by the Board of Governors shown by the above statement, the Ladies' Auxiliary Board has expended during the year for bedding, linen and kitchen utensils, $176.70, making the actual current expenses of the Hospital for the year, $3,166 88; and the Ladies' Board still retains for future use part of the moneys realized from the fair.

It may be stated in general terms that the current expenses for the year have been in round numbers		$3,000 00
While the receipts for paying patients have been		1,500 00
Leaving a deficit of		$1,500 00
Which has been met as follows:
By Ladies' Auxiliary Board	$285 00
" Trinity Church—on account free bed	100 00
" Church collections	315 00
" Individual donations	800 00	1,500 00

The $1,000 received from the fair may be said to have paid off the $700 debt with which the Hospital began the year, and left the amount now in bank, say $300.

If the Hospital is subjected to extra expenses during the coming year for painting, building, heating, etc., it is quite probable larger contributions from outside sources will be needed to meet the outlay, and it is hoped that the increased demand will be cheerfully met.

The number of indoor patients treated by the Hospital during the year was 70—males 25, females 45; and the number of clinical cases treated in addition was 21—males 8, females 13. Some patients were treated for long periods, and the average period of residence of patients in the Hospital was about three and one-half weeks.

The Hospital is doing an extremely useful and important work and needs the sympathy and active support of the community. Donations of money, provisions, vegetables, fruit, linen, and other articles are always acceptable, and it is hoped that among the numerous charities of Plainfield this will not be overlooked.

Join Saturday half-holiday movement.

Temperance.

An enthusiastic temperance meeting was held in the Millington church last Sunday evening, under the auspices of Howell Division, No. 97, Sons of Temperance. Addresses were made by Messrs. W. B. Ayers, S. Scribner, C. Jones and John H. Sayres. Quite a number signed the pledge. The choir furnished good music, and all expressed themselves as highly gratified with the meeting, and believe that good will result therefrom beyond what has already been manifested.

Netherwood Chapel.

Episcopal services were again rendered last Sunday morning in the Netherwood Union Chapel, conducted by the Rev. Clayton Eddy of New York. The attendance was large, many people from Plainfield being present—those especially who reside in the vicinity of Netherwood. The chancel was decorated with choice and beautiful flowers; a large cross of red roses and a large basket of variegated roses, rare and exquisite, were the principal pieces. They were from the garden of John J. H. Poillon, esq., of Putnam avenue and kindly donated by that gentleman. After the services the basket was presented, with the compliments of the Chapel, to the Hotel Netherwood, where Mr. Eddy was stopping. The services are to continue permanently. At present they are under the supervision and auspices of Grace church, but it is thought that a new parish will soon be established and a Rector installed. It is very probable that the Rev. Mr. Eddy will be solicited to become its regular minister. The residents of Netherwood and vicinity are taking a commendable interest in the praiseworthy enterprise. The seats are free and all are welcome.

DUNELLEN DOTTINGS.

Children's Day was religiously observed on Sunday last at the Presbyterian church and the display of flowers was creditable, the decorations being much admired.

The stone crushing machine is fairly at work and is supplying broken stone for the road leading from Dunellen to Plainfield, which is undergoing a process of macadamizing.

The Commissioners of the Borough are going to have all the shades trees trimmed on the sidewalks to a uniform height of eight feet. An improvement much needed for the comfort of pedestrians.

The public school closed its session on Thursday last and an entertainment was given by the scholars in the evening which was well attended and reflected great credit upon those taking part in the evening.

ABINGER.

NEW MARKET NOTES.

Charley Ward has introduced a new article for sale—"Newport Turkey."

The recent entertainment given by the scholars of our public school was a success, and reflects credit upon the pupils and the teachers.

Mr. Henry Dunham has sold his house and lot on Prospect avenue; also sixteen acres of land near Brower's farm. The price for the former, unknown; the latter, $1,200 consideration.

A public meeting was held on Saturday evening last for the purpose of deciding upon some plan for the celebration of the 4th of July. An adjournment was made for a week in order to see what support the movement would receive financially.

A surprise party was tendered to Miss Emma Nelson on Friday evening last in commemoration of the anniversary of her birth. A good supply of presents and refreshments were carried along, much to the enjoyment of the young people who attended.

During the holidays would it not be well for the trustees to improve the school house property? There is no well on the premises, necessitating the children troubling neighbors for water, which should not be; the fences are in a dilapidated condition; the blackboards out of order; and the stoves in a condition anything but creditable to a public institution.

BROAD BRIM.

WESTFIELD WISPS.

The public school closed to-day for its Summer vacation.

Charles B. Clark is receiving the congratulations of his friends. It's a bouncing boy.

One day last week a sharper succeeded in passing a forged check for a small amount upon one of our merchants.

Frederick Charles Miller and Mary Jane Fay were united in marriage by Justice Jacques, on Tuesday afternoon, at the Squire's office.

Mr. Aaron B. Clark has been confined to his house for the past week, he being seriously ill. He was taken with an acute attack of billous colic.

The Freeholders have decided to erect a wooden truss bridge over the ravine on side of first mountain, on the new street known as Ackerman avenue.

Mr. John J. Willis, of Fourth avenue, has raised some very fine strawberries the present season, some of them measuring 6½ inches in circumference.

Mr. Theodore S. Bird, of Greenpoint, has purchased two blocks of building lots, bounded by Broad, Downer and Cumberland streets, on which he intends erecting several dwelling houses.

Mr. Edward H. Anderson, residing at the corner of Central avenue and Quimby streets, has decided to move to California. He will sell his household effects at auction on next Wednesday afternoon.

The Board of Health met at the town rooms on Wednesday evening, June 16th. Considerable business of importance in regard to the keeping of our town in a good and healthy condition during the Summer was discussed.

Our town ought to have a lock-up. If it had had one on last Saturday evening, there is no doubt it would have had confined in it at least three individuals who were drunk upon our streets, and made night hideous with their loud and offensive remarks.

Overseer of Road District No. 3 has made a decided improvement on North avenue, in cutting the grass and weeds along the sidewalks and gutters. All of our overseers ought to do likewise. There is a State law making a penalty for not cutting briars and weeds in their respective road districts during the months of July and August of each year.

FOUR DON'TS.

A little girl when recently asked her name said it was "Minnie Don't." Her mother so frequently said "Don't" to her that she thought it was her name. Still, it's a good word in its way, and we want to call your attention to four things which please don't do.

FIRST--

Don't imagine when you want to purchase Clothing that it makes little difference where you buy. It makes a big difference, unless you are overrun with money. Prices are not the same everywhere. Almost any store has its $10, $12 or $15 Suit; but, the quality for the money—there is where the difference comes in. Why, we owe one-half of our success to comparisons made between our goods and others. It pays to shop. But, if you dislike shopping, why buy of us once, and we will have your custom as long as you need clothes.

SECOND--

Don't suppose that all that looks like wool is so. They have got the thing down so fine now that an expert can hardly tell the difference. Wool has got to grow on a sheep's back; and that's where the wool comes from of which our all-wool Suits are made. You may not be able to see the difference between ours and some others at the same price; but you'll find it out in the wear—and don't you forget it.

THIRD--

Don't believe, or buy any goods of, anybody who professes to sell at half cost. It can't be done. A merchant can no more sell you a Suit at less than cost—unless it's an old-style, shop-worn thing he would be almost glad to give away—than you can afford to work for half a day's pay. We make no such foolish professions; but promise to give you the best value for your money that can be offered by any one who pays a fair price for the labor of manufacture and seeks only a fair profit.

FOURTH--

Don't take it for granted that all clothes fit alike. They don't. A famous London tailor said "he could take a meal sack and make a suit worthy of a gentleman's wear." He meant that it would fit so well, that the quality of the material would escape notice. And there is a good deal in the way a Suit fits, not only in appearance, but also in the wear. If we were to extol our garments half as highly as many of them do, you buyers would think we were blowing. Call and inspect them once, and you'll think they are up to the average of custom work.

COSTIVENESS

affects seriously all the digestive and assimilative organs, including the Kidneys. When these organs are so affected, they fail to extract from the blood the uric acid, which, carried through the circulation, causes Rheumatism and Neuralgia.

The functions of the Liver are also affected by costiveness, causing Bilious Disorders.

Among the warning symptoms of Biliousness are Nausea, Dizziness, Headache, Weakness, Fever, Dimness of Vision, Yellowness of Skin, Pains in the Side, Back and Shoulders, Foul Mouth, Furred Tongue, Irregularity in the action of the Bowels, Vomiting, etc.

The Stomach suffers when the bowels are constipated, and Indigestion or

Dyspepsia,

follows. Fetid Breath, Gastric Pains, Headache, Acidity of the Stomach, Waterbrash, Nervousness, and Depression, are all evidences of the presence of this distressing malady. A Sure Relief for irregularities of the Stomach and all consequent diseases, will be found in the use of

AYER'S PILLS.

They stimulate the stomach, free the bowels, healthfully invigorate the torpid liver and kidneys, and by their cleansing, healing and tonic properties, strengthen and purify the whole system, and restore it to a salutary and normal condition.

THE Sewaren House, at Sewaren Beach is again open for the Summer season. The accommodations at the hotel are perfect and at this well known fishing ground, one of the best in the State, everything necessary in the way of boats and bait can always be procured. Plenty of stable room for those driving over for the day is offered, and bathing suits are for hire.

THERE was a "Musical Morning" at the assembly room of the High School, last Friday at nine o'clock, attended by a few of the parents and friends of the scholars. A number of enjoyable songs were sung by all the classes under the leadership of Prof. F. G. Miller, and the High School Choir rendered some selections in a manner that showed great advancement. Miss Dewey wrote her regrets at being unable to be present and oblige the school with a piano solo, but the regrets of those present were partly forgotten under the influence of Miss Alice Holmes' perfect soprano voice that was heard instead.

Twelve Young Men Admitted.

That mythological individual they call the "Rum Fiend," takes no rest in the Summer, but the Young Woman's Christian Temperance Union does. At the last meeting of this admirable organization, held Monday afternoon, an adjournment was taken until the third Monday in September. One of the satisfactory reports of the occasion was the statement that twelve young men had become honorary members of the Union by their signing of the pledge during the evening of the late reception.

Trim the Trees Now.

June is the very best time in the year to trim all sorts of ornamental, deciduous trees and fruit trees. Trimmed now, one can see just what needs to be cut out (always cut close to trunk or limb). All wounds grow over at once and rarely will suckers start, as when trimmed in spring. Some people take great pride in seeing trees planted and kept in shape. A little attention to this matter would make our city more beautiful, attractive and healthful, and permit our light so to shine that other cities will envy us.

Notice!

Several complaints have within the past few days been made of violations of the ordinance of the Borough of North Plainfield, by boys and others bathing at Stine's bridge and Clinton avenue bridge. The Marshals have received instructions to arrest all persons found bathing at either of the above places. On Sunday last Marshals Weaver and Becker found several persons bathing and notified them to desist. Anyone hereafter caught bathing in either of the above places or any other public and exposed place in the Borough, will be arrested forthwith.

By order,
COM ON LICENSES AND MARSHALS.

The Cygnet.

The amateur dramatic combination, that recently performed at Music Hall with so much success financially and otherwise, and to the benefit of the Church of the Heavenly Rest at Evona, and the agreeable surprise of the audience from everywhere, has formed itself into a club under the title of "The Cygnet." The members will shortly begin the rehearsals of "The Midnight Watch" (no relation to "Grandfather's Clock") which is to be played for the benefit of the Children's Home. The officers of the organization are: President, F. S. Green; Vice President, Miss Maud A. Bowers; Secretary, P. B. McIntyre; Treasurer, J. M. Whitfield, Jr.; Stage Manager, D. E. Anthony.

Council Meeting.

At the adjourned meeting of the Common Council, Monday evening, there were present Messrs. Bowers, Goddard, Cuthbert, Dunham, Dumont, Gallup, Simpson and Voorhees. Absent—Messrs. [illegible] Cox, Marsh. Mr. Dumont was chosen President pro tem. Mr. Bird's petition to remove stable, was referred, as was Mr. Benner's request to erect frame building on Front near Church street, and Mr. Southwell's petition of the same nature. A request for the widening of cross-walks on East Broadway, was received and referred and petition from Messrs. Rheume & Co., for permission to cover their lumber-shed roof with iron shingles, was granted. The residents of LaGrande avenue, asked to have that roadway spread with crushed stone at the joint expense of the city and the petitioners. Licenses were granted Calahan & Co., and J. S. Hubbard as pedlers. The Street Committee, reported in favor of cross walks over Sycamore at Fourth and at Fifth streets when property owners lay flag sidewalks thereto. The application of Mr. S. V. Woodruff, for a license to sell liquor at the Hotel Netherwood, was granted by the affirmative votes of Messrs. Bowers, Dumont, Gallup, Goddard, Simpson and Voorhees. The Aud. Com. reported as correct claims of G. M. Angleman, $315.50; J. T. Vail, $42 84; M. Undal, $165, for which warrants were ordered drawn. The Council then adjourned.

The Plainfield Y's.

During Thursday evening of last week, the members of the Young Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Plainfield, gave their first reception. Through the generosity of Mr. O. T. Waring, whose daughter is the Treasurer of the Y's, Union Club house was rented for the occasion and packed with the invited guests. The interior decorations consisted of the scores of lovely maidens clothed in summer goods and sweet smiles without bias, and two or three fresh and gentle swells from the ocean of society. A very attractive programme had been prepared, but before its beginning the audience seated on the camp stools borrowed from the undertakers to supply the demand, had almost grown too tired and heated to enjoy anything. The general excellence, however, of the artists, repaid all waiting. Miss Gavett opened the entertainment with an instrumental solo that deserved a better tuned instrument than the metallic-toned piano used. This was followed after another long wait, with a part song by Messrs. Swany, Green, Treasure and Tyler, composing the "Benedict Quartette." Their listeners had been expecting them for so long, and seemed so glad to see them when they did arrive, that the welcome was flattering, and the Quartette sang again. There was hardly a really good individual voice among the four, unless Mr. Treasure be excepted, but their singing together was generally satisfactory, and especially so in "A Father's Lullaby," by Wiske. Miss Alice Holmes sang with them Reichardt's "Image of the Rose," with charming effect. She achieved the success of the evening, and the encore that followed was probably the only sincere recall of the occasion. Mr. Louis Belcher, of the First Presbyterian church of Brooklyn, sang the tenor solos, Raff's "Serenade," and Sullivan's "Sweethearts." He pleased the audience, and was accorded an encore as a reward. Mr. Carl Feininger's violin solos were all received with enthusiasm as usual, and nothing in addition to what we have already said a hundred times in admiration of the talent and ability of this gentleman, need be added.

Miss Burnett, the President of the Union spoke a few words of introduction at the opening of the programme, and Miss Mary F. Lathrop, of Philadelphia, delivered the address of the occasion. She proved herself a very fluent and interesting talker, and although some of her illustrations were of the "terrible example" kind that never gained a convert yet, still the audience were quite delighted. Refreshments and social intercourse followed the conclusion of the programme, together with additional music in the open air by the Quartette. The pledge was not unpleasantly thrust at the young gentlemen present by the members, but the kind welcome accorded by the hosts will undoubtedly result in the securing of many a signer from among those who were fortunate in being guests. As the use of wine sauces, and even the drinking of cider, is permitted by the Y's, their numbers should increase rapidly.

Oh, trim the trees!

Closing of the Public Schools.

Yesterday morning, with the usual and appropriate exercises, including a most delightful address by the Principal, Miss Bulkley, the public schools of the city were closed until Monday, the sixth of September. One of the pleasing features of the ceremonies, was the presentation by Miss Bulkley of a number of unexpected rewards for well doing. These consisted of handsome volumes, including Edward Everitt Hale's revision of "The Age of Fable," and his "How to do It," which tells of the associations of young people that "look up and not down," "look forward and not backward," "look out and not in" and "lend a hand." Also a volume of Greek Mythology, Lowell's "My Study Window," and T. A. Dodge's, of the U. S. A., "Bird's Eye View of our Civil War." Miss Mabel Gillies was rewarded for her composition on Minerals, of which a cabinet of specimens has just been presented the school, as we mentioned last week. Miss Evelina Van Court and Mr. Charles C. Hurlbut were honorably mentioned for their work of the same nature. The other rewards were shared by Mr. Edward Perrine for his beautiful collection of natural specimens of leaves, arranged with appropriate quotations from the poets in relation to each; and Mr. T. O. Doane, Jr., for "his faithfulness in little things in the service of the public." Miss Emma Adams received deserved recognition for her collection of leaves from all over the World.

Water Works in North Plainfield.

The Mayor and Council of the Borough of North Plainfield are taking more interest in matters of advancement than in this city. The several propositions presented the Council on this side of the brook have been referred to the proper committee where they remain in quietude; but in North Plainfield a special meeting was held last Thursday evening and entirely devoted to the consideration of the offers made by the different companies that petition for a franchise to furnish a supply of pure and wholesome water for domestic and other public uses, and the extinguishment of fires. An ordinance was presented for adoption that had been drawn up by Messrs. Samuel R. Bullock & Co., and from it can be quoted enough to show what privileges they propose to accord in consideration of securing the exclusive right for the period of ten years of maintaining and operating the system:

"There shall be sixty frost-proof hydrants of standard pattern with double nozzles at least two and one half inches in diameter with standard thread so as to allow the hose now in use by the Fire Department to be attached thereto."

"There shall be a sufficient number of gates or valves provided so as to allow a portion of the system to be isolated in case of accident, repairs or extensions without affecting the supply from the remainder thereof."

"There shall be two pumps with a capacity each of pumping 1,000 000 gallons every twenty-four hours."

"The sources of supply shall be artesian wells located at such points as will afford an abundant supply of pure and wholesome water which shall be delivered therefrom into an impounding reservoir of standpipe to be placed at such an altitude, and to be of such height as will insure a static head of at least seventy-five pounds per square inch on the distributing mains."

"The company shall erect at their own cost and expense and present to the Borough of North Plainfield, two public drinking fountains with openings for man and beast, and one ornamental fountain, provided, however, that no water shall be carried therefrom in vessels."

"The Borough shall be entitled to the use of the aforesaid hydrants for the period of two years, free of any charge whatever."

"The Borough shall be entitled to the use of the hydrants at the expiration of the two years, and during the remainder of the time of the ordinance, or the full term that any extension is in force, at the rental of one thousand seven hundred and fifty dollars—being at the rate of twenty-nine dollars and seventeen cents for each hydrant. The rental of all hydrants in excess of the said sixty hydrants, thereafter erected, shall be at the rate of twenty-eight dollars and fifty cents. Water shall be used from the said hydrants for the extinguishment of fires, necessary fire practice, and the flushing of such sewers as may hereafter be constructed, provided that for fire practice and flushing sewers no more than two hydrants shall be opened at one time and not more than once in each week.

"Water shall be furnished free of charge to all the churches, public schools, engine houses and other public buildings which now or may hereafter be erected in the said Borough. Water shall be furnished to private consumers at the rate of seven dollars annually for the first faucet, and two dollars for each additional faucet."

"Upon the completion of the said system the company shall thereupon submit the works to the following test: Five streams shall be thrown from any five hydrants that the Chief Engineer shall select, through fifty feet of two and one half inch hose, with a one and one quarter inch nozzle, to an average height of seventy-five feet."

"At the expiration of the ten years after this ordinance takes effect, the Mayor and Council shall have the right and privilege to purchase the said system of Water Works, provided they notify the Company of their intention so to do at least one year before the expiration of the said period of ten years. A failure to give notice of intention to purchase shall operate as an extension of the rights and privileges granted for a further term of ten years."

The proposition of Norman & Co., gave the Borough the free use of fifty hydrants for three years, with the price of each thereafter, $50. They would lay six miles of mains, four feet below the surface. The hydrants to have a force sufficient to throw a stream of water 108 feet through an inch and one-eighth nozzle.

Mr. Loew's proposition was also similar. He offered to furnish fifty hydrants free for three years, the price thereafter to be $40 each per year. He would furnish eight places for the procuring without charge of water for the purpose of sprinkling the streets.

The Council adjourned without action until its next regular meeting.

The School Commencements.

The commencement season has begun again in Plainfield, or the beginning season has commenced, and the sweet girl graduates have divided their time in the consideration of what they shall wear, and what they shall say regarding the subjects of their respective essays—while the stout boys were able to give their entire attention to the latter and least of graduation exercises. This (Thursday) evening, as our presses are running off this edition of THE CONSTITUTIONALIST, Music Hall, this city, and the Warren Mission chapel, North Plainfield, are packed with the relatives and friends of those to be graduated from the High Schools of both this and the other side of the Brook, respectively. There is, of course, nothing new in such exercises, but we give both programmes in full, in addition to which will be the music of the Seventh Regiment band at Music Hall, and quantities of flowers offered to genius and beauty at both places.

The Plainfield High School turns out, this year, one of the greatest of its classes, both in quality and quantity. Its motto for the future will be "Effort, if not Success," but its achievements during its past existence have evidenced the attainment of the latter fact as a result of the former which may be but a fancy. One desirable gain the Class of '86 can be proud of, is the number of young men that has clung to it to the last. Six of the list of graduates are of the sex that makes merchants, professional men and drummers, while the other five can make the first submissive if they have learned to make themselves attractive. If the young women can make good bread, dress with taste, dance moderately well in moderation, and make their homes happy, they will not need the logic they have learned to understand why other women that have not the graces we enumerate find their lives failures and themselves incapable of filling the place in this World intended for their sex.

The following are the graduates and the subjects they will more or less treat us with, and treat of more or less originally:

Bread and Butter	Flora R. Petrie.
Musicians of the Nineteenth Century	Laura E. Runyon.
John B. Gough	Fred. T. Cutbbert.
Galaxies	Frank T. Clawson.
Standard Authors	M. Louisa Karner.
Raphael Sanzio	Frank E. Newman.
Hugh Miller	Theo. J. Gillies, Jr.
Fairies	Emma L. Adams.
"In Corpore Sano"	Herbert W. Peck.
The Harold of History and Fiction	Tiemann N. Horn.
Words, the Fortresses of Thought—With Valedictory	Edith R. Leonard.

Col. Mason W. Tyler of the Board of Education will deliver the address, preceding which the fortunate contestants for the year's prizes will be announced as follows:

Penmanship, offered by Mr. J. W. Murray. First Prize—Bryant's Library of Poetry and Song, to Miss Kittie C. Case; Second Prize—Gold pen and holder, to Miss Helen T. French. Honorable Mention—Frank Martin, Sarah C. Sharp, Alice Quinn, Louise B. Runyon, Frances Freed, Arthur Boone, Daniel Gilbert, Lizzie Bird, Arsene Gilbert, Anna Boone, Lloyd Perkins.

Mathematics, offered by Mrs. C. H. Stillman. First Prize—$15 in gold, to Tiemann N. Horn; Second Prize—$10 in gold, to Theo. J. Gillies, Jr.

U. S. History, offered by Mr. J. W. Murray. Personal Memoirs of Gen. Grant, to Albert C. Phillips. Honorable Mention, Alva C. Woltmann, Edward J. Patterson, Arthur G. Beers.

English Composition, offered by Mr. J. Karner. First Prize—$15 in gold to Miss Edith R. Leonard. A Second Prize of $10 in gold was this year added by Mr. Karner, and the winner will be chosen by the Committee of Award from the following who are honorably mentioned—Fred E. Newman, W. B. Chamberlin, Edward T. Perrine.

Spelling, offered by Mr. Mason W. Tyler. Webster's Dictionary to Albert C. Phillips. Honorable Mention, Nellie B. Crawford.

Botany, offered by Mrs. C. A. Butler. First Prize—$15 in gold to Miss Hazel E. Westervelt. Second Prize—$10 in gold to Miss M. Rose Lowrie.

Language (Latin), offered by Mr. Ernest R. Ackerman. First Prize—Ancient Classics, 9 vols, to Miss Emma L. Adams. Second Prize—Mommsen's History of Rome, 4 vols, to Miss Clara M. Burr. Miss Edith R. Leonard's excellent record in language deserves mention. Since she only pursued the classics preparatory to entering Smith College, she was not considered a competitor for the prize.

We give in full the Essay and Valedictory of Miss Leonard, who this year again secured the first prize for English Composition:

"WORDS THE FORTRESSES OF THOUGHT."

One who is at all familiar with the romance of Scott cannot fail to have a vivid idea of the fortress of the olden time. At the very sound of the word what a picture rises before him! Gloomy, sombre, repelling, cold, towers the old baronial castle which his fancy conjures up. Gloomy, sombre, repelling, cold—but have we not left out by far the most important characteristic of the stronghold? Gloom may be exchanged for cheer, darkness for light, repulsion for hearty welcome, cold for warmth, and still we have a fortress, though in a less familiar aspect. But take away strength and there is no fortress left. Dark or light, gloomy or bright, uninviting or hospitable, it must always be strong. But it is not always in power to withstand open attack that the fortress shows its capacity for protecting its inmates. Clever Dr. Rochecliffe was as well defended by the shrewdly contrived hiding places of Woodstock castle as many a one before him had been shielded by its thick walls. Many a castle, too, with the thickest of walls and nooks and corners enough to conceal a hundred Dr. Rochecliffe's has yet fallen a prey to the besieger. How many of those twelve hours could Berenger's stronghold have protected the Betrothed and her vassals, if the garrison itself had not accomplished some part of the defense? If before the sun reached the zenith the castle was not reduced to a heap of ashes over their heads, it certainly would not have been because the enemy lacked opportunity to make it one. The two indispensable characteristics of a fortress are, then, strength to repel attack and a garrison within to support and turn to advantage this strength, with the frequently added but not indispensable power of concealing its inmates. Now that great scholar and philosopher, Sir William Hamilton tells us that words are the fortresses of thought. A strange and rather striking expression is this. Shall we agree that it is a true one? Strength to repel outward attack, the support of a strong garrison within, faculty for concealing its inmates. Have our words such qualities as these? Perhaps the strength of these literary walls can best be shown by the way in which they defend an undesirable occupant. We can better appreciate the power of a thing when it brings about a result not to be desired than when a more desirable object is attained. Here standeth Father Time, good Knight and true, and demandeth of the fortress by name Crystal unconditional surrender of its garrison, thought. And no weak enemy is this same good Knight. The combats which he has been carrying on for ages have in no wise damped his ardor, but have rather renewed his youthful vigor. A more formidable antagonist it would be hard to find. We of the human race are accustomed to look upon him as a sort of lawless marauder, coming and taking possession where he has no right, leaving the impression of his fingers in those places where they are most objectionable, an evil not to be cured, and hence of necessity to be endured. If he proves resistless to us human beings, can a word of human invention defend its thought through all the ages in which it must combat with grim old Kronos? Ah! indeed it can! So carefully does it shield its delusive garrison that never a wayfarer can pass by without at once seeing and being led astray by its pernicious occupant. At least so it was for hundreds of years after the building of this fortress. "What is crystal?" says Augustine. "It is snow hardened for many years in ice, so that it cannot be easily dissolved by the sun or by fire." Even the great naturalist Pliny seems to have been of the same opinion for he says that crystal is found only in cold climates. And what was the cause of the laughable error into which even wise men fell? All the mischief was to be found in the one little Greek word [illegible] which meaning either crystal or ice was taken to mean both crystal and ice. For centuries Time battered at those walls without in the least impairing the strength of the garrison, and though the discoveries of science have long since removed the misleading influence which it was wont to exert upon the unwary traveler, yet nevertheless, old Kronos never has and probably never will destroy the garrison within. And this is but one among the hundreds and thousands of words whose thought remains intact after battling against the destroying hand of time through all these ages. While upholding the defending power of these fortresses, however, we must not entirely overlook the cases in which some few have proved recreant to their trust. For example, it has always been a matter of wonder what connection exists between sycophant and the Greek [illegible], which are undoubtedly derived from the same root. No philologist can tell with any degree of certainty. There is the fortress with its well-defined citadel apparently ready to defy a hundred sieges, but where is the garrison? Surrendered long ago, it must be, leaving that fine old pile a ruin in the hands of Time. But there was another characteristic of which we spoke at the outset. Not only strength of wall is needful, but support within. A word-fortress without its thought will no more withstand attack than a material fortress without its garrison. Old Father Time, if he chose to attack this, would find but feeble resistance. Such fortresses as these are the so-called slang expressions which creep up from time to time into our language, to flourish for a season; but when the garrison within them has died the natural death which all such accumulations of nonsense are doomed to die, they are soon reduced to ashes by Time's destroying finger. But how about this third characteristic of the word fortress, this power of concealing? "Words were given us to conceal thought", says the old adage; and indeed many of our most familiar expressions have within them such windings and turnings, unlooked-for crevices, and shadowy corners where the thought lies concealed, that although we may be very familiar with the outside of the castle, yet still its inside is as unknown to us as if it had never existed. For example who would imagine what a garrison the castle curfew contains? What a pleasant surprise it must have been to the philologist who first discovered its nature, when after patiently searching in the dusty corners, he at last found the fortress itself to be nothing but a condensed couvrefeu. When he once has that clue, the windings and turnings straighten out before him, and the thought which was in Duke William's mind when he commanded all Englishmen to cover their fires at the sound of the curfew-bell, stands revealed. Yes; he indeed said well who called words the fortresses of thought. But now comes the question what can words give us that we should devote our time to searching so eagerly for their garrisons? The advocate of phonetic spelling, who would level these strong-holds with the dust, boldly asserts that their present well-guarded condition but leads inquisitive antiquarians into temptation, and that the advantages gained by their researches are as nothing compared with the difficulty which every one of them meets in obtaining entrance to one of these castles. Shall we then with one blow overthrow all these fortresses which the men of past ages have reared with such skill that even the universal enemy, Time, has not been able to prevail against them? No! Rather let us blot out from history half its triumphs, let half the wisdom of the ancients be forgotten upon the earth than destroy that record of all the triumphs and all the wisdom that has ever come to mortal man, which is bound up in words, the fortresses of thought.

VALEDICTORY.

At the completion of any work the natural inclination always is to look back—to gather, if possible, an idea of what will be done in the future from what has been done in the past. And we can hardly be said to violate the precepts of Harry Wadsworth's motto in so doing, for in disobeying the second part of that rule we are but obeying the first better than we could otherwise do. True we do look back; but it is only that we may look forward with a greater and more far-seeing gaze, that we may learn in the language of the old Greek bard "[illegible]." We are saying farewell to-night not only to each other, to our teachers and school friends, but to our school; and in saying farewell what more fitting could we do than recall what our school has done for us and for itself in the sixteen years of its existence? It is more than a beginning now; and its future stands firmly fixed upon the solid foundation of its past. The greatness and serviceability of an institution of learning is often best shown by the lists of its alumni. Thus Harvard, Yale and Princeton take great pride in their catalogues and the long rolls of names with M. D., D. D., L. L. D. &c., attached to them, and the oftentimes greater names without such honorary titles. And in this respect Plainfield High School has certainly no small evidence of its capabilities as a means of training. Only sixteen years have elapsed since the first graduate started out in his life career, and the oldest of them all must be but a young man now, too young to be more than entering upon the life work which he has chosen for his own. Yet Plainfield High School has reason to be proud of even these beginnings. Among its alumni are many successful business men; and in the learned professions, physicians, clergymen, lawyers, teachers, and college professors. The great work of its alumnae, too, must not pass unmentioned. To the executive ability and conscientious, energetic labor of some of these does that world wide university, the Chautauqua Association, owe much of its business prosperity. And though they are no longer students, they have not forgotten their "alma mater". Within the last year indeed we have had substantial proof of that. The prizes in language, whose awarding is even now awaited with beating hearts by anxious competitors, are the gifts of one of Plainfield's graduates, who desired to give to others an incentive to study never offered to himself,—for it will be noted that these are the first rewards of the kind ever received in the school. Then, too, many of us were surprised and delighted when we entered the school building one Monday morning some weeks since, to find a tastfully assorted cabinet of minerals to aid us in our geological labors, the gift of another alumnus of the school. Again more heart-felt applause, perhaps, never made the old school-hall ring than was elicited by the friendly words and wise counsels of another post-graduate who told us what he knew of the "great natural bridge" which separates childhood from manhood and womanhood. He said that he was too young to teach us; but certainly none of us are likely to forget that lesson of Purpose which he gave. Again the reports which come from the American Institute of Mining Engineers, from the American Chemical Journal and from many another source, justify the recent proposal that one corner of the library shelves be set aside as the "Alumni Alcove," and devoted to the original work of the graduates. And so it is that Plainfield High School has a right to be proud of her foster children and of their affection and regard for her. But it is not only to her post graduates that she must look for benefits. Certainly she never received a more valuable gift than that which came to her through the exertions of her undergraduates. The large addition to her already good library has made it one of the most important features of the school. The long rows of history, fiction, poetry, science, biography, travel, and philology will afford information, amusement and an opportunity for thorough scholarly work. The new volumes have been especially welcome just at this juncture; for now our school seems to be at the beginning of a new epoch in its history. Its field of study is broadening and widening in liberal culture. Where last year English literature was taught in only the Senior division of the High School; to-day not one of the four classes is excluded from its share in the greatest and best writings of the greatest and best authors of England and America. And this is but one of the improvements which have come to its various departments. Perhaps one of the most interesting features of the new curriculum is the Normal Class established at the beginning of this term where graduates of the school after the course of training are enabled to become teachers. And again we may notice a great advance in the musical training of the various departments; and the increasing pleasure with which visitors attend the morning exercises in the chapel. Then, too, this year for the first time the preparatory course for entrance to college has been completed at graduation. Yes, our school is steadily advancing year by year, month by month. What it has become we know. What it will become remains to be seen. The seed planted sixteen years ago by the ever-busy hand of the great founder of N. J. public schools, Dr. Charles H. Stillman, (whose name and service should never be forgotten or pass unmentioned at this glad commencement season), that seed has developed into a stout and healthy young tree under the skillful management of wise heads and energetic hands. But though it is stout and hardy and though its branches are each year mounting higher and higher, yet still the promise of the full-grown tree that is to come is infinitely greater. If so great things have been achieved in the past sixteen years who can tell how much greater things will be accomplished in the next. It requires no very clear-sighted prophet to foresee how prosperous and serviceable to the community will be our school, and how it will go on steadily advancing from year to year under the wise guidance of those to whom it has been entrusted. Then let us conquer our natural inclination to make this last hour in which we can call ourselves her pupils, a sad one; rather let us rejoice in the bright out-look before her and before us, for we shall never be cast off so long as we prove worthy children of Plainfield High School.

NORTH PLAINFIELD.

The graduating class of the North Plainfield school is an honor to any city. The thirteen young women and the six young men whose names are given below, will take part with others in the programme which we also reproduce. It is to be regretted as much as it is needless, that the commencements of both schools should take place during the same evening, although such adjustment prevents any more crowding than is now the rule; but then there are very many that desire to attend both. Our neighbors of the Borough can congratulate themselves over the fact that only four instead of eleven "essays" will be thrust upon them, and that the four within the walls of Warren chapel can be heard. It will be seen that the programme is a most varied and a sure-to-be-enjoyable one. But the particularly pleasing portion of the evening's exercises is to be a surprise. The class is to present Miss Purdue, its beloved teacher, and Mr. Bose, the Principal, with handsome presents.

The following is to be the order of exercises:

UNWRITTEN MUSIC.

Love, happiness, pain and sorrow are all essential to the great, though apparently insignificant force—music. How wonderful in beauty, variety and influence is our instrumental music! yet what, when compared with Nature's, so grand in conception and perfect in harmony. We speak of it as unwritten, because we, as part of Nature's work, are able only to listen and enjoy, not to understand and reproduce the work of so great a musician as the composer of our "unwritten music." Gaze into the starry vault of the heavens. Contemplate the tireless movements of the grand heavenly bodies as they sweep on through trackless space, never deviating in all their course, and how natural seems Pythagoras' "music of the spheres." Test the music of the birds, the soft, trilling notes of the happy warblers, floating on the soft breezes, echoing in the distant woods, giving new life to the early morn, and softer shades to fading twilight. What more desirable even to the most desirous, than the sweet notes of these innocent birds of fairy-like development. Is there music in the ocean? Yes! wild, grand music of the surges ever in motion, of the waves tossed and lashed by bold and free tempest and rushing with a mighty roar upon the land, telling in their rich diapason of the power of the Lord, and how "He holdeth the seas in His hands." Listen to the stirring of the branches of the noble forest trees, the restless moving to and fro of the tall, dark pine and sturdy oak, when tossed and lashed by some mighty storm, and the soft whispering and rustling of the leaves when wooed by gentle vernal breezes. Go with me far away from the sighing shores of the restless ocean, from the land of gentle breezes, to the country land, to the rich meadows and hear the brook as it ripples through its unmade path, racing on, on to reach the distant ocean, anxious to become acquainted with more friends of laughing water; and the river as it darts past with its unconscious singing, gently bathes the fringed garments of the drooping willows. What is sweeter to a mother than the joyous voices of her happy children at play? and immortal that musician who can tune his harp to echo the tones of a loving parent's voice. But sweetest, richest and strongest of all our unwritten music, is that of a noble life inspired with a lofty purpose, which never wavers or is put aside for unreasonable longings. Every thought, word and action seems pure and true, and, free from all discord, the sweet harmony flows on, making "One grand sweet song."

A philosopher says "any one can get married." Then there is no excuse for old maids after all.

A base-ball reporter puts down more strikes than any military in this great and glorious country.

"Truth is mighty, but doesn't prevail here," is what a Philadelphia man has tacked above his gas meter.

An exclamation that came straight from the heart of a thorough Bohemian: "Ah! if I only had all the money I owe, how rich I should be!"

A somewhat weather-beaten tramp, being asked what was the matter with his coat, replied: "Insomnia; it hasn't had a nap in ten years."

It has just transpired that Washington belonged to a fire company in Alexandria. Fancy the immortal G. W. in a red shirt and fireman's hat running to a fire!

Where'er he goes the people bow,
And doff their hats with reverent sign,
And ladies say: "Just see him now—
The famous pitcher of our nine!"

"Give us, O give us a man who sings at his work," says Carlyle. Oh, yes; give him to us; deliver him into our hands. He occupies the next office, and we can't get at him.

There are 3,000 teachers of elocution in this country, and yet there is not one man in ten who can make a graceful reply when a lady calls his attention to his foot which has ripped off two breadths of her dress.

"How many times should a Christian allow himself to be called a liar without resenting the insult?" asks an inquirer in a religious journal. We cannot answer this unless we know which is the smaller man.

Conspicuously displayed upon the front of a store in this city, kept by a couple of good-looking marriageable young ladies, is a sign bearing the encouraging words: "No offer refused."

A Hartford editor says that stuffed shark is good eating. As raw sailor is the usual stuffing found in sharks, the majority of the people will, perhaps, not regard the Connecticut editor's taste with any marked degree of admiration.

We breathe easier. The rumor that the "Sweet Bye and Bye" was written while the author was drunk proves to be false. It was merely written on the expectation of getting money enough to get drunk on. Quite a difference, as will be seen.

There is a young lady in Keokuk, Iowa, who is six feet four inches tall, and she is engaged to be married. The man who won her did it in these words: "Thy beauty sets my soul aglow—I'd wed thee right or wrong; man wants but little here below, but wants that little—long."

BILIOUSNESS.

Biliious symptoms invariably arise from indigestion, such as furred tongue, vomiting of bile, giddiness, sick headache, irregular bowels. The liver secretes the bile and acts like a filter or sieve, to cleanse impurities of the blood. By irregularity in its action or suspensions of its functions, the bile is liable to overflow into the blood, causing jaundice, sallow complexion, yellow eyes, bilious diarrhœa, a languid, weary feeling and many other distressing symptoms. Biliousness may be properly termed an affection of the liver, and can be thoroughly cured by the grand regulator of the liver and biliary organs, BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS. It acts upon the stomach, bowels and liver, making healthy bile and pure blood, and opens the culverts and sluiceways for the outlet of disease. Sold everywhere and guaranteed to cure.
